Overyssel, a province of the Netherlands, bounded on the N. by Friesland and Groningen, E. by Hanover and Westphalia, S. by Guelderland, and W. by the Zuyder Zee. It is nearly equal in extent to the whole of N. and S. Holland, and contains many morasses. Its greatest riches consist in turf, which is dug up here, and sent to the neighbouring provinces: the other exports are cattle, butter, cheese, hides, tallow, wool, and linen. Zwolle is the capital.

Ovid, p.t. Seneca Co. N. Y. between Seneca and Cayuga Lakes. Pop. 2,756.

Ouisconsin, a river of Michigan or N. W. Territory, rising between Lakes Michigan and Superior and falling into the Mississippi at Prairie du Chien. It is 350 m. in length.

Ovidopol, a town and fort of Russia, in the government of Catherineuslaf. It had its name from a curious antique tomb, supposed to be that of the poet Ovid, discovered in 1795. It is seated at the mouth of the Dniester, 60 m. S. W. of Oczakow. Long. 30. 22. E., lat. 46. 10. N.

Oviedo, a town of Spain, capital of Asturias d'Oviedo, and a bishop's see, with a university. Near it are the hot springs of Rivera de Abajo, which bear some resemblance to those of Bath. It is seated at the conflux of the Ove and Deva, which form the Asta, 55 m. N. N. W. of Leon. Long. 5. 53. W., lat. 43. 20. N.

Owasco, p.t. Cayuga Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,350.

Owego, p.t. Broome Co. N. Y. 30 m. S. E. Utica.

Owen, a county of Kentucky. Pop. 5,792. Owenton is the capital; a county of Indiana. Pop. 4,060. Spencer is the capital.

Owenton, p.t. Owen Co. Ken., 20 m. N. E. Frankfort. Pop. 143.

Owecarville, p.v. Gibson Co. Ind., 190 m. S. W. Indianapolis.

Owingsville, p.v. Bath Co. Ken., 70 m. E. Frankfort.

Owyhee, or Hawaii, the largest and most eastern of the Sandwich Islands, in the Pacific Ocean. Its length from N. to S. is 84 m. and its breadth 70. It is divided into 6 districts, 2 of which, on the N. E. side, are separated by a mountain, which rises in three peaks, the summits of which are 18,000 feet above the level of the sea; they are perpetually covered with snow, and may be seen at 40 leagues distance. To the N. of this mountain the coast consists of high and abrupt cliffs, down which fall many beautiful cascades; and the whole country is covered with cocoa-nut and bread-fruit trees. To the S. the ground is covered with cinders, and in many places has black streaks, which seem to mark the course of a lava that has flowed from the mountain to the shore. The southern promontory looks like the mere dregs of a volcano. The projecting headland is composed of broken and craggy rocks piled irregularly on one another, and terminating sharp points; yet amid these ruins, are many patches of rich soil, carefully laid out in plantations. The fields are enclosed by stone fences, and are interspersed with groves of cocoa-nut trees. Here Captain Cook, in 1779, fell a victim to a sudden resentment of the natives, with whom he unfortunately had a dispute. The inhabitants, formerly devoted to the most degrading superstition, have within a few years wholly renounced idolatry, and some American missionaries are settled amongst them. They are said to be naturally mild, friendly, and hospitable to strangers. The king and chiefs ceded this island to Great Britain in 1794. Long. 156. 0. W., lat. 19. 28. N.

Orbone, p.v. Jefferson Co. N. Y. 180 m. N. W. Albany.

Oxford, the capital of Oxfordshire, Eng. and a bishop's see. It is seated at the conflux of the Cherwell with the Thames, and has a canal to Braunston, in Northamptonshire. The city, with the suburbs, is of a circular form, 3 m. in circumference, and was anciently surrounded by walls, of which some remains are yet to be seen; as also of its extensive castle, the tower of which now serves for a county gaol. It has, besides the cathedral, 13 parish churches, a number of dissenting chapels, a famous university, a noble market-place, and a magnificent bridge. The university is generally supposed to have been a seminary for learning before the time of Alfred, although it owed its revival and consequence to his liberal patronage. Here are 20 colleges and four halls, several of which stand in the streets, and give the city an air of magnificence. The colleges are provided with sufficient revenues for the maintenance of a master, fellow, and students. In the halls the students live, either wholly, or in part, at their own expense. The colleges are, University, Baliol, Merton, Exeter, Oriel, Queen's, New, Lincoln, All Souls, Magdalen, Brazen Nose, Corpus Christi, Christ Church, Trinity, St. John Baptist, Jesus, Wadham, Pembroke, Worcester, and Hertford. Of these, the most ancient is University College, founded before the year 872; and to Christ Church College, begun by cardinal Wolsey and finished by Henry VIII., belongs the cathedral. The halls are Alban, Edmund, New Inn, and St. Mary Magdalen. Among the libraries in the university, the most distinguished is the Bodleian (founded by Sir Thomas Bodley), those of All Soul's College, Christ Church, Queen's, New, St. John, Exeter, and Corpus Christi.

Among other public buildings are the theatre, the Ashmolean museum, the Clarendon printing-house, the Radcliffe infirmary, and an observatory. Magdalen bridge, besides the beauty of its architecture, has this singularity, that more than half of it is on dry ground, and the rest covers two small stripes of the Cherwell; this bridge is 526 feet long. At Oxford, king John, compelled by his barons, summoned a parliament to meet in 1258, the proceedings of which were so disorderly that it was afterwards known by the name of the Mad Parliament. Charles I. assembled a parliament here in 1625, in consequence of the plague then raging in London; and in 1644 he summoned such of the members of both houses as were devoted to his interests: these were seceders from the parliament then sitting at Westminster. This city was distinguished for its attachment to that unfortunate king, who here held his court during the whole civil war. Without the town are many ruins of the fortifications erected in that war. Oxford is governed by a mayor, dependent on the chancellor and vice-chancellor of the university, and sends four members to parliament, two for the university and two for the city. 50 m. S. by E. of Coventry and 55 W. N. W. of London. Long. 1. 15. W., lat. 51. 46. N.

by Buckinghamshire, W. by Gloucestershire, S. by Berkshire, and N. by Warwickshire and Northamptonshire. The extreme length is 48 m. and breadth 38, but its form is very irregular. It contains 450,000 acres, is divided into 14 hundreds and 207 parishes, has one city and 12 market towns and sends nine members to parliament. The soil though various, is fertile in corn and grass. The S. part, especially on the borders of Buckinghamshire, is hilly and woody, having a continuation of the Chiltern hills running through it. The N. W. part is also elevated and stony. The middle is, in general, a rich country, watered by numerous streams running from N. to S., and terminating in the Thames. Of these the most considerable are the Windrush, Evenlode, Cherwell, and Tame; and the last, although an inconsiderable rivulet, has obtained some importance from having been supposed to give name to the Thames. The products of Oxfordshire are chiefly those common to the Midland farming counties; and a great improvement has taken place of late years in the agricultural system. Its hills yield ochre, pipe-clay, and other earths, useful for various purposes. Corn and malt are conveyed from it by the Thames to the metropolis; and the Oxford Canal affords a direct water communication with Liverpool, Manchester, and the Wednesbury collieries, as well as with London and Bristol.

Oxford, a county of Maine. Pop. 35,217. Paris is the capital. Also a county of Upper Canada on the Thames and Grand rivers.

Oxford, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 55 m. S. W. Boston. Pop. 2,034; p.v. Penobscot Co. Me.; p.t. New Haven Co. Conn. 12 m. N. W. New Haven. Pop. 1,762; p.t. Chenango Co. N. Y. 110 m. W. Albany. Pop. 2,947. Also towns and villages in Sussex Co. N. J., Philad., Chester and Adams Cos. Pa. Caroline Co. Va., Granville Co. N. C., Tuscarawas, Coshocton and Guernsey Cos. Ohio.

Oxford, p.t. Talbot Co. Maryland. 50 m. S. E. Baltimore. It is a port of entry, and one of the largest commercial towns in the eastern part of the state.

Oxford, p.t. Butler Co. Ohio. Pop. 2,900. The whole township belongs to the Miami University, established here. This institution was founded in 1824. It has 11 instructors and 82 students. The libraries have 2,200 volumes.

Oye, a town of France, department of the straits of Calais, 7 m. N. E. of Calais.

Oyonaz, a town of France in the department of Ain, 8 m. N. of Nantua.

Oyster Bay, p.t. Queens Co. N. Y. on Long Island. Pop. 5,193.

Oyster Ponds, p.v. Suffolk Co. N. Y. on Long Island.

Ozama, a river of Hispaniola, formed by the confluence of two streams which unite about a league above St Domingo. In rainy seasons it is of considerable size, and is very convenient for bringing down the produce from the interior. It runs into the sea below St. Domingo.

Ozark Mountains, a range extending from the central parts of the state of Missouri south-westerly toward the Mexican territories. It is crossed by the Arkansas and Red rivers. The northern part is most elevated; but little is known of any part of these mountains.

Oziewicz, a town of Poland, covered on one side by a great morass, and on the other defended by a castle, whose walls are of wood. It is situate on the Weitschel, 34 m. W of Cracow Long. 19 10 E., lat. 50. 10. N

PACAJES, a town of Buenos Ayres, capital of a province of its name, with a great trade in cattle. 80 m. S. W. of La Paz.

Pacem, a town in the N. part of Sumatra, capital of a kingdom of the same name, 120 m. S. E. of Acheen. Long. 97. 15. E., lat. 4. 0. N.

Pachamac, or Pachacama, a town of Peru, in the province of Cercade, situate in a valley of its name, formerly beautified with a magnificent temple, built by the incas, in which the Spaniards, when they conquered Peru, found immense riches. It is 18 m. S. S. E. of Lima.

Pachete, a town and fort of Bengal, formerly the capital of a district of its name, which is now included in the government of Burdwan. It stands near the Dummoada, 10 m. N. E. of Roganpouur.

Pachuca, a town of Mexico, noted for the rich silver mines in its vicinity, 56 m. N. by E. of Mexico. Long. 100. 41. W., lat. 20. 44. N.

Pacific Ocean, otherwise called the South Sea, lying between Asia and America. It is the largest ocean in the world, extending over more than one-third of its whole surface, and being upwards of 10,000 m. in breadth. When Magellan entered this ocean, through the dangerous strait that bears his name, he sailed three months and 20 days in a uniform direction to the N. W. without discovering land. In the distress he suffered in this voyage, before he discovered the Ladrone Islands he had the consolation of enjoying such calm and gentle weather, with fair winds, that he gave this ocean the name of Pacific. The Spaniards, on passing the isthmus of Darien from N. to S., at the first discovery of this ocean, named it the South Sea; but with respect to America, it is more properly the western ocean. On one side of the equator it is called the North, and on the other the South Pacific.

Packersville, p.v. Clearfield Co. Pa.

Pactolus, p.v. Sullivan Co. Ten.

Pacy, a town of France, department of Eure, on the Eure, 11 m. E. of Evreux.

Padang, a sea-port on the W. coast of Sumatra, in the possession of the Dutch. It was taken by the British in 1781, and again in 1794; but finally surrendered to the Dutch in 1814. In 1797 it was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake, and upwards of 300 lives were lost. Long. 99. 49. E., lat. 0. 50. S.

Paddington, a village in Middlesex, Eng. 1 m. W. by N. of London. From the number of buildings erected of late years it is now joined to the metropolis, but the parish still contains some beautiful rural spots and handsome seats. A canal passes hence to the Grand Junction Canal near Brentford.

Paddytown, p.v. Hampshire Co. Va.

Paderborn, an ancient principality of Westphalia, 40 m. long and 25 broad, remarkable for its bacon and venison. It now belongs to Prussia.

Paderborn, a fortified town of Prussian Westphalia, formerly capital of a principality of the same name. The rivulet Pader rises under the high altar of the cathedral, and in the collegiate church are the remains of St. Blase. The most remarkable of the convents is the college formerly belonging to the Jesuits, and here is also a celebrated university. It is 52 m. E. S. E. of Munster. Long. S. 55. E., lat. 51. 41. N.

Padron, a town of Spain, in Galicia, seated on the Ulla, 12 m. S. of Compostella.

Padstow, a town in Cornwall, Eng. with a convenient harbour, and some coasting trade. It is seated at the mouth of the Camel, on the Bristol Channel, 30 m. W. of Launceston and 243 W. by S. of London.

Padua, a province of Austrian Italy, in the government of Venice, 40 m. long and 35 broad, bounded by Rovigo, Verona, Vicenza, Treviso, and Venice. It is well watered, and one of the most fertile countries in Italy.

Padua, a fortified city of Italy, capital of the above province, and a bishop's see. It is 7 m. in circumference, but much less considerable than formerly; for great part of the area within the walls is unbuilt, and the town in general so thinly inhabited that grass grows in many of the streets. The houses are built with piazzas, which when the town was in a flourishing state, may have had a magnificent appearance; but they now rather give it a gloomy air. The cathedral is one of the richest in Italy: in the sacristy is a statue of the celebrated Petrarch, who was a canon of the church, and left to it a part of his library. The Franciscan church is dedicated to St. Antonio, the patron of the city, whose body is enclosed in a sarcophagus, under an altar in the middle of the chapel. Near this church is the school of St. Antonio, where many of the actions of the saint are painted in fresco, some of them by Titian. The church of St. Justina is remarkable for its rich Mosaic pavement. The hall of the town-house is one of the largest in Europe, and contains the cenotaph of Livy, who was a native of Padua. The university, once so celebrated, is now on the decline. Here are manufactures of cloth, silk, ribands, and leather, all on a small scale. Padua was taken by the French in 1796. It is seated on the Brenta and Bachiglione, in a fine plain, 20 m. W. by S. of Venice. Long. 11. 53. E., lat. 45. 14. N.

Padula, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, 14 m. N. of Policastro.

Pagahm, a decayed city of Birmah, anciently capital of a province of the same name. It is said to have been abandoned in the 13th century in consequence of a divine admonition. The remains of its ancient splendor are numerous mouldering temples, and the vestiges of a fort. It is seated on the Irrawaddy, 110 m. S. W. of Ummerapoora. Long. 94. 34. E., lat. 21. 10. N.

Pagcsville, p.v. Newberry Dis. S. C.

Pagliano, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ultra, 15 m. E. S. E. of Aquilla.

Pago, an island in the gulf of Venice, separated from Dalmatia by a narrow channel. It is 20 m. long and 6 broad, chiefly barren, and the soil stony; but it is well peopled, contains salt works, and produces wine and honey. The chief town is of the same name. Long. 51. 10. E., lat. 44. 40. N.

Pahang, a sea-port on the E. coast of the penin

aula of Malaya, capital of a kingdom of the same name, famous for a great number of elephants and for plenty of pepper. It is 140 m. N. E. of Malacca. Long. 103. 30. E., lat. 3. 55. N.

Painbeuf, a sea-port of France, department of Loire Inferieure, at the mouth of the Loire. Hence all the ships belonging to Nantes take their departure, and here they anchor on their arrival. 22 m. W. by N. of Nantes. Long. 1. 59. W., lat. 47. 17. N.

Paisley, a town of Scotland, the largest in Renfrewshire. It has considerable manufactures of silk and linen, gauze, lawn, muslin, cambric, thread, &c.; also extensive soap, candle, and cotton works. The river White Cart divides it into the Old and New Town, which communicate by three bridges. The latter stands on the E. side of the river, and consists of many handsome buildings; it also contains the magnificent remains of an abbey church, the only one which Paisley formerly required. By means of the river, and a canal, vessels of 40 tons can come up and unload at the quay. 9 m. W. of Glasgow. Long. 4. 23. W., lat. 55. 57. N.

Paita, a sea-port of Peru, with an excellent harbour. It has frequently been plundered by the buccaners; and in 1741 it was burnt by Commodore Anson, because the governor refused to ransom it. Long. 80. 49. W., lat. 5. 12. S.

Palachy, a town of Hindoostan, in the district of Coimbatore, with a small fort. In its vicinity a pot was dug up, a few years since, containing Roman silver coins of Augustus and Tiberius. It stands in a well cultivated country, 14 m. S. of Coimbatore and 37 W. of Daraporam.

Palacios, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 12 m. S. of Seville.

Palacios, a town of Spain, in Leon, 32 m. W. S. W. of Leon.

Palais, a town of France, capital of the island of Belleisle. It has a strong citadel, which stood a long siege against the English in 1761, and then surrendered on honorable terms. It stands on the N. E. side of the island, 30 m. S. S. E. of L'Orient. Long. 3. 7. W., lat. 47. 19. N.

Palais, St., a town and district in the department of Lower Pyrenees, which, with the town and district of St. Jean Pied de Port, formed nearly the whole of the former province of Lower Navarre. It is seated on the river Bidouse, 18 m. S. E. of Bayonne. Long. 1. 4. W., lat. 43. 21. N.

Palambuan, or Balambuan, a town on the E. end of the island of Japan, capital of a territory of its name, which abounds with cotton, rice, maize, fruit, horses, antelopes, buffaloes, and oxen. It stands on a bay in the strait of Bali. Long. 114. 25. E., lat. 8. 10. S.

Palembang, a district or kingdom of Sumatra, on the N. E. coast, conquered by the British in 1812. The chief articles of export are gold, tin, pepper, silk, ivory, wax, rice, &c.

Palembang, the capital of the above district and the emporium of the inland commerce of Sumatra. The inhabitants consists of Malays, Chinese, and Arabs. This town is seated on a river of its name, about 60 m. from the sea. Long. 104. 54. E., lat. 2. 59. S.

Palencia, a town of Spain, in Leon, capital of a district of its name, and a bishop's see, with five churches, 11 convents, and two hospitals. It is seated on the Carrion, 70 m. S. E. of Leon. Long. 4. 28. W., lat. 41. 59. N.

Paleno, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Citra, 9 m. E. S. E. of Solmona.

Palenzuela, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, seated on the Arlanza, a little above the influx of the Arlanzon, 30 m. S. W. of Burgos.

Palermo, p.t. Waldo Co. Me. 80 m. N. E. Portland. Pop. 1,258.

Palermo, a fortified city of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, capital of the island, and an archbishop's see. It stands on a bay of the same name, on the N. coast, near the extremity of a kind of natural amphitheatre, formed by high and rocky mountains. The country between the city and the mountains is one of the richest plains in the world; the whole appearing a magnificent garden, filled with fruitful trees and watered by fountains and rivulets. The two principal streets intersect each other in the centre of the city, where they form a handsome square, called the Ottangolo, from the centre of which is seen the whole of these noble streets, and the four elegant gates which terminate them, each at the distance of half a mile. The Porto Felice opens to the Marino, a delightful walk, which has on one side the wall of the city, and on the other the sea; and in the centre is an elegant kind of temple, frequently made use of as an orchestra. The churches of Palermo are upwards of 300, and many of them very rich and magnificent. The cathedral is a large Gothic structure, supported within by 80 columns of oriental granite, and divided into a great number of chapels, some of which are extremely rich, particularly that of St. Rosalia, the patroness of Palermo. The relics of this saint are preserved in a large box of silver, enriched with precious stones; and they are considered as the greatest treasures of the city. Here are also found the tombs of several of the ancient Norman kings, and of the emperors Henry VI. and Frederic II. of the finest porphyry. This city has suffered greatly at different periods by earthquakes and inundations. The harbour, defended by two castles, is dangerously open to the sea from the N. E.; and even at the anchoring place, ships are in danger when a westerly wind rushes through the valley of Colli between the mountains. About the middle of the 11th century the Norman king, Roger, established silk manufactures in this city, by means of prisoners taken in his war with the Greeks, and they still flourish, though not so lucrative since the manufacture has extended to Italy. One mile from Palermo is a celebrated convent of Capuchins, in which is a vault, made use of as a receptacle for the dead. It consists of 4 wide passages, each about 40 feet in length, with arches along the sides, in which the bodies are set upright, clothed in coarse garments, with their hands, arms, and feet bare. On the floor are handsome trunks, containing the bodies of persons of distinction, the keys of which are kept by the relations. In 1799 when the French made themselves masters of Naples, Palermo became the residence of the court; at present it is the seat of the viceroy of the Sicilian parliament and of the chief boards of the island administration. 13 m. W. of Messina, and 200 S. by W. of Naples. Long. 13. 23. E., lat. 33. 7. N.

Palestine, a country of Syria, so called from the Philistines, who inhabited its sea-coast. In the Scriptures it is styled the Land of Canaan, and the Promised Land: it is also called Judæa, from the patriarch Judah; and the Holy Land, from its having been the scene of the birth, ministry, and death of Jesus Christ. It is divided from the other parts of Syria on the N. by Mount Libanus, and on the E. by the river Jordan and the Dead Sea; Arabia Petræa on the S., and the Mediterranean on the W. It is in general a fertile country, abounding where cultivated, with corn, wine, and oil; and it might supply the neighbouring country with all these, as it anciently did, were the present inhabitants equally industrious. The parts about Jerusalem are the most mountainous and rocky; but they feed numerous herds and flocks, and yield plenty of honey, with excellent wine and oil; and the valleys produce large crops of corn. This country has been conquered and occupied by such a variety of foreign races that it is difficult to say which forms the basis of its present population. It now belongs to the Turkish empire, and is included in the prehalcs of Acre and Damascus, the former comprehending the sea-coast and the latter extending over the interior.

Palestrina, one of the largest of the islands called the Laguesnes, near Venice. It has a town of the same name, 6 m. S. of Venice.

Palestrina, anciently Præneste, an episcopal town of Italy, in the delegation of Rome, with the title of a principality. Here formerly stood a temple dedicated to Fortune, the ruins of which may yet be seen. It is 25 m. E. by S. of Rome. Long. 13. 5. E., lat. 41. 52. N.

Paliana, a town of Italy, in the papal states, situate on a hill, 29 m. E. of Rome.

Paligaut, or Palicand, a fort of Hindoostan, in Malabar, built by Hyder, on his conquest of that province. Around it are scattered many villages, which contain a considerable population and have some trade. It was taken by the British in 1783 and again in 1790, and was confirmed to them at the peace of 1792. It stands between two rivulets, near their junction, at the foot of the southern extremity of the Ghauts, 25 m. W. S. W. of Coimbatore and 56 E. by N. of Paniany.

Paligonda, a town of Hindoostan, in the Car-natic, with the remains of a fort, in which is a considerable temple. It is seated on the Paliar, 25 m. W. of Arcot.

Palk Strait, a strait at the N. end of the island of Ceylon, in the bay of Bengal, which separates that island from the coast of Coromandel. It is celebrated for the extensive pearl fishery carried on in it, on both shores, formerly by the Dutch and now by the British.

Palliser Islands, a group of islands in the S. Pacific; the largest is about 15 m. long and 10 broad. Long. 146. 30. W., lat. 15. 38. S.

Palma, one of the Canary islands, to the N. of Ferro, 50 m. in circumference, and very fertile. It has a town of the same name, much frequented for its excellent wines and safe harbour. Long. 17. 50. W., lat. 28. 37. N.

Palma, a strong city, capital of the island of Majorca, and a bishop's see. The public squares, the cathedral, and the royal palace, are magnificent. It contains 4,000 houses, built after the antique manner; a university, more ancient than celebrated; and 22 churches, besides the cathedral. The harbour is extremely good. It was taken by the English in 1766, and retaken in 1715. It is seated on the S. W. side of the island. Long. 2. 30. E., lat. 39. 35. N.

Palma, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the Xenil, near its conflux with the Guadalquivir, 30 m. S. W. of Cordova.

Palma, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, on the river Cadoan, 20 m. E. of Setuval.

Palma, a town of New Granada, 40 m. N. W. of Bogota.

Palma Nuova, a strong frontier town of Italy, in the Venetian province of Udina, seated on a canal, which communicates with the Lizonzo, 19 m. S. E. of Udina. Long. 13. 15. E., lat. 46. 2. N.

Palma di Solo, a sea-port of Sardinia, on the S. W. coast, 38 m. S. W. of Cagliari.

Palmas, a river of Mexico, formed by the junction of the Nassas and Saucedá, in New Biscay, whence it flows E. about 200 m. between the provinces of Panuco and New Leon, into the gulf of Mexico.

Palmas, the capital of the island of Grand Canara. See Canaries.

Palmas, one of the Philippine islands, 16 leagues S. E. of Mindanao. Long. 127. 0. E., lat. 5. 33. N.

Palmela, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, with a castle on a rock, 8 m. N. E. of Setuval.

Palmer, p.t. Hampden Co. Mass. 82 m. S. W. Boston. Pop. 1,237. Here are some manufactures.

Palmertown, p.v. Saratoga Co. N. Y. 46 m. from Albany.

Palmerston Isle, an island in the S. Pacific, discovered by Cook in 1774. It consists of about 10 islets, connected by a reef of coral rocks, and lying in a circular direction; the principal one not exceeding a m. in circumference, nor more than three feet above the level of the sea. It abounds with cocoa-nuts, scurvygrass, and the wharra-tree, but has no inhabitants. Long. 162. 57. W., lat. 18. 0. S.

Palmyra, or Tadmor, once a magnificent city of Syria, originally built by king Solomon, in the midst of a sandy desert, bounded on three sides by a chain of high mountains. On the decline of the Macedonian empire in the E., it became the capital of a principality, under the name of Palmyra; and it declared for the Romans, on Adriæ marching his army through Syria to Egypt. The city flourished and increased to the time of Aurelian, when it resisted the Roman power under queen Zenobia, who was at length taken captive, and led in triumph through the streets of Rome. Soon afterwards the inhabitants massacred the soldiers who had been left in garrison; this occasioned the return of Aurelius, who, having made himself master of the place, caused the inhabitants to be destroyed, and gave up the city to pillage. Its stupendous ruins were visited, in 1751, by Mr. Wood, who published a splendid account of them in 1753. The inhabitants consist of about 40 Arab families, living in mud cottages, erected within the spacious court of a once magnificent temple. 100 m. S. E. of Aleppo. Long. 33. 50. E., lat. 33. 20. N.

Palmira, p.t. Somerset Co. Me. 28 m. E. Norridgewock. Pop. 912; p.t. Wayne Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,434; p.t. Pike and Lebanon Co. Pa., Halifax Co. N. C., Warren Co. Missouri, Montgomery Co. Tn., Warren and Portage Cos. Ohio, Edwards Co. Ill. and Pike Co. Miss.

Palmood, a district of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, ceded to the British in 1801, and included in the collectorship of Guntoor. It is situated near the river Kistna. Timerycotta is the principal place.

Palos, a sea-port of Spain in Andalusia, with a tolerable harbour; celebrated as the place whence Columbus sailed on his first adventurous voyage in 1492. It is seated at the mouth of the Tinto, 50 m. W. by S. of Seville. Long. 6. 52. W., lat. 37. 10. N.

Palos Cape, a promontory of Spain, in Murcia, 19 m. E. of Carthagena. Long. 0. 40. W., lat. 37. 37. N.

Palota, a fortified town of Hungary, 40 m. S. by W. of Buda. Long. 18. 0. E., lat. 47. 0. N.

Palotza, a town of Hungary, situated on the Poprah, 54 m. N. of Cassovia. Long. 21. 20. E., lat. 47. 42. N.

Palte, a famous lake of Thibet, lying to the S. W. of Lassa, about 12 m. S. of the river Samboo. It is represented as a wide trench, of about 6 m. broad, surrounding an island 30 m. long and 20 broad. On the W. shore of this island is a monastery, and the seat of the Lamissa Turcepamo, or the Great Regenerate, in whom the Thibetians think that a divine spirit is regenerated, as it is in the Great Lama. The word lamissa, is the feminine of lama, which signifies a priest.

Pamelia, a township of Jefferson Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,263.

Pamiers, a town of France, department of Arriège, and a bishop's see. In the vicinity is a mineral spring. It is seated on the Arriège, 36 m. S. by E. of Toulouse. Long. 1. 35. E., lat. 43. 6. N.

Panlico Sound, a kind of inland sea, on the coast of N. Carolina, 100 m. long and from 10 to 20 broad, separated in its whole length from the Atlantic, by a beach of sand, hardly a mile wide. It has several inlets, but that of Ocracoke, in lat. 35. 16. N., is the only one that will admit vessels of burden.

Pampas, the name given in South Africa to the wide prairies or plains South of the Rio de la Plata. The great plain on the east of the Cordilleras, is about 900 m. in breadth, and divided into regions of different climate and produce. On leaving Buenos Ayres, the first region is covered, for 180 m. with clover and thistles; the second region (480 m.) produces long grass, without a weed; and the third, reaching the base of the Cordilleras, is a grove of low trees and shrubs, in which such beautiful order is observed that one may gallop between them in every direction. The two last have nearly the same appearance throughout the year. The trees and shrubs are evergreens, and the grass only changes from green to brown. The first region varies with the four seasons. In winter the leaves of the thistle are luxuriant, and the whole surface has the appearance of a turnip field. The clover is also rich and strong, and the wild cattle are grazing at full liberty. In spring the clover has vanished, and the leaves of the thistle are extended. In a month the whole region becomes a wood of thistles, ten or eleven feet high, in full bloom. The stems of the thistles are so close and strong, that, independent of the prickles, they form an impenetrable barrier, which has arisen so suddenly, that an invading army might be imprisoned by them. Before summer is over the thistles are dead, and the violence of the pampero or hurricane levels them with the ground, where they rapidly decompose, and the clover again quickly appears. If millions of inhabitants could be suddenly placed on these pampas they would have nothing to do but to drive out their cattle to graze, and without preparation plough what ground they pleased. But they can hardly be said to be peopled. Between the few settled inhabitants or gauchos, and the roving Indians who inhabit the south part of the pampas, a cruel exterminating war is carried on. The Indians always on horseback, are however, incapable of acting on foot, and are easily repulsed. The climate of the pampas is subject to great difference of temperature, though the gradual changes are very regular. The winter is as cold as an English November. The summer is very oppressively hot. But the whole pampas enjoy an atmosphere as beautiful and salubrious as the most healthy parts of Greece and Italy, without the malaria. The south-west wind or pampero, generated by the Andes, rushes over the plains with a violence which it is almost impossible to withstand; but they make the weather afterwards particularly healthy and agreeable.

Pampelonne, a town of France, department of Tarn, 15 m. N. by E. of Alby.

Pampliega, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 12 m. S. W. of Burgos.

Pampola, or Pampeluna, a city of Spain, capital of Upper Navarre, and a bishop's see, with a strong citadel, and a university. The squares are handsome, and adorned with shops full of rich merchandise. It was taken by the French, on their invasion of Spain; but surrendered to the allied forces in 1831. It is seated on the Arga, 47 m. S. of Bayonne and 197 N. E. of Madrid. Long. 1. 42. W., lat. 42. 49. N.

Pamplona, a town of New Granada, famous for mines of gold, and numerous flocks of sheep in its vicinity. It is 150 m. N. by E. of Bogota. Long. 71. 30. W., lat. 6. 30. N.

Panagia, a town of Romania, 14 m. N. of Galipoli.

Panama, a city and sea-port of Colombia. It stands on a fine bay of its name, on the S. coast of the isthmus of Darien, and contains a handsome cathedral, and a number of churches, convents, and monasteries. Before the abolition of the trade by the galleons, it was the emporium for all the merchandise of Chile and Peru, intend ed for Europe. See Porto Bello. The trade and commerce are still considerable, and in the harbour is a fine pearl fishery. The city is surrounded by a wall and other fortifications, and is 60 m. S. by W. of Porto Bello. Long. 80. 21. W., lat. 8. 49. N.

Panama, p.v. Chataque Co. N. Y.

Panaraga, a town of the island of Java, capital of a kingdom of the same name, 60 m. E. by N. of Mataram.

Panarucan, a town on the N. coast of Java, formerly the capital of a principality, but now subject to the Dutch. The chief export is long pepper. Long. 113. 25. E., lat. 8. 0. S.

Panay, one of the Philippine islands, between those of Paragoa and Negros. It is of a triangular form, 250 m. in circumference, populous and fertile, and watered by a great number of rivers and brooks. The chief commodity for exportation is rice. Iloila is the capital.

Pancras, St. an extensive parish in Middlesex, Eng. 2 m. N. W. of London. The old church and churchyard have long been noted as a burial place for Roman Catholics.

Pancsora, a town and fortress of Hungary, seated near the Danube, 10 m. E. N. E. of Belgrade.

Pangasena, one of the Molucca islands, in the E. Indies, 45 m. long and 10 broad, lying between Celebes and Bourton.

Pango, a town of the kingdom of Congo, capital of a province of the same name. It stands on the river Barbela, 95 m. N. N. E. of St. Salvador. Long. 14. 45. E., lat. 4. 20. S.

Panjab, a country in the N. W. part of Hindoostan, being that watered by the five eastern branches of the Indus. It was the scene of Alexander's last campaign, and the termination of his conquests. It forms a square of 250 miles, and includes the whole of Lahore and a great part of Moulton Proper. To the lower part of Moulton it is flat and marshy, inundated by the rains which fall between May and October.

Paniany, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Malabar, containing above 40 mosques, 500 houses belonging to traders, and 1,000 huts inhabited by the lower orders of people. The port is frequented by small vessels from different places on the coast; and much rice is exported hence to the northern parts of the province. It is seated in a sandy plain, near the mouth of a river, 32 m. S. by E. of Calicut. Long. 75. 48. E., lat. 10. 47. N.

Panmanuch, a village of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, situate a little below the waterfall called the Lin of Dee. It is noted for its mineral waters and has houses and baths for the accommodation of company.

Panniput, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Dehli, celebrated for a battle, in 1761, between an army of 200,000 Mahrattas, and Abdallah, sultan of Candahar, at the head of 150,000 Mahomedans, in which the former were totally defeated. Panniput is situate in an extensive plain, 72 m. N. W. of Dehli. Long. 76. 55. E., lat. 29. 13. N.

Panomi, a town of Macedonia, 16 m. S. of Salonichi.

Pantalaria, an island in the Mediterranean, belonging to Sicily, and situated between that island and the coast of Tunis. It is 30 m. in circumference, and abounds in cotton, fruits, and wine.

Panton, p.t. Addison Co Va. Pop. 605.

Panuco, or Guasteca, a province of Mexico, bounded on the E. by the gulf of Mexico and W. by Mechoacan and New Biscay. The tropic of Cancer divides it into two parts; the S. part abounds with provisions, and has some veins of gold and mines of salt; but the other is poor and barren.

Panuco, the capital of the above province, and a bishop's see, is situate near a river of the same name, which falls into the gulf of Mexico, 210 m. N. N. E. of Mexico. Long. 98. 50. W., lat. 22. 50. N.

Pao-king, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Hou-quang, 830 m. S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 111. 0. E., lat. 27. 5. N.

Paoli, p.t. Orange Co. Ind. 106 m. S. W. Indianapolis.

Pao-ning, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Se-tchuen, on the river Kialing, 700 m. S. W. of Peking. Long. 105. 35. E., lat. 31. 3. N.

Paonm, one of the two New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific, to the S. of Mallicollo. Long. 168. 20. W., lat. 16. 30. S.

Pao-ting, a city of China, of the first rank, the most considerable in the province of Pe-tcheli next to Peking. The country around is pleasant and as fertile as any part of China. 78 m. S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 115. 25. E., lat. 38. 54. N.

Papa, a town of Hungary, in the county of Vespria, 45 m. W. of Buda.

Paperville, p.v. Sullivan Co. Ten.

Papoul, St. a town of France, department of Aude, on the Lande, 13 m. N. W. of Carcassone and 35 S. E. of Toulouse.

Pappenburg, a town of Hanover, in E. Friesland, with two churches, and numerous yards for ship-building. It is seated on a canal, which communicates with the river Ems, 13 m. S. of Embden.

Pappenheim, a town of Bavaria, formerly the capital of a county of the same name, seated on a hill near the Altmuhl, 13 m. N. E. of Donawert.

Papua. See Guinea, New.

Para, a handsome city of Brazil, capital of a government of the same name, with a citadel and castle. The chief business is cultivating tobacco and sugar canes, and gathering cotton which grows wild here. It is seated on the estuary of the Tocantin, 80 m. from the ocean. Long. 49. 25. W., lat. 1. 50. S.

Paracles, or Pracels, a vast multitude of small islands and rocks in the China Sea, lying off the coast of Cochin-China. They extend 300 m. in length by 60 in breadth, and the intercurrences among them render their navigation dangerous.

Paradella, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 12 m S. E. of Lamego.

Paradise, villages in York and Lancaster Cos Pa.

Paragoa, or Palawan, the most westerly of the Philippine islands, being 180 m. long and from 20 to 40 broad, divided between the king of Borneo and the Spaniards, with some independent natives in the interior parts, who are black, and have no fixed place of abode. The Spaniards have a garrison at the N. end of the island, at a place called Tatay. Long. 118. 45. E., lat. 11. 0. N.

Paraguay, an extensive country of S. America, bounded on the N. by Amazonia, E. by Brazil, S. by Patagonia, and W. by Chile and Peru. It contains numerous lakes and rivers, of the latter, the three principal are the Parana, Paraguay, and Uruguay, the united streams of which form the celebrated Rio de la Plata. These rivers annually overflow their banks. The climate is in general moist and temperate, though in some places it is cold. In the temperate parts the soil is extremely fertile, producing grain, beans, peas, cotton, tobacco, and the valuable herb called paraguay, which is peculiar to this country, and the infusion of which is drank instead of tea. Here are also a variety of fruits and very rich pastures; but the country is destitute of woods. Cattle, sheep, horses, and mules are in great abundance; of the last many thousands were annually sent to Peru. In the mountains toward Tucuman, the condor, the largest bird of the vulture tribe, is not unfrequent; and the ostrich is found in the wide plains. Several independent tribes of indigenes live in the interior, on the Rio Grande; one of them, called Abipones, are a warlike race, and, by a novelty in American manners, chiefly cavalry, securing and taming the wild horses introduced by the Spaniards. In 1515 the Spaniards discovered this country by sailing up the Rio de la Plata, and, in 1535, founded the town of Buenos Ayres. In 1580 the Jesuits were admitted into these fertile regions, and, in the next century, founded the famous missions of Paraguay. In 1757 Spain exchanged the colonies on the E. shore of the Uruguay for the Portuguese colony of St. Sacramento, which caused that river to become the boundary of the respective possessions of the two crowns. In 1767 the court expelled the Jesuits, and the natives were put upon the same footing with the other Indians of the Spanish part of S. America.

Paraguay revolted from the government of Spain at the same time with the neighbouring provinces. Soon after the declaration of independence the direction of affairs fell into the hands of Doctor Francia a native of the country, who procured himself to be declared Dictator for life. This government has continued to the present moment the most arbitrary and despotic rule on the face of the earth; yet his administration has been generally equitable. All intercourse with foreigners has been avoided, and those who have entered the country have experienced great difficulties in returning. Asuncion is the capital.

Paraiba, a province of Brazil, between those of Rio Grande and Tamarica. It abounds in sugar canes, bram-wood, tobacco, and cotton. The chief town, which is of the same name, is seated on the river Paraiba. The Dutch obtained possession of it in 1635, and fortified it with a slight rampart; but the Portuguese retook it soon after.

Paramaribo, the capital of Surinam, Guiana, and the chief place of the Dutch colonies in S. America. It has a strong but small citadel, and a noble road for shipping, where there are seldom fewer than 80 vessels, loading coffee, sugar, cotton, and indigo. The streets are strait, and lined with orange, shaddock, tamarind, and lemon trees, in continual bloom. It surrendered to the English in 1799 and in 1803. It is situate on the E. side of the river Surinam. 16 m. from its mouth. Long. 55. 25. W., lat 5. 48. N.

Parana, a province of Paraguay, so named from a large river, which receives the Paraguay at Gorientes, and afterwards, joining the Uruguay, forms the river Plata.

Parohwitz, a town and castle of Prussian Silesia, with a considerable manufacture of cloth: seated on the Katzbach, 10 m. N. E. of Leignitz.

Pardubitz, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Chrudin, with a fortified castle and a manufacture of knives and sword blades. It is seated on the Elbe, 23 m. E. by S. of Prague. Long. 15. 41 E., lat. 49. 58. N.

Parochia. See Paros.

Parenza, a sea-port of Istria, on a peninsula in the Gulf of Venice, with a harbour for large vessels. It is 23 m. S. by W. of Capo d'Istria. Long. 13. 50. E., lat. 45. 18. S.

Parga, a sea-port on the coast of Albania, opposite to the southern point of the island of Corfu, memorable as the only place which bade defiance to the arms of Ali Pasha, tyrant of Albania, to whom it was eventually surrendered on condition of his paying an indemnity to those of the inhabitants who should refuse to remain. The evacuation took place in 1819, most of the inhabitants removing to the Ionian islands. 30 m. S. W. of Joannina.

Paria, a province of Colombia, lying to the S. E. of Cumana, on the banks of the Orinoco, and including the delta of that river. On the N. of this province, between Cumana and the island of Trinidad, is a large bay, called the Gulf of Paria.

Paria, the capital of the above province. Here are some silver mines, and its cheeses, made from the milk both of sheep and cows, are in high esteem. It is 140 m. W. N. W. of Plata. Long. 68. 32. W., lat. 18. 30. S.

Paridrong, a strong town of Thibet, on the borders of Bootan, 45 m. W. N. W. of Tassasudon.

Parilla, or Santa, a town of Peru, in the province of Lima, at the mouth of a river of the same name, 80 m. S. E. of Truxillo, and 280 N. W. of Lima. Long. 77. 50. W., lat. 8. 56. S.

Parima, a lake of S. America, near the borders of Amazonia and Guiana, of a square form, 80 m. long and 40 broad. It seems to be a kind of inundation formed by the Orinoco; for that river enters on the N. and issues on the W. side of the lake, near its N. W. angle. From the S. E. of this lake issues the White River, called also the Parima, which flows S. to the Black River, and thence S. E. to the river Amazon. To the W. of this lake, before the main stream of the Orinoco turns to the N., there are two other branches that flow from it to the Black River. Hence there are three communications between those two great rivers, the Orinoco and the Amazon.

Paris, the capital of France, and of civilized Europe, lies on both banks and occupies two islets of the Seine. This city, which pretends to a rivalry in arts and elegancies with Athens, and in magnificence with Thebes, had the meanest commencement. Julius Cæsar found the principal islet, now called "the city" (la cite), covered with huts, and serving as a retreat for fishermen of the tribe of Gauls called "Parisii." The surrounding woods and marshes, and the waters of the Seine, which had hitherto protected these barbarians, were but a weak obstacle to the Roman legionaries, upon whose approach they burned their huts and fled farther into the woods. Cæsar, having completed the conquest of Gaul, held a conference with the chiefs of the Gallic hordes in this islet, and approving the site, laid in it the foundation of a city, called by the Romans "Lutetia Parisiorum," from the name of the tribe, and the word "Loutouhezi," by which the natives designated the cluster of huts which had disappeared. The new city improved rapidly under the influence of Roman laws, arts, and administration. During the reign of Charlemagne, who, amidst his conquests, never lost sight of the arts of civilization, Paris advanced in arts and letters as well as wealth and extent. The adventurous and roving Normans, tempted by the wealth of the city, and despising the feeble successors of Charlemagne, who had abandoned the capital as a patrimony to hereditary counts, plundered it three times, after short intervals—in 845, 857, and 872. Under the third or Capetian race, it improved still more rapidly than before. It became the fixed royal residence and seat of government; the capital of the kingdom in fact as well as in name. Philip Augustus added to its strength and beauty by many new edifices, by paving the streets, and by surrounding the whole city with deep fosse and thick wall defended by five hundred towers. Paris at this time had sixteen gates, and covered a surface of seven hundred and thirty-nine square acres. Louis IX. (St. Louis) built hospitals and schools, reformed the more barbarous and vexatious "customs" (laws), regulated the administration of justice, and created a police. Paris was taken in 1426 by the English, who were compelled to abandon it in 1436. Francis I. had the glory of introducing into Paris science, literature and the fine arts. The Grecian orders of architecture were now adopted for the first time, and the interior of the new edifices adorned with sculpture and the paintings of the Italian masters. Henry IV. erected the Pont Neuf, and laid out several squares or places in the old city on the islets in the Seine, hitherto the quarter of the court. Paris is indebted to Louis XIV. for a great portion of its magnificence:—for its noble and healthful Boulevards;—for the triumphal arches (of which two are splendid monuments) by which it is entered at the gates of St. Denis, St. Martin, St. Antoine, and St. Bernard;—for the Place Vendome and Place des Victoires;—for the colonnade of the Louvre; the Hospital of Invalids; the garden of the Tuileries, designed by Lenotre, under the immediate inspection of Colbert;—for the promenades and plantations of the Champs Elysees. The Revolution came, and with it the genius of devastation for a time. The works of art only are a permanent loss, and fortunately they were neither many, nor irreparable chefs d'œuvre;—whilst the public health, convenience, and beauty of the town, have gained incalculably by the removal or desecration of the churches and convents. Spacious and convenient markets, open and well-built streets or other edifices of great public ornament and utility, now occupy the sites of such religious houses as were destroyed; and those left standing, but desecrated, have been converted into prisons, penitentiaries, hospitals, colleges, schools or other public establishments for the purposes of society or charity. Paris is under eternal obligations to Bonaparte: he did more for it than even Louis XIV. He combined, in a greater degree, the useful with the magnificent. Despot as he was, he saw that the mass of the people was now a power which must not be dazzled merely, as in the time of Louis XIV., but conciliated and served. His designs are said to have been essentially his own. It seems most probable that they could have been conceived only by the same mind which had the force, energy and resources to execute them. He freed the bridges and banks of the Seine from the embarrassment and deformity of the old houses by which they were still crowded; built magnificent quays and wharves; and erected four bridges of remarkable beauty, as monuments of art. He not only conceived (for even the conception was a great merit), but had nearly executed, at his fall, the Canal de l'Ouercq. He distributed the public supply of water by fifteen new and abundant fountains, of which some are beautiful specimens of architecture. The immense architectural and sculptural mass called "the Fountain of the Elephant" was left by him, and still remains unfinished. The people, not merely of Paris, but of the whole kingdom, are indebted to him for those spacious markets, so commodiously arranged for the sale of every kind of produce; for public stores, especially the wine stores, which surprise by their vastness, the happy ingenuity of their distribution, and their architectural grandeur. He erected, near the barriers, five abattoirs or slaughter-houses; and thus relieved the town from the inconvenient and dangerous presence of herds of cattle, the revolting spectacle of blood, and the noxious miasmata of butchery and tallow-melting. The vast granary of reserve, destined by him to protect the people of Paris against famine and the change of seasons, now unfinished or abandoned, remains a monument of the instability of all human power and the uncertainty of all human projects. He cleared the Place du Caroussel, between the Louvre and the Tuileries, of its obstructions and nuisances; adorned it with a triumphal arch; completed the Louvre; filled its gallery with sculpture and paintings. The garden of the Tuileries owes much of its magnificence to the noble vista which he opened by the rue Castiglione to the triumphal column in the Place Vendome;—the opposite view of the Chamber of Deputies, with its noble portico, on the left bank of the Seine; and the unfinished but grand triumphal arch of Neuilly. Many of the public buildings, canals, and other public works left unfinished by Bonaparte, have been carried on, and some have been completed, since the restoration of the house of Bourbon. A new quarter, as it is called, was begun, in 1823, in the western suburb of Paris, touching the Champs Elysees, extending to Chaillot, and spreading above the Chaussee d'Antin. The style of structure is elegant, and the scale within the reach of ordinary fortunes. A second quarter opens by its main street, which is spacious and planted with rows of trees, a communication between two main points of the faubourgs Montmartre and St. Martin. The progress of all these, however, has been slow, and in some parts suspended; and some generations will probably have passed away before the "Ville de François Premier" and Nouvelle Athenes," with their brilliant associations, or the "Petit Londres," with its national rivalry, are monuments of any thing but magnificent projects, and the want of capital or perseverance. Great undertakings are rarely, if ever, completed by private enterprise in Paris: they have been projected and executed only by the government. The palace of the Exchange, considered the noblest edifice of the kind in Europe, was completed and opened for the transaction of commercial business, and for the sittings of the tribunal of commerce, since the accession of Charles X.

It is difficult to give within short limits a coup d'œil of so crowded, diversified, and even disorderly, a mass as the French capital,—its churches, palaces, public buildings, and monuments of art. Of its churches, the most remarkable are the cathedral of Notre Dame, in the old city,—a large and lofty edifice, with two high and massive towers, presenting a style of architecture imposing and curious, and well executed for its early date;—the church of St. Eustache, a model of light and graceful classic architecture;—the churches of St. Roch and St. Sulpice, modern edifices in a grand and noble style;—that of St. Genevieve, built near the close of the last century,—desecrated during the Revolution into a Pantheon for the remains of the great men of France, with the simple and sublimely affecting inscription—"Aux grands hommes la patrie reconnoissante," and re-desecrated in 1830;—admired for its dome,—sustained by the mass of the building in the form of a Greek cross at its intersection—its principal façade and peristyle of twenty fluted Corinthian columns imitated from the Pantheon at Rome. Paris boasts several palaces, of which the principal are the Tuileries, with its vast open court and imposing façade on the one side, and its public garden, adorned with alleys of forest trees, terraces, plantations, basins, and copies in marble and bronze of the most celebrated pieces of sculpture;—the Louvre, with its gallery of works of art, and its colonnade, regarded as a specimen of the nearest approach to perfection in architecture; the Palace or Chamber of Deputies, with a grand Corinthian portico, and several statues of colossal size,—the beautiful Palais Bourbon—both contiguous, immediately on the left bank of the Seine;—the old and majestic Luxembourg, or Chamber of Peers, with its two grand pavilion wings and central quadrangle surmounted by a cupola, and its splendid garden opening on the observatory; the Palace of Justice, in the old city, inhabited by kings of the present dynasty down to the twelfth in succession, now occupied by the courts of justice; the Palais Royal, inhabited and recently repaired by the duke of Orleans, with its adjoining public garden, galleries and shops,—concentrating as in a focus, wealth and idleness, literature, industry and the arts, gaming and every other species of dissipation and depravity.

The chief public edifices are the Hospital or Hotel of Invalids, with its gilded dome, its ornamented façade, with central Ionic pilasters, and a planted esplanade extending before it,—the Hotel des Monnaies, or mint, in which also all national medals are struck, with its colonnade, arcades, and statues, forming a noble facade towards the Seine, on its left bank;—the Observatory, communicating by a grand avenue with the Luxembourg;—the Exchange, already mentioned, built in a simple and noble style, forming a parallelogram 212 feet long and 126 broad, with a peristyle of sixty-six Corinthian columns.

Three of the sixteen bridges over the Seine merit particular notice:—the bridge of the Garden of Plants, formerly called Pont d'Austerlitz, with five arches of iron, remarkable for its elegance and solidity; the Pont d'Jena, changed to that of "the Invalids," at the instance of Blucher, who was actually laying a train to blow it up in 1815; and between these, from the Louvre to the Institute, the Pont des Arts, incomparably light and graceful, and used only by foot passengers.

Of the public monuments of art, the most perfectly beautiful is the bronze column in the Place Vendôme, modelled upon that of Trajan at Rome, but exceeding its proportions by a twelfth. The most remarkable merit in this column, perhaps is, that, presenting in relief on its pedestal the unclassic trophies of modern war, in every variety of arms and costume, it yet seems perfectly in the classic and antique style and taste. The triumphal arch of the Carousel, modelled upon that of Septimius Severus at Rome, is unexceptionably beautiful in itself, but small in proportion to the surrounding area, and rendered for a time still more disproportionate by the removal of the celebrated Venetian horses of Lysippus with their car from its summit, in 1815. These, however, have been recently replaced by an exact copy in bronze. It has, like its model, three arcades in front, with an additional transverse arcade. The modern triumphal arch at Neuilly exceeds the arch of the Carousel, and even those of Louis XIV. at the gates of St. Denis and St. Martin, in grandeur and advantage of position, rather than beauty. Colossal statues have been re-erected to Henry IV. on the Pont Neuf, and Louis XIV. in the Place des Victoires.

Judging by the daily congregation of thousands of both sexes in the open air,—young men idly loling or lounging,—old men, with even a certain air of gravity, wasting life in the coffee-houses and public gardens,—the gaming-houses equally public and crowded,—one would be disposed to pronounce the people of Paris a race the most frivolous, idle, and depraved. But the loungers and gamblers are, to a considerable extent, congregated from all parts of Europe; and the old men are small annuitants, content with their actual means of subsistence,—without further increase by industry or speculation. Science, literature, and the fine arts, are at the same time cultivated in a still greater proportion of numbers by the studious and the industrious, and with every advantage which schools of public instruction, libraries, and museums, can afford. The public schools and colleges forming component branches of one great system of public education in medicine, jurisprudence, and the military art, abstract and experimental science, literature, the fine and useful arts, from the institute down to the two admirable institutions for the instruction of the blind and the deaf and dumb, with appropriate and some noble edifices devoted to them, and lectures by eminent professors, either gratuitous or on moderate terms, are too numerous to be detailed. The chief public libraries are five in number:—the Royal Library, containing 500,000 vols., 100,000 MSS., 100,000 medals, and 1,500,000 engravings; the Mazarine Library, 93,000 vols., and 41,000 MSS.; the Library of the Arsenal, 170,000 vols., 6,000 MSS.; the Library of St. Genevieve, 110,000 vols., and 2,000 MSS.; the City Library, 42,000 vols. The principal museums are that, or rather those, of the Garden of Plants,—an incomparable temple of natural science in every branch, raised chiefly by the illustrious Buffon, and his worthy successor, the late count Lapepède; the Louvre, still containing 1,200 pictures and 500 pieces of sculpture, among which are many chefs d'œuvre; and the Conservatory of Useful Arts (Arts et Metiers.) containing specimens or models of the machinery and instruments used in every branch of manufacture.

Paris is the great centre, not only of French but of continental intellect in literature and science. From its press issue the most valuable, if not the greatest number, of literary publications; and it has a still more decided lead in scientific research and discovery. Paris is also as decidedly the first manufacturing town of France. Its principal manufacturing establishments called royal, are three:—the Gobelins tapestry, to which that of La Savonniere has been united; the manufactory of glass, which employs 2,700 men; and the porcelain manufactory at Sevres, remarkable not only for the value of its productions, but for its curious museum of all the objects connected with the art, ranged in order. Paris also excels in many of the commonly used articles of luxury and fashion,—in male and female dress, jewelry, wrought gold and silver, watches, clocks, furniture, carriages, &c. So strong is the tendency to trading industry, that its exports have increased since the Revolution to a degree unprecedented in the history of commerce.

Society has become essentially changed in Paris since the Revolution. The nobles have lost their importance, if not existence, as a caste. That numerous aggregate of families formerly called the "court," has disappeared. Wealth, however, is not the first distinction, nor has it the same weight in obtaining access to good company, in Paris as in other places. The Parisian society of men of letters and artists is, perhaps, the most intellectual, interesting and polished, in existence,—from the fund of knowledge and accomplishment which it contains, and the passing admixture of European rank and talents. The Parisians are doubtless polished and artificial in their manners; but they are also really social and obliging: and the many hospitals which they support for the helpless of both sexes and every age,—of which 7 contain 3,156 beds,—with, moreover, several bureaux for the distribution of private domiciliary relief,—sufficiently prove that they are humane and charitable. Their love of amusement and pleasure is attested by their crowded public walks, their 3,500 coffee-houses, and twelve theatres.

Paris lies in north lat. 43. 50. N.,—long. 20. 11. (reckoning, with the French astronomers, from the western point of the Ile de Ferro).—98 leagues S. E. of London, 250 leagues S. W. of Basle, 280 leagues N. by E. of Madrid, 350 leagues N. E. of Lisbon. Its area is 10,600 square acres, of 100 perches each; its circumference, by the Boulevards, about six leagues; its diameter about two leagues; and its pop. 900,000. It is divided into 12 municipal districts, called arrondissemens; 9 on the right and 3 on the left bank of the Seine,—with a mayor and justice of peace in each; and these arrondissemens are again subdivided into forty-eight quarters, each with a commissary of police. The municipal administration and police of Paris are wholly in the hands of the executive government.

Parma, a duchy of Italy, under which name are included the duchies of Parma Proper, Placenza, and Guastalla. It is bounded on the W. and N. by the Milanese, E. by the Modenese, and S. by Tuscany and Genoa. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, oil, hemp, and pasturage; and there are some inconsiderable mines of copper and silver. The celebrated Parmesan cheese is no longer made in this country, but at Lodi, in the Milanese, and some other places. By the treaty of Paris, in 1814, this duchy was given to the ex-empress Maria Louisa.

Parma, an ancient, rich, populous, and handsome town of Italy, capital of the foregoing duchy. It has a university, a magnificent cathedral, and the largest opera-house in Europe, which has seats for 8,000 people. The dome, and the church of St. John, are painted by the famous Correggio, who was a native of this place. The other most remarkable places are the ducal palace, with its gallery and collection of artificial curiosities; the large Benedictine convent, in which 12,000 soldiers were quartered in 1724; the Palazzo Giardino, a ducal palace, connected with the town; and the promenade between the town and citadel. Charles, king of the Two Sicilies, carried away a library from this place to Naples, which contained 18,000 volumes, and a very valuable cabinet of curiosities, with a rich collection of medals. The inhabitants, about 36,000, trade in silk, and silk stockings. In 1734 a bloody battle was fought here between the Austrians and the French and Sardinians, in which the former were defeated. Parma is situated on a river of the same name, which divides it into two parts, united by three bridges, 40 m. N. W. of Modena and 60 S. E. of Milan. Long. 10. 30. E., lat. 44. 50. N.

Parnassus, or Parnasso, a celebrated mountain in Greece. It has two heads, one of which was famous for being consecrated to Apollo and the Muses, and the other to Bacchus. It is the highest in Greece, and has a fine fountain, supposed to be the ancient Castalia. 8 m. N. of Livadia.

Paro, or Porrogong, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of its name in the province of Bootan, with a castle, the residence of a governor. It is famous for the manufacture of idols, and the forging of swords, daggers, and arrows. It stands on the Patechui, in a fertile valley, 20 m. S. by E. of Tassasudon.

Paros, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, one of the Cyclades, to the W. of Naxia. It is 10 m. long and eight broad, and the soil is well cultivated. The trade consists in wheat, barley, wine, and pulse, and in calicoes. It formerly produced a great deal of oil, but the Venetian army burnt all the olive trees. This island was anciently dedicated to Bacchus, on account of its excellent wines; and has been so famous for its marble that the best carvers would make use of no other. The statues of Phidias and Praxiteles were natives of this island; and the famous Arundelian marbles at Oxford were brought from this place.

Paros, or Parehia, the capital of the Isle of Paros, and a bishop's see. It was anciently the largest and most powerful town of the Cyclades; but is greatly decayed. The walls of the castle are built of ancient pieces of marble, and most of the columns are placed long-wise; some of them, that stand upright, support cornices of amazing size. The natives build their houses of marble, which they find ready cut to their hands; but they take no care to place the pieces in a regular manner; their fields likewise are inclosed with friezes, altars, and basso-relievos. The present inhabitants are so ignorant that instead of great sculptors, and skilful architects, they have nothing but carvers of mortars and salt-cellar. Paros is situate on the W. coast of the island. Long. 25. 44. E., lat. 37. S. N.

Parishville, p.v. St Lawrence Co. N. Y. 35 m. S. E. Ogdensburg. Pop. 1,479.

Parrot, a river which rises in the S. part of Somersetshire, Eng. receives the Odered, Ivel and Throne, and enters the Bristol Channel at Bridgewater Bay.

Parramatta, a town in New S. Wales, capital of the province of the same name, with a church, court-house, hospital, orphan-house, goal, &c. Pop. 1,200 the soil in most places is remarkably good. It is seated at the head of the harbour of Port Jackson, 15 m. W. by N. of Sydney.

Parsonsfield, p.t. York Co. Me. Pop. 2,465.

Partenkirch, a town of Bavaria, 48 m. S. S. W. of Munich.

Parthenay, a town of France, department of Deux Sevres, with a considerable trade in cattle and corn, and manufactures of serge, hats, leather, and earthenware. It is seated on the Thoue, 21 m. S. of Thouars and 28 N. N. E. of Niort.

Partoneroig, a ferry-town of Scotland, in Fifeshire, near the mouth of the frith of Tay, 9 m. N. N. W. of St. Andrew.

Para, a town and fort of Brazil, in the jurisdiction of Para; situate on the N. side of the head of the estuary of the Amazon, 200 m. from the ocean. Long. 54. 20. W., lat. 1. 50. S.

Parys, a mountain of Wales, on the N. W. coast of the Isle of Anglesey, famous for a copper mine, which is wrought similarly to a stone quarry open to day. This mine was not opened till 1768, and the quantity of ore is prodigious. The purest part is exported raw to the smelting works at Swansea and other places: the most impure is calcined on the spot, and deprived of its sulphur, which is sublimed, and afterwards formed into rolls of brimstone. Quantities of nearly pure copper are obtained from the waters beneath the bed of ore, by the intervention of iron. A lead ore, rich in silver, is also found in this mountain. The smelting and boiling houses are in the valley below, near the sea, and at Amlwch is a commodious haven for vessels employed in the copper and brimstone trade.

Pas, a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, 12 m. S. W. of Arras into the gulf of Mexico. It is barred at the mouth against vessels drawing more than 5 feet water.

Pas de Calais, a department of France, containing the provinces of Artois and Bourbonnois. It has a superficial area of 2,500 sq. m. with 570,000 inhabitants. The climate is humid and changeable, several districts are marshy, but the soil in general is fertile in corn, hemp, flax, &c. Arras is the capital.

Pasewalk, a town of Prussian Pomerania, near which are some iron works. It stands on the Ucker, 28 m. W. of Stettin.

Pasqua, a town of Mexico, in Xalisco, 100 m. S. S. W. of Compostella.

Pasquaro, a town of Mexico, in Mechoacan, 24 m. S. W. of Mechoacan.

Pasquotank, a county of N. Carolina. Pop. 8,618. Elizabeth is the capital.

Passage, a sea-port of Spain, in Biscay, between those of Fontarabia and St. Sebastian, 3 m. E. of the latter.

Passaic, a river of New Jersey rising in New York and flowing S. E. into Newark Bay. It has a fall of 70 feet at Patterson, where the river is 40 yards wide and falls in an unbroken sheet, forming one of the most beautiful cascades in the country.

Passamaquoddy Bay, an inlet of the Bay of Fundy between the eastern part of Maine and New Brunswick. It contains the Island of Campobello, Moose, Deer, and several others, and receives the waters of many rivers. The tides in the bay rise more than 30 feet; the waters abound with herring, cod, mackerel and pollock, the taking of which afford occupation to great numbers of people. The bay is 12 m. long and 6 wide: it is navigable for the largest ships.

Passamaquoddy Indians. See Perry.

Passau, Cape, a cape of S. America, in Quito. Long. 80. 50. W., lat. 0. 30. S.

Passaro, Cape, anciently called Pachimum, the most southerly point of Sicily. It has a fort to protect the country from the incursions of the Barbary corsairs. Off this cape, Sir George Byng defeated a Spanish squadron in 1735. Long. 15. 22. E., lat. 36. 35. N.

Passarowitz, a town of Servia, where a peace was concluded in 1718 between Charles VI. and Achemt III. It is situate near the river Moravia, 33 m. E. S. E. of Belgrade.

Passaruan, a town of the Island of Java, capital of an extensive principality, with a trade in cotton and rice, 30 m. W. of Panarucan.

Passau, a fortified city of Bavaria, capital of the circle of Lower Danube, and formerly of a principality of its name, which in 1815 was divided between Bavaria and Austria. It stands on the Danube, where it receives the Inn and Ilz, and by these rivers is divided into four parts; namely, the town of Passau, Insadt, Hstätt, and the fortified castle of Oberhaus, on the mountain of St. George. This city is celebrated for the treaty, or religious peace, concluded here in 1552. In 1662 the cathedral and greatest part of the town were consumed by fire, but they have been handsomely rebuilt. It is 65 m. E. S. E. of Ratisbon and 135 W. by N. of Vienna. Long. 13 32. E., lat. 48. 34. N.

Passenheim, a town of Prussia, in the government of Konigsberg, 73 m. S. of Konigsberg.

Passignano, a town of Italy, in the papal states, 17 m. N. W. of Perugia.

Passy, a village of France, department of Paris, near the town of St. Denys. Here is a man ufacture of considerable extent for speedily bleaching cotton and linen cloth.

Passyunk, a township of Philadelphia Co. Pa. adjoining the city.

Pasto, or St. Juan de Pasto, a town of New Granada, capital of a district of its name, seated in a valley, 120 m. N. by E. of Quito. Long. 76. 55. W., lat. 1. 50. N.

Pastrana, a town of Spain, in New Castile, 32 m. E. of Madrid.

Patagonia, a country in the most southern part of S. America, bounded on the N. by Buenos Ayres, and extending 1,100 m. on the eastern coast, from Rio de la Plata to the straits of Magellan. This country has no timber in the S. parts, though the N. contains an immense quantity, and numerous flocks of cattle. The E. coast is generally low. The natives are tall, stout, and well made, some of them six feet five inches in height; but their hands and feet are remarkably small. Their colour is a kind of bronze. They have no other clothing than skins, which they wear with the hair inward, and a little apron of leather. Here is found the tougon or American ostrich, the largest bird of the western continent, being generally 6 feet high. The Patagonians hunt them on horseback and kill them with clubs. The principal harbour is that of Port St. Julian.

Patak, a town of Hungary, with a protestant college, situate on the Latoreza, 25 m. S. S. E. of Cassovia.

Patana, a city and district of Mysore. See Seringapatam.

Putani, a town on the N. E. coast of the peninsula of Malaya, capital of a district of the same name, with a well defended harbour. The inhabitants have some trade with the Chinese. 300 m. N. by W. of Malacca. Long. 100. 50. E., lat. 7. 5. N.

Putapsco, a river of Maryland flowing S. E. into the Chesapeake. It forms the harbour of Baltimore.

Putay, a town of France, department of Loiret, where the English were defeated, in 1429, by Joan of Arc. 15 m. N. W. of Orleans.

Putchouge, p.v. Suffolk Co. N. Y. on Long-Island.

Puterno, a town of Sicily, in Val di Demona, built on the ruins of Hybla, so celebrated for its honey. 15 m. W. of Catania.

Puterson, p.t. Essex Co. N. J. on the Passaic. Pop. 7,331. It is situated just below the falls of the river, and has recently grown into importance by its manufactures. There are 17 cotton factories, running 30,000 spindles; and consuming annually 2,000,000 pounds of cotton; a manufacture of sail cloth with 1,600 spindles and consuming yearly 600,000 pounds of flax; a slitting and rolling mill working annually 896,000 pounds of iron; nail factories making yearly more than 850,000 pounds of nails; besides iron and brass foundries and manufactures of machinery. The capital employed is more than 1,300,000 dollars.

Putesville, p.v. Breckenridge. Co. Ken.

Pathad, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire, 2 m. W. of Dysnart, long famous for its manufacture of nails, and now including different branches of weaving woolen and linen.

Patmos, or Patinos, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, lying 26 m. S. of the Isle of Samos, famous for being the place where St. John wrote the Apocalypse. It is 25 m. in circumference, but produces very little, only a few valleys being capable of cultivation; partridges, rabbits, quails, turtles, pigeons, and snipes abound. In the midst of the island rises a mountain, terminated by the convent of St. John, the abbot of which is the prince of the country. The hermitage of the Apocalypse is situate on the side of the mountain between the convent and the port of Seala. It leads to the church of the Apocalypse, which is built against a grotto in a rock, pointed out as the asylum of St. John, during his exile. The inhabitants are chiefly sailors or ship-builders; and have some trade in cotton, and stockings of their manufacture. Long. 26. 24. E., lat. 37. 24. N.

Patna, a city of Hindoostan, capital of Bahar, seated on the right bank of the Ganges, opposite the influx of the Gunduck, and fortified with a wall and citadel. In the citadel were confined the British prisoners taken in 1764, by Meer Cossim, nabob of Bengal, by whose order they were brutally massacred. This occasioned the storming of the city since which period it has acknowledged the British sway, and is the residence of the provincial courts, &c. The buildings are high but the streets are narrow. It is a place of considerable trade. 320 m. N. W. of Calcutta. Long. 85. 10. E., lat. 24. 35. N.

Patras, a sea-port of Greece, in the Morea, and a bishop's see. The Jews, who are one-third of the inhabitants, have 4 synagogues, and there are several handsome Greek churches. The principal articles of trade are silk, leather, honey, manna, pomegranates, citrons, and oranges. It is seated on the side of a hill, near the entrance of the gulf of Lepanto, 14 m. S. W. of Lepanto. Long. 21. 45. E., lat. 38. 17. N.

Patri, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, situate near a lake of the same name, 13 m. N. W. of Naples.

Patrica, a town of the papal states, in Campagna di Roma, 13 m. S. of Rome.

Patrick, a county in the E. district of Virginia. Pop. 7,303. The Court House is 270 m. S. W. Richmond.

Patrickville, p.v. Craven Co. N. C.

Patrimony of St. Peter, a province of Italy, in the papal states, 43 m. long and 30 broad, bounded N. by Orvieto, E. by Umbria and Sabina, S. by Campagna di Roma, and S. W. by the sea. It was granted by the emperor Constantine, to support a church he had built in honour of St. Peter, and for the use of a bishop of Rome. The country is fertile in corn and fruit, and produces much alum.

Patrington, a town in E. Yorkshire, Eng. Here the Roman road from the Picts' wall ended; seated near the mouth of the Humber, 18 m. E. S. E. of Hull and 188 N. of London.

Patschkau, a town of Prussian Silesia, on the river Neisse, 13 m. W. of Neisse.

Patta, an island on the coast of Zanguebar, 10 m. in circuit, inhabited chiefly by Arabians, seated at the mouth of a river of the same name. Long. 43. 0. E., lat. 1. 56. N.

Pattan, a town of Hindoostan, in Nepal, containing several temples, and about 24,000 houses. 10 m. E. S. E. of Catmandu.

Pattoubsburg, p.v. Botetourt Co. Va. on James river, 190 m. W. Richmond.

Pattun, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of the same name, in Guzerat. It is seated on the Surswutty, 48 m. N. of Amedabad. Long. 72. 30. E., lat. 23. 45. N.

Patucket, or Patucket Falls, on the Merrimack, between Lowell and Dracut, are a violent rapid of 30 feet descent in a course of 60 rods. A bridge is thrown over them, and on the banks of the river are numerous manufactures. See Lowell.

Patuxent, a navigable river of Maryland, which flows into the W. side of Chesapeake Bay, 30 m. S. of Annapolis.

Patzow, a town of Bohemia, in Bechin, with a Carmelite convent, and manufactures of cloth. 17 m. E. of Tabor.

Pau, a town of France, capital of the department of Lower Pyrenees, with a castle where Henry VI. was born. It was the ancient residence of the kings of Navarre; and, before the revolution, the capital of Bearn. Here are manufactures of cloth, linen, &c., and the environs are productive in wine and fruit. It is seated on an eminence, by the river called the Gave de Pau, 97 m. S. of Bourdeaux. Long. 0. 23. W., lat. 43. 7. N.

Paul, St., an island in the Indian Ocean. See Amsterdam.

Paul, St., a town of Brazil, in a district of its name, founded by a colony of Jesuits and Indians in 1570. The inhabitants are estimated at 20,000, the greater part of whom are farmers. The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence, surrounded on three sides by low meadow-land, and washed at the base by rivulets which almost insulate it in rainy weather. It is 36 m. from the sea and 190 W. of Rio Janeiro. Long. 45. 56. W., lat. 23. 26. S.

Paul, St., a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, 18 m. W. N. W. of Arras.

Paul, St., a town in the department of Upper Vienne, 10 m. S. E. of Limoges.

Paul Trois Chateaux, St., a town of France, department of Drome, on the side of a hill, 16 m S. of Montelimar.

Paula, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citra, 12 m. W. N. W. of Cosenza.

Paulograd, a town of Russia, in the government of Catharinenslaf, 32 m. E. of Catharinenslaf. Long. 35. 54. E., lat. 47. 10. N.

Pausa, a town of Saxony, in Voigtland, 7 m. N. N. W. of Plauen.

Pauslippa, a mountain 5 m. W. of Naples, celebrated for a grotto, which is a passage cut through the mountain nearly a m. in length, 20 feet in breadth and 30 in height. People of fashion drive through this passage with torches; but the country people find their way by the light which enters at the extremities, and at two holes pierced through the mountain, near the middle of the grotto. On this mountain is the tomb of Virgil; and its N. and E. sides are covered with villas and gardens.

Pauzk, a town of W. Prussia, in Pomerelia, near the W. coast of the gulf of Dantzic, 25 m. N. W. of Dantzie.

Pavia, a province of Austrian Italy, in the government of Milan, called for its fertility the Garden of the Milanese. It is bounded by Parma, Milan, and Lodi, and comprises an area of 320 sq. m. with about 120,000 inhabitants.

Pavia, the capital of the foregoing province, and a bishop's see, with a celebrated university, and a citadel. Besides the cathedral, there are 18 churches, and numerous convents. The chief articles of commerce are corn, hemp, cheese, and wine. It was once the capital of Lombardy, and has undergone various changes. In 1706 it fell into the hands of Austria; in 1796 it was taken by the French, and retained till the peace of 1814. It is seated in a beautiful plain, on the Tesino, near its conflux with the Po, 17 m. S. of Milan. Long. 9. 15. E., lat. 45. 13. N.

Pavaosau, the capital of the Isle of St. Thomas, on the coast of Guinea, and the see of a bishop, with a fort and a good harbour. It lies under the equator, in long. S. 30. W.

Pawlings, p.t. Dutchess Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,705.

Pawlet, p.t. Rutland Co. Vt. 35 m. N. Bennington.

Pawnees, a tribe of Indians in the Missouri Ter. They comprise 3 distinct bands independent in government, but connected by a general interest and carry on wars in concert. Their number is between 6 and 7,000. The Grand Pawnees reside in a village on the Loup Fork of the Missouri and have about 3,500 souls. The village of the Republican Pawnees is 4 m. distant, and contains 1,000. The Loup Pawnees are established 3 m. farther up the river; their numbers are about 2,000. They live chiefly by hunting, but practise a little agriculture, and keep horses and dogs.

Patucket, a river rising in Bristol Co. Mass. and flowing S. into Seekonk river, 4 m. N. E. of Providence, R. I.

Patucket, p.t. Bristol Co. Mass. on the above river. Pop. 1,458. The river here divides Massachusetts from R. I. On the opposite side is the town of North Providence in Providence Co. R. I. Pop. 3,503. The two towns are united by a bridge, and together form one of the largest manufacturing places in the country. The manufactures are mostly of cotton; they employ 45,000 spindles and 9,000 looms. There are three falls in the river which afford a very great water power.

Patuxet, a river of R. I. flowing easterly into Narraganset Bay, 5 m. below Providence. It has many falls and a great number of cotton factories are situated upon its banks.

Parotuzel, p.v. in Warwick and Cranston townships R. I. at the mouth of the above river, with manufactures of woolen and cotton. It is a port of entry and has some commerce.

Paxton, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 55 m. W. Boston. Pop. 597; also townships in Dauphin Co. Pa. and Ross Co. Ohio.

Pazu, one of the Ionian islands, a little S. of Corfu, about 15 m. in circumference, inhabited by about 6,500 Greeks. It produces wine, oil, and almonds. Long. 20. 20. E., lat. 39. 21. N.

Payerne, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, on the river Broye, 22 m. S. W. of Bern.

Paymogo, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 42 m. N. by E. of Ayamonte and 73 N. W. of Seville.

Paynesville, p.v. Rockingham Co. N. C.

Pays de Vaul, a canton of Switzerland, extending along the lake of Geneva, and rising gradually from the edge of that lake. It is richly laid out in vineyards, corn-fields, and meadows, and chequered with many villages and towns. Lausanne is the capital.

Paz, La, a city of Buenos Ayres, capital of a district of its name, and a bishop's see. Besides the cathedral, it contains four churches, an hospital, a college, and several convents. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, in a valley abounding in wine and fruits, 220 m. N. W. of Plata. Long. 68. 50. W., lat. 17. 0. S.

Pazy, a town of Romania, and a bishop's see, 8 m. S. W. of Gallipoli.

Peacham, p.t. Caledonia Co. Vt. Pop. 1,351.

Peachtown, a village of Tompkins Co. N. Y.

Peak, a mountainous tract in the N. W. part of Derbyshire, Eng. which abounds in lead, iron, millstones, marble, alabaster, coal, and a coarse sort of crystals. It is much visited on account of its extraordinary caverns and other curiosities. The "Wonders of the Peak," which have been celebrated both in prose and verse, are noticed in this work under the articles Buxton, Castleton, Chatsworth, and Tideswell.

Peaks of Otter, a portion of the Blue ridge of mountains in Virginia, being the highest summits in the state. They are 3,103 feet in height.

Pea-Patch, a small island in the Delaware, a little above the mouth of the canal. Fort Delaware upon this island, commands the passage up the river.

Pearlington, p.v. Hancock Co. Miss.

Pearl Islands, islands lying in the bay of Panama. The inhabitants of Panama have plantations on them.

Pearl River, a navigable river of the state of Mississippi, which after flowing through a fertile territory, falls into Lake Borgne, a little E. of Lake Pontchartrain.

Pease, a township of Belmont Co. Ohio.

Pechlarn a town of Austria, on the right bank of the Danube. The river is very wide; and here the Romans, who called it Præclara, had a harbour for their navy. 14 m. W. of St. Polten.

Pedee, a navigable river of the United States, which rises in N. Carolina, and is there called Yadkin River; on entering S. Carolina, it takes the name of Pedee, and flows into Winyaw Bay at Georgetown.

Pedenra, a town of Austrian Illyria, in Istria, 25 m. S. E. of Capo d'Istria.

Pedernira, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, on the sea-coast, 33 m. S. W. of Leiria.

Pedir, a town of Sumatra, on the N. coast, 40 m. E. S. E. of Acheen. Long. 96. 36. E., lat. 5. 22. N.

Pedraza, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, with a castle, in which the two sons of Francis I. were confined. It was the birth-place of the emperor Trajan. 25 m. N. E. of Segovia.

Pedro Point, the most northern point of the is. and of Ceylon, opposite Point Calymere on the continent of Hindoostan. Long. 80. 27. E., lat. 9. 52. N.

Pedro, St., one of the islands in the Pacific Ocean called Marquesas. Long. 138. 51. W., lat. 9. 58. S.—Also the name of a large river of Mexico, which runs into the Rio del Norte, on the borders of Cohahuila;—a river of Brazil which falls into the Atlantic;—and several inconsiderable settlements in S. America, consisting only of a few scattered families of Indians.

Peables, a borough of Scotland, capital of Peeblesshire, seated on the Tweed, over which is an elegant bridge. It is divided by Eddlestone Water in the Old and New Town, has manufactures of carpets and serges, and is noted for its excellent ale. On a projecting rock near the Tweed, stands Nidpath Castle; and on an eminence on the E. stands Horseburg Castle. It is 22 m. S. of Edinburgh. Long. 3. 7. W., lat. 55. 40. N.

Peeblesshire, a county of Scotland, 30 m. long and 12 broad; bounded N. by Edinburghshire, E. by Selkirkshire, S. by Dumfriesshire, and W. by Lanarkshire. It is divided into 16 parishes, containing 10,046 inhabitants. Its hills, among which are those of Tweedsmuir, abound with salubrious springs, and feed numbers of sheep and cattle. The principal rivers are the Tweed and Lyne; the former runs through the county, whence it is sometimes called Tweedale.

Pee Pee, a township of Pike Co. Ohio.

Peekskill, p.t. Westchester Co. N. Y. on the Hudson. 50 m. N. New York.

Peel, a town on the W. coast of the Isle of Man, situate on a spacious bay. At the S. extremity of the bay is Peel Isle, a rock of great magnitude and height, on the summit of which is a castle, and the dilapidated cathedral of the isle, dedicated to St. Germain, the first bishop, who lived in the fifth century. The town is much decayed and the inhabitants are indolent and poor. 10 m. W. of Douglas. Long. 4. 40. W., lat. 54. 13. N.

Peeling, p.t. Grafton Co. N. H. Pop. 291

Peene, a river of Germany, which rises out of some lakes in Mecklenburg, flows through Hither Pomerania to the western branch of the Oder which is thence called Peene, and runs by Wolgast into the Baltic Sea, at Peenemunde.

Peenemunde, a town and fort of Prussian Pomerania, in the isle of Usedom, and the residence of the governor of the island. It commands the entrance and mouth of the Peene, near which it stands. 6 m. N. by E. of Wolgast. Long. 13. 55. E., lat. 54. 8. N.

Peer, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Limburg, 24 m. N. N. W. of Maestricht.

Pegau, a town of Saxony, on the Elster, 10 m. S. S. W. of Leipzig.

Pegau, a town of the Austrian states, in Stiria, near which are considerable lead mines. It is seated near the Meur, 9 m. N. N. W. of Gratz.

Pegna de Francia, a town of Spain, in Leon, 27 m. S. S. E. Ciudad Rodrigo.

Pegnafel, a town of Spain, in Leon, with a palace, and a strong castle. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, near the Duero, 38 m. E. S. E. of Valladolid. Long. 4. 0. W., lat. 41. 33. N.

Pegnafirme, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, at the mouth of the Mongola, 36 m. N. N. W. of Lisbon.

Pegnaflor, a town of Spain, in Asturias, seated on the Pravia, 8 m. N. W. of Oviedo.

Pegnaflor, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 48 m. N. E. of Seville.

Pegnagarcia, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 26 m. E. of Castel Branco.

Pagnamacor, a fortified town of Portugal, in Beira, with a castle, 31 m. E. N. E. of Castel Branco. Long. 6. 52. W., lat. 40. 6. N.

Pegnaranda, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 39 m. S. by E. of Burgos.—Another, 33 m. N. N. W. of Avila.

Pegnitz, a town of Bavarian Franconia, on a river of the same name, near its source, 10 m. S. of Bayreuth.

Pegnon de Velez, a sea-port and fortress of Morocco, seated on a rock in the Mediterranean, near the town of Velez. It was built by the Spaniards in 1508, taken by the Moors in 1522, and retaken in 1664. It is 73 m. S. E. of Ceuta. Long. 4. 16. W., lat. 35. 12. N.

Pegu, a province of Birmah, bounded N. by Arracan and Ava, W. and S. by the bay of Bengal, and E. by Siam. It is very fruitful in corn, roots, pulse, and fruits: its other products are teak timber, elephants, elephants' teeth, bees-wax, lac, saltpetre, iron, lead, tin, petroleum, very fine rubies, small diamonds, and plenty of lead. The inhabitants are generally of low stature and have small eyes. The woman are much fairer than the men, small, but well proportioned. In the low flat part of the country, which is liable to be overflowed, the houses are built upon stakes, and in time of inundation the inhabitants communicate with each other by boats. Pegu was long an independent kingdom, and, in 1752, conquered the kingdom of Birmah; but Alompra, whom the king of Pegu had continued as chief at Monchabou, soon afterwards revolted, and in 1757 reduced Pegu to a dependent province.

Pegu, a city of the above province, erected on the site of the former city which was ruined by Alompra in 1757. The ancient city was a quadrangle, each side measuring nearly a mile and a half, and surrounded by strong walls and other fortifications, now in ruins. The magnificent temple of Shoemadoo still exists as a monument of its ancient greatness. The present city occupies about one-fourth of the former area. On the N. and E. sides it borders on the old wall, and is fenced round by a stockade. It is seated on a river of the same name, 300 m. S. of Ummerapoor. Long. 96. 11. E., lat. 17. 40. N.

Pei-ho, or White-river, a river of China, in Petcheli, which passes near Pekin, and by the cities of Tong-tchou and Tiensing, into the Yellow Sea. The tide flows 110 m., and frequently submerges the flat country on its banks.

Peina, a town of Hanover, in the principality of Hildesheim, with a palace and a Capuchin convent. 20 m. E. of Hanover.

Peipus, or Tchudskoi, a large lake of Russia, between the governments of Petersburg and Livonia. The river Naurova issues from this lake, by which it has a communication at Narva with the gulf of Finland.

Peshiore, or Peshawar, a town of Afghanistan, capital of a fine and populous district of its name.

The inhabitants are estimated at 100,000. Here the Hon. M. S. Elphinston had his audience with the Afghan king in 1809. 95 m. S. S. E. of Cabul. Long. 70. 37. E., lat. 33. 32. N.

Peiskretscham, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the government of Oppeln, 39 m. S. E. of Oppeln.

Peitz, a town of Prussia, in the Uecker mark of Brandenburg, with manufactures of cloth and yarn; and in the neighbourhood are iron-works. It stands on the Mauke, which runs into the Spree, 10 m. N. N. E. of Cotbus and 37 S. S. E. of Frankfurt.

Pekin, the capital of the empire of China, in the province of Pe-tche-li. Its name signifies the Northern Court, to distinguish it from Nan-king, the Southern Court, where the emperor formerly resided. This capital forms an oblong square, and is divided into two cities; one inhabited by Chinese, the other by Tartars. Those two cities, exclusive of the suburbs, are nearly 14 miles in circumference. The walls of the city are 28 feet high, 24 thick at the base, and 12 at the top; and there are spacious towers at 70 feet distance from each other. The gates are high, and well arched, supporting buildings of nine stories high; the lowest of which is for the soldiers when they come off guard: they are nine in number, three in the S. wall, and two in each of the other sides. The middle gate, on the E. side, opens into the Tartar or imperial city, which is a space within the general enclosure, about a mile from N. to S. and three-fourths of a mile from E. to W., with a rivulet winding through it. A wall of large red polished bricks, 20 feet high, covered with a roof of tiles painted yellow and varnished, surrounds this space, in which are contained the imperial palace and gardens, the public offices, and lodgings for the ministers, the eunuchs, artificers, and tradesmen belonging to the court. Between the other two gates in the S. wall, and the opposite ones on the N. side of the city, run two straight streets, each 4 m. in length and 120 feet wide. One street of the same width runs from one of the eastern to the corresponding western gate, but the other is interrupted by the imperial city, round the walls of which it is carried. The other streets branch from these main streets at right angles, and are very narrow. The houses have no windows nor openings to the street, except the great shops; most of them are poorly built, and have only a ground floor. It is astonishing to see the concourse of people in the main streets, yet not one Chinese woman among them, and the confusion occasioned by the number of horses, camels, mules, asses, waggons, carts, and chairs; without reckoning the several mobs which gather about the jugglers, ballad-singers, &c. Persons of distinction have always a horseman to go before them and clear the way. All the great streets are guarded by soldiers, who patrol night and day with swords by their sides, and whips in their hands, to chastise those who make any disturbance, or take them into custody. The minor streets have lattice gates at their entrance into the great streets, which are shut up at night, and guarded by soldiers, who suffer no assemblies in the streets at that time. The emperor's palace and garden, which occupy two-thirds of the Tartar city, is surrounded by a brick wall, 2 m. in length, with pavilions at each corner encompassed by galleries, supported by columns; the architecture of the stupendous pile of buildings of which the palace consists is entirely different from that of the Europeans. The temples and the towers of Pekin are so numerous that it is difficult to count them. The surrounding country is sandy and unproductive, but provisions of all kinds are exceedingly plentiful, being brought, as well as the merchandise, from all parts by canals from the rivers, which are always crowded with vessels of different sizes. An earthquake which happened here, in 1731, buried above 100,000 persons in the ruins of the houses. The inhabitants are estimated at 2,000,000. It is 60 m. S. of the great wall. Long. 116. 27. E., lat. 39. 54. N.

Pelagnisi, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, about 8 m. in circumference. Long. 24. 12. E., lat. 39. 30. N.

Pelagrino, a mountain on the N. coast of Sicily, nearly 2 m. W. of Palermo. On this mount is a cavern, in which is the image of St. Rosolio, the patroness of Palermo, who is said to have died here: and round this cave a church is built, where priests attend to watch the precious relics, and receive the offerings of the pilgrims.

Pelew Islands, or Palaos, a group of islands in the Pacific Ocean, lying between 133. and 136. E. long. and 6. and 8. N. lat. They are encircled on the W. side by a reef of coral; and are 18 in number, of which the principal ones are Oroolong, Emmngs, Emillegue, Artingal, Corooraa, and Pelelew. They are well covered with trees of various kinds and sizes; and every part of that called Corooraa bears the marks of industry and good cultivation. Captain Wilson, of the Antelope E. India packet, who was wrecked here in 1783, found the natives simple in their manners, delicate in their sentiments, and friendly in their disposition. The astonishment which they manifested on seeing the English, plainly showed that they had never before seen a white man. They had no idea of the nature of powder and shot, and were exceedingly amazed on seeing its effects. Their principal arms consist of bamboo darts, from 5 to 8 feet long, pointed with the wood of the betel-nut tree; but there are short ones for different marks, which are thrown by means of a stick two feet long. The chiefs wear a bone round one of their wrists, in the form of a bracelet, which, being a mark of great honour conferred by the king, is never to be parted with but with life. They are notail of the same degree, as appeared from a difference in the bone they wore. Captain Wilson was invested with the highest order of the bone. With respect to property, in these islands, a man's house or canoe is considered as his own, as is also the land allotted to him, as long as he occupies and cultivates it; but, whenever he removes to another place, the ground reverts to the king. The natives make canoes out of the bark of trees, some large enough to carry 30 men. Yams and cocoa nuts, being their chief articles of subsistence, are attended with the utmost care; and the milk of the latter is their common drink. On particular occasions, they add to their ordinary fare certain sweetmeats, and a sweet beverage, obtained by the aid of a syrup, extracted either from the palm-tree or the sugarcane. Their houses are raised about three feet from the ground, the foundation beams being laid on large stones, whence spring the upright supports of their sides, which are crossed by other timbers grooved together, and fastened by wooden pins, the intermediate space being closely filled up with bamboos and palm-tree leaves, platted together: the inside is without any divisions, forming one great room. They have little baskets, nicely woven from slips of the plantain-tree, and wooden baskets with covers, neatly carved, and inlaid with shells. No one goes abroad without a basket, which usually contains some betel-nut, a comb, a knife, and a little twine. The best knives are made of a piece of the large mother-of-pearl oyster, ground narrow, and the outward side a little polished. The combs are made of the orange-tree, of which there are a few of the Seville kind; the handle and teeth are fastened to the solid wood. The fishing hooks are of tortoise shell; and twine, cord, and fishing-nets, are well manufactured from the husks of the cocoa-nut. Of the plantain leaf are formed mats, which serve the people as beds. They also use a plantain leaf at meals, instead of a plate; and the shell of a cocoa-nut supplies the place of a cup. There are vessels of a kind of earthen ware, of a reddish brown colour, in which they boil their fish, yams, &c. A bundle of cocoa-nut husks serves them for a broom; and thick bamboos, with bores five or six inches in diameter, are the buckets or cisterns. The shell of the tortoise is here remarkably beautiful, and the natives have discovered the art of moulding it into little trays or dishes and spoons. Some of the great ladies have also bracelets of the same manufacture, and ear-rings inlaid with shells. The Pelelows, in general, are stout and well made, rather above the middle stature, and of a deep copper colour. Their hair is long, and generally formed into one large loose curl round their heads. The men are entirely naked: but the women wear two little aprons, one before, the other behind. Both sexes are tattooed, have their teeth made black by art, and the cartilage between the nostrils bored, through which they frequently put a sprig or blossom of some plant or shrub. The men have the left ear bored, and the women both; a few of the former wear beads in the perforated ear, the latter either the leaf, or an ear-ring of inlaid tortoise-shell. Both sexes are very expert swimmers; and the men are admirable divers. Such an opinion had Abba Thulle, the king of the island, entertained of the English that on their departure, he permitted his second son, Lee Boo, to accompany them to England, where he arrived in 1784. In a few months after, this hopeful youth died of the small-pox, and the E. India Company erected a monument over his grave in Rotherhithe church-yard.

Penbrooke, a borough of Wales, capital of Pembrokeshire. It stands on the innermost creek of Milford-haven, over which are two bridges, but the harbour is become injured by the rubbish of the neighbouring lime-stone quarries. It was anciently surrounded by walls, and had a magnificent castle, the remains of which still give it an appearance of uncommon grandeur. 263 m. W. by N. of London. Long. 4. 48. W., lat. 51. 43. N.

Pembrokeshire, a county of Wales, 37 m. long and 28 broad; surrounded on all sides by the sea, except on the E., where it is bounded by Caermarthenshire, and Cardiganshire. It contains 325,600 acres, is divided into 7 hundreds and 145 parishes, has one city and 7 market towns, and sends three members to parliament. Pop. in 1821, 74,009. The rivers are inconsiderable. A great part of the county is plain and tolerably fertile, consisting of rich meadows and arable land. The N. E. part alone is mountainous, which, however yield good pasturage for sheep and cattle. This county abounds with objects of antiquarian interest, such as druidical circles, cromlechs, single stone monuments, castles, &c.

Penigewasset, one of the head streams of the Merrimack in N. H. It joins the Winipisiogee, at Sanbornton.

Penang. See Prince of Wales Island.

Penautier, a town of France, department of Aude, 4 m. N. of Carcassone.

Pendennis, a castle in Cornwall, Eng. on a hill of the same name, on Falmouth Bay. It was built by Henry VIII. for the security of the coast, and on the opposite side of the bay is another called St. Maws. It is a little to the S. E. of Falmouth, the harbour of which it defends.

Pendleton, a large village in Lancashire, Eng. 2 m. W. N. W. of Manchester. The inhabitants are principally employed in the trade and manufactures of the various Manchester goods.

Pendleton, a county of the E. district of Virginia. Pop. 6,271. Franklin is the capital; a county of Kentucky. Pop. 3,866. Falmouth is the capital; also a town in Pickens Dis. S. C. 100 m. N. W. Columbia.

Peniche, a strong sea-port of Portugal, in Estremadura, with a good harbour and a citadel; seated on a peninsula, 48 m. N. W. of Lisbon. Long. 9. 20. W., lat. 39. 22. N.

Penig, a town of Saxony, and the chief place of one of the lordships forming the county of Schomburg, with a manufacture of woollen stuffs and a pottery; seated on the Mulda, 11 m. N. W. of Chemnitz.

Peniscola, a town of Spain, in Valencia, seated on a high point of land, surrounded on three sides by the sea, and of difficult access by land. It is 30 m. S. by W. of Tortosa and 80 N. N. E. of Valencia. Long. 0. 24. E., lat. 40. 24. N.

Penfield, p.t. Monroe Co. N. Y. 6 m. E. Rochester. Pop. 4,475; also a township of New Brunswick in Charlotte Co. at the Bay of Fundy.

Penishehr, a town of Afghanistan, capital of a district in the province of Cabul, 46 m. N. of Cabul.

Penistone, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. with a small woollen manufacture. It has a handsome parish church, three meeting-houses, a grammar school, and three other schools free to the whole parish. The environs, especially to the W., have rather a dreary and barren appearance. The town is seated on the right bank of the river Don, 13 m. S. S. E. of Huddersfield and 177 N. N. W. of London.

Penkridge, a decayed town in Staffordshire, Eng. seated on the river Penk, 6 m. S. of Stafford and 129 N. W. of London.

Penkum, a town of Prussian Pomerania, seated on the Randow, between two small lakes, 15 m. S. W. of Stettin.

Penmaenmauer, a mountain of Wales, in Caernarvonshire, overhanging the sea, and rising to the height of 1,540 feet. It is 4 m. W. by S. of Aberconway, and the road to Holyhead crosses it on the side of a dreadful precipice, from which it is defended by a wall.

Penm, a township of Philadelphia Co. Pa. adjoining the city, also townships in Chester, Northampton and Schuylkill Cos. Pa. and Morgan Co. Ohio.

Pennsylvania, one of the United States, bounded N. by Lake Erie and New York, E. by New York and New Jersey, S. by Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, and W. by Virginia and Ohio. It extends from 39. 42. to 42. N. lat. and from 74. to 80. 40. W. long. and contains 43,950 sq. m. The centre of the state is occupied by the great Appalachian chain of mountains, which here spread out to their greatest width, and occupy two thirds of the whole territory. The Delaware bounds the state on the East. The Susquehanna with its numerous branches intersect nearly the whole mountainous region. The Allegany, Monongahela and Ohio, water the western parts. A small portion of the northern limit is washed by Lake Erie.

In the country E. of the mountains, the climate does not differ greatly from that part of New Jersey in the same parallel, and may be characterised in general terms as mild and temperate. The mountainous country lies exposed to the chilling north-west winds, and the winter in this part is severe, with deep snows. W. of the mountains, the climate becomes milder; here the easterly winds of the Atlantic coast are unknown, and the country is not exposed to the sudden changes which they occasion. The heat of the summer is not so great as upon the coast, and the autumn is long, serene and temperate.

East of the mountains the soil is excellent; in this part the land is level, and enriched from the washing of the hills and uplands. In the interior the soil is rocky and barren, with fertile spots in the valleys, and along the borders of the streams. Some of these valleys contain land as rich as any in the state; but generally the soil being a black mould, two or three feet deep, and among the mountains, is not well adapted to cultivation. W. of the mountains, the country improves, and around the head streams of the Ohio, is generally fertile

The most important mineral is anthracite coal, in which this state far surpasses all other portions of the country. In no part of the world, indeed, is this valuable material found so abundantly as in Pennsylvania. It abounds in the Wyoming and Lackawanna valley, between the Blue Ridge and the Susquehanna. The anthracite district is principally occupied by mountains running parallel to the Blue Ridge, often broad, with table summits, and rising generally about 1,500 feet above the ocean.

The coal occurs in the greatest quantity in those parts of this region most accessible by water. Extensive veins and beds range from the Lehigh to the Susquehanna, crossing the head waters of Schuylkill and Swatara, about 10 m. N. W. of the Blue Ridge. It is abundant near the Susquehanna, and Lackawanna, but in no part is it so plentiful as at Manch Chunk, a village on the Lehigh, a branch of the Susquehanna.

The anthracite region of the Susquehanna lies in the valley formed by the Susquehanna and the Lackawanna, one of its branches; this region is distinguished as the valleys of the Wyoming and Lackawanna, but is in fact without any natural division, and constitutes a single formation. It is between 60 and 70 m. long, and 5 broad.

The coal lies in beds, and not as commonly, in veins; these are of every thickness, from a foot to 27 feet; none are much esteemed that are less than three or four; few are wrought that are less than 6. The lateral extent of the beds is immense; they break out in the precipices and hills, and upon the banks of the Susquehanna and Lackawanna, and form in some places the pavement of these rivers; they appear in the sides and channels of almost every stream from the mountain; they blacken the soil in numerous places; and wells are often sunk in the coal. In many of the mines of this region, the naturalist is gratified by seeing vast deposits of vegetable impressions and remains which accompany the coal, usually in the slate which forms the roof, and occasionally in that of the floor; they exist also in the sandstone, and sometimes even in the coal itself. There are instances where they fill the slate for a space of ten feet in thickness. The impressions are very perfect, indicating repose and calm at the time of their deposition, and excluding the possibility of transport from distant countries.

There are many species of ferns, none of them, it is said, modern, and most or all, tropical. There are impressions sometimes several feet long and of the same width, of the bark of gigantic vegetables; some botanists say they are palms; occasionally there are entire limbs carbonized, and there are frequently broad leaves 6 or 7 inches in diameter. Culmiferous plants are numerous, and also the aquatic algae and rushes; the leaves of the plants are usually in full expansion, the most delicate parts of their structure being accurately preserved or copied. Large quantities of clay and iron and bog ore are connected with the coal strata of this valley, and chalybeate mineral springs occur in numerous places.

The western part of Pennsylvania is as abundantly supplied with bituminous coal as the eastern is with anthracite. It is found on the rivers Conemaugh, Alleghany, Monongahela and Ohio, and in numerous places W. of the Alleghany ridge, which is, with some exceptions, its eastern boundary. It occurs upon these mountains at a considerable elevation, and elsewhere, in nearly a horizontal position, alternating with grey sand stone, often micaceous, and bordered by argillaceous schist. The veins are generally narrow, rarely above 6 feet in width. The coal is abundant, and of excellent quality near Pittsburg.

Springs holding salt in solution, are common in various parts of the bituminous coal region; they are generally weak near the surface, but deep springs, disclosed by boring, are often strong. One of these, which contains as much salt as the ordinary waters of Salina, was discovered by boring, about 20 m. from Montrose, bordering on the state of New York. The most considerable saline springs are on the banks of the Conemaugh and Kiskaminitas, about 30 m. E. of Pittsburg. These rivers for many miles wind rapidly through rocky ravines bordered by hills of 300 and 400 feet in height, that rise with steep acclivities, presenting mural precipices of grey sandstone, in places jutting over the road and torrent. The sandstone is ordinarily fine, but is sometimes a coarse aggregate, principally quartz. Its thin laminæ are generally in a horizontal position. The lower strata, often in a decomposing state, contains vegetable impressions. This rock usually rests on dark and very fissile argillaceous schist, that contains much sulphuret of iron, and forms the roof and floor of numerous beds of bituminous coal adjacent to the streams. These beds are from a few inches to 5 feet in thickness, and occur at various altitudes, from 200 feet above the river to a great depth below. Large quantities of salt are made at these springs. Iron ore is found in abundance in the extensive calcareous valley, between the ridges of the Appalachian mountains, particularly in the counties of Centre and Huntingdon. It is mostly raised from beds of argillaceous earth, resting on limestone. The iron manufactured in the counties before mentioned is distinguished for its tenacity and malleability. Bituminous coal from the Alleghany mountain is often used for making pig iron.

The Bedford Springs near the town of that name among the mountains in the S. of the state, were discovered in 1804. They arise from a limestone rock, at the foot of a mountain. The water is cold, odourless, soft and agreeable to the taste; it is charged with iron, magnesia and lime, and is efficacious in removing cutaneous and chronic complaints. There are several salt springs in the state. Wild animals are abundant among the mountains and in all the unsettled parts. The most remarkable of these is the cougar, or catamount, sometimes called panther

This animal is common to both parts of the western continent but is not known in the eastern.

Copper ore, in a variety of combinations, is found in many places among the mountains. There is a lead mine at Perkiomen. At Mercer, on the western border of the state, is a manufactory of copperas from iron pyrites.

The limestone of this state affords good marble. On the Schuylkill, in Montgomery county, is a quarry of bluish marble, which is extensively wrought, and exported. Many of the buildings in Philadelphia are ornamented with it. There are quarries of slate in York, Lancaster and Wayne counties, in the eastern part of the state.

The state is divided into two districts, the eastern and western. The counties are 51, the townships 651. The pop. is 1,347,672. Harrisburg is the seat of government, and Philadelphia the largest city. The other large towns are Pittsburg, Reading, and Lancaster. Agriculture is skilfully conducted in the eastern parts. Wheat, maize, garden vegetables and fruit are raised in great quantities. In the interior and western parts the farmers also cultivate buckwheat, rye, oats, barley, hemp and flax. The commerce of the state is chiefly confined to the single port of Philadelphia. The port of Presqu Isle, on Lake Erie has also some commerce, and the internal trade across the mountains is very active. The shipping of the state in 1828 was 104,614 tons. The imports during the same year were 10,100,152 dollars. The exports of domestic produce 2,617,152 dollars. Total exports 4,089,435 dollars. The manufactures of Pennsylvania are very extensive. At Philadelphia are large manufactures of cotton, iron, glass and china ware, besides the great variety of articles made in small establishments. The cloth annually manufactured is estimated at 24,000,000 yards. At Pittsburg and in the neighborhood, are very large establishments of various kinds. The glass manufactures of this place are particularly celebrated, and furnish cut glass ware, and window glass, equal to any in the country. The glass is white, clear and excellent, both in texture and polish. The cotton manufacture is also extensive, and occupies several large establishments here and in the neighbouring towns of Alleghany and Birmingham. The manufactures of iron employ 9 founderies, 8 rolling mills and 9 nail factories, which make 18 tons of nails daily. There are also 7 manufactories of steam engines, and lately the manufacture of sugar mills, and small steam machinery to drive them, has become an important branch of business. There are two establishments in Pittsburg for the manufacture of steel. There are great numbers of iron works in various parts of the state. At York, is a foundry for church bells, manufactories of cutlery, surgical instruments, &c. Elegant carpeting is also made at the same place. At Mayanunk, on the Schuylkill, are large cotton and woolen manufactories. At Chambersburg, besides other establishments, are extensive manufactories of edge tools, axes, carpenters' tools, hatchets, chisels, &c. of a quality and temper equal to any made in England. At Bush Hill, near Philadelphia, is a manufacture of elegant floor cloths, from hemp and flax, and of table cloths from cotton. At Bethany, in Wayne county, is a glass manufactory, which produces 450,000 feet of window glass annually. At Meadville is a manufactory of paper from straw, which is extensively used for wrapping paper. This is the first successful attempt to make paper from straw.

In the western part are large manufactures of woot from springs. The principal salt works are on the Conemaugh, a stream running into the Alleghany. The salt manufactured at Kiskaminitas and Conemaugh has in some years amounted to 300,000 bushels; it is sold at from 20 to 25 cents per bushel at the works; the expense of manufacturing does not exceed 10 cents a bushel.

A large portion of the numerous salt works are near the river in the ravines of the Kiskaminitas, and coal for fuel is procured from veins situated above the works, in the side of the hill, and costs but a cent a bushel. Considerable salt is made near Pittsburg, from a fountain obtained by boring 270 feet; the water is strong, and is raised by a steam engine; the salt is white, and of a good quality. This fountain is sufficient for the annual manufacture of 25,000 bushels. There are other salt springs on the Ohio, and also on the Chenango and Mahony.

The legislature consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The senators are chosen for four years, and the representatives annually. Suffrage is universal. The governor is chosen for three years by a popular vote. There is no Lt. governor and no council. The governor can only be elected thrice in 12 years and on retiring from office becomes a senator. The legislature meets annually at Harrisburg in December. The state sends 24 representatives to Congress. The state expenses for 1830, were 6,357,994 dollars, of which enormous sum 5,495,550 dollars were for canals, railroads and other internal improvements.

The Presbyterians are the most numerous religious sect, and are divided into two classes; one of which call themselves Associate Presbyterians. These two have 266 preachers. The Baptists have 144; the Methodists 140; the German Reformed Church 73; the Episcopalians 60; there are also Lutherans, Unitarians, Catholics, Quakers, Dutch Reformed. Universalists and Jews.

The navigation of the Schuylkill has been improved by a series of canals from Philadelphia to Port Carbon in the coal region, a distance of 100 miles: 64 m. of which consist of canals, and the remainder of portions of the river, rendered navigable by dams and slack water. The canals are 36 feet wide, and were finished in 1825. The Union canal extends from Reading on the Schuylkill to Middletown on the Susquehanna, 83 miles; it is 36 feet wide and four deep. There is a tunnel on this canal 729 feet long, 18 feet wide and 16 high, being the longest in the United States. This canal was completed in 1828. A branch extends up the Swatara to the Schuylkill coal mines. The Conestoga creek is rendered navigable by canals, 18 m. from Lancaster to the Susquehanna. The Lehigh canal extends from Easton to Mauch Chunk 46 3-4 m.; it is 4 feet wide and 4 deep, and is esteemed the most perfect canal in America; it was executed in 2 years, and cost 25,000 dollars a mile. The Lackawaxen canal extends from the Delaware and Hudson canal 25 m. up the Lackawaxen creek to the coal mines, and is navigable for boats of 25 tons.

The Pennsylvania canal is a work undertaken by the state, and designed to form a communication between Philadelphia and Pittsburg. A railroad is to be constructed from Philadelphia to Columbia 80 m. Here the canal begins and extends to the Union canal at Middletown, thence W. to the Juniata, and up that river to the mountains, which are to be crossed by a railroad or tunnel; beyond this the canal is to be continued to Pittsburg The whole length of this communication will be 394 m.

The other canals now constructing by the state government are one from Middletown on the Union canal to Muncey Hills on the W. branch of the Susquehanna, 90 m. Another from Northumberland on the Susquehanna up the E. branch to Nanticoke falls, 55 m. Another from Bristol up the Delaware to Easton on the Lehigh, 60 m. This is called the Delaware canal. Another from Meadville on French creek, a head water of the Alleghany, to Muddy River in the N. W. of the state, 20 m. The whole length of the canals in the state will be 725 m.

The Mauch Chunk railroad extends from the coal mine, to the river Lehigh, 9 m.; it was completed four years since. The Mill Creek railway extends 3 m. from Port Carbon up Mill Creek to the coal mines. The Lackawaxen railroad extends 16 m., from the Lackawaxen canal at Honesdale, to the coal mines at Carbondale, on the Lackawanna, passing through Rix's Gap, in the Moosic Mountain. An ascent and descent of 1,812 feet is passed by 8 inclined planes, at 5 of which on the western side of the mountain are stationary engines. This railroad cost about 12,000 dollars a mile, and went into operation in 1829. Besides these, there are now in progress the following; Pennsylvania Railroad, from Philadelphia through Lancaster to Columbia, on the Susquehanna, 84 m.; Schuylkill West Branch Railroad, from Schuylkill Haven to the coal mines on Broad Mountain, 13 m. long, including a branch of 2 1-2 m.; Schuylkill Valley Railroad, from Port Carbon, eastward up the valley of the Schuylkill, nearly to its head, 10 m. long, passing through a district richly supplied with coal; this last is nearly completed. The Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad is to extend from Baltimore to York Haven, on the Susquehanna, 60 m.

This state has a university at Philadelphia and colleges at Carlisle, Canonsburg, Pittsburg, Meadville, Alleghany, Uniontown and Washington. Common education however is in a backward state. About one third of all the children in the State attend school. The sum of 2,000,000 dollars was bequeathed by the late Stephen Girard to found a school in Philadelphia.

Pennsylvania has its name from William Penn, a quaker who began a settlement in the state in 1681. He made a treaty with the Indians which England, in Yorkshire, 7 m. N. of Settle. Its summit is 3,930 feet above the level of the sea. On its sides are two awful orifices, called Hulpit and Huntpit holes; through each of them runs a brook, both of which run under ground for about a mile, and cross each other in the bowels of the earth without mixing their waters.

Pennycott, a village of Hunterdon Co. N. Y. 10 m. N. W. Trenton.

Pen, a town of Pike Co. Missouri.

Penobscot, a river of Maine and the largest in the state. It has two large head streams, the chief of which runs W. of Moosehead lake in the highland which separate Maine from Canada. It flows S. and on joining the ocean forms a wide bay to which it gives its name. It is navigable to Bangor, 50 m.

Penobscot, a county of Maine on the above river. Pop. 31,530. Bangor is the capital. Also a town on the river 30 m. below Bangor. Pop. 1,271.

Penobscot Indians. See Indian Old Town.

Penrice, a town of Wales, in Glamorganshire. Here are the ruins of a Norman castle; and 3 m. to the N., on a mountain, is a Druidical monument, called Arthur's stone. Penrice is seated on the Bristol Channel, 20 m. S. E. of Caermarthen and 220 W. of London.

Penrith, a town in Cumberland, Eng., in the church-yard is a singular monument of antiquity, called the Giant's Grave. The ruins of the ancient castle overlook the town from the W., and on the heights to the N. is a square stone building called the "Beacon," well situated for giving alarm in times of danger. The ascent to it is difficult, but the prospects from the summit of the hill are extensive and beautiful. 283 m. N. N. W. of London.

Penryn, a borough in Cornwall, Eng. Here are large warehouses for flour and grain imported from the Isle of Wight, and several good breweries, which supply the shipping at Falmouth; and it has a great trade in the pilchard and Newfoundland fisheries. It is seated on a creek of Falmouth Haven, 3 m. N. W. of Falmouth and 263 W. by S. of London.

Pensacola, p.t. Escambia Co. W. Florida, on the Gulf of Mexico. It is the largest town in West Florida, and has a capacious harbour, but the town can be approached only by small vessels. It is a naval station of the United States. The situation is comparatively healthy, and the town is somewhat thriving. The town was founded at an early period by the Spaniards. It is 50 m. E. S. E. Mobile. 900 m. S. W. Washington Lat. 30. 25. N., long. 87. W. Pop. about 2,000.

Pensford, a town in Somersetshire, Eng. with a manufacture of hats; seated on the Chew, 6 m. S. by E. of Bristol and 117 W. by S. of London.

Pentland Frith, a strait which divides the Orkney Islands from Caithness-shire, in Scotland. It is 20 m. long and 10 broad, and dangerous to those who are not acquainted with its tides and currents; especially in passing the Pentland Skerries, a cluster of rocks at the E. end of the frith. On the largest of these rocks is a lighthouse. Long. 2. 42. W., lat. 58. 35. N.

Pentland Hills, a ridge of hills, in Scotland, 4 m. W. of Edinburgh.

Penza, a government of Russia, formerly a province of Kasan. Its capital, of the same name, is seated on the Sura, where it receives the rivule' Penza, 220 m. S. W. of Kasan. Long. 45. 33 E., lat 53 30 N was observed on both sides with such scrupulous honour that not the least discord arose between the settlers and the savages for 70 years. The original charter of their state continued till after the revolution. The present constitution was established in 1790.

Pennygant, one of the highest mountains of Penzance, a sea-port in Cornwall, Eng. It was burnt by the Spaniards in 1533, but soon rebuilt, and made one of the tin-coining towns. Its trade is considerable, and consists chiefly in pilchards and other fish, and in shipping lead, tin, and copper, which abound in the vicinity. In consequence of the mildness and salubrity of the air, and the agreeableness of its situation, Penzance is much frequented by invalids, for whose accommodation there are cold and hot sea-water baths, &c. It is seated on a creek of Mount Bay, 10 m. N. E. of the Land's End and 280 W. by S. of London.

Peoria Lake, in Illinois, an expansion of the river Illinois, 20 m. in length and 2 in breadth. It is very deep and has no perceptible current. Here is a settlement called Peoria, on its banks.

Pepin Lake, an expansion of the Mississippi, 190 m. below the falls of St. Anthony. 24 m. long and from 2 to 4 broad.

Pepperell, p.t. Middlesex Co. Mass. 40 m. N. W. Boston. Pop. 1,440.

Pequigny, a town of France, department of Somme; memorable for an interview and treaty between Louis XI. of France and Edward IV. of England, in 1475, on a bridge built for that purpose. It is seated on the river Somme, 15 m. S. E. of Abbeville.

Perak, a sea-port of Malaya, capital of a kingdom on the W. coast. It is seated on a river of the same name, 180 m. N. W. of Malacca. Long. 100. 0. E., lat. 4. 23. N.

Peray, St., a town of France, department of Ardeche, noted for its wines. It is seated on the Rhone opposite Valence, 32 m. N. of Viviers.

Perdido, a river separating Florida from Alabama and flowing into the Gulf of Mexico.

Perdu Mount, a lofty mountain of the Pyrenees, with a double summit, of which the higher is computed at 11,000 feet above the sea. It is of very difficult access, as the calcareous rock often assumes the form of perpendicular walls, from 100 to 600 feet in height; and glaciers increase the difficulty. About 2,000 feet from the summit is a lake, which throws its waters to the E., into the Spanish valley of Beoussa.

Perga, a town of Albania, on the gulf of Venice, 25 m. W. N. W. of Arta.

Pergamar, a town of Romania, and a bishop's see, 60 m. S. W. of Adrianople. Long. 25. 55. E., lat. 41. 10. N.

Pergamo, a town of Natolia, and a bishop's see, with a palace and a castle. It is not so considerable as formerly, but has nine mosques, and occupies an oblong circumference of 3 m. at the foot of a mountain. Here parchment was invented. It is seated on the Germasti, 15 m. from its mouth and 37 N. of Smyrna. Long. 27. 27. E., at. 39. 5. N.

Peria, a town of Persia, in the province of Irac, 90 m. W. of Ispahan. Long. 51. 25. E., lat. 32. 20. N.

Periac, a town of France, department of Aude, celebrated for its salt works. It is seated on a lake of its name, 6 m. S. W. of Narbonne.

Periapatam, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore. The environs are rich and beautiful, and abound in sandal wood. It is 40 m. W. by S. of Seringapatam.

Peries, a town of France, department of Manche, 9 m. N. of Coutances.

Perigord, a former province of France, now forming the department of Dordogne.

Perigueux, a town of France, capital of the department of Dordogne, and a bishop's see. Here are the ruins of a temple of Venus, an amphitheatre, &c. It is seated on the river Ille, 50 m. S. W. of Limoges. Long. 0. 43. E., lat. 45. 11. N.

Perinda, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of its name, in the province of Dowlatabad, 188 m. N. W. of Hyderabad. Long. 75. 50. E., lat. 18. 33. N.

Perinaura, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Coimbatore, 12 m. S. S. W. of Bhawani-kudal.

Perleberg, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg with considerable cloth manufactures. It is seated on the Stepenitz, 42 m. W. N. W. of Ruppin. Long. 12. 3. E., lat. 53. 8. N.

Perkinsons ville, a village of Amelia Co. Va.

Perkiomen, a township of Montgomery Co. Pa. on a river of the same name, 25 1/2 m. N. Philadel.

Perm, a government of Russia, formerly a province of Kasan. It is divided into two provinces, Perm and Catharinenburg, the capitals of which are of the same name.

Perm, a town Russia, capital of a government and province of the same name. It is seated on the Kama, at the influx of the Zegochekha, 620 m. E. by N. of Moscow and 810 E. by S. of Petersburg. Long. 55. 10. E., lat. 57. 55. N.

Permatool, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, situated on a mountain, 20 m. N. N. W. of Pondicherry.

Pernulla, a town of Hindoostan, in Guzerat, 38 m. S. of Surat.

Pernambuco, or Fernambuco, a province of Brazil, bounded N. and E. by the Atlantic Ocean, S. by Bahia, and E. by the desert territory. It is about 470 m. from N. to S. and 370 from E. to W. and abounds in sugar-cane, cotton, and Brazil wood.

Pernambuco, the capital of the above province, consists of three divisions, Recife, St. Antonio, and Boa Vista. The two former are situated on two flat sand banks, surrounded by the sea, and connected together by a bridge, partly of stone and partly of wood; the other division is connected, with Boa Vista, situated on the continent, by a narrow wooden bridge. The greatest part of the extent of sand between Olinda, a town about a league distant, on the same sand bank as Recife, and the latter, remains uncovered, is open to the sea, and the surf there is very violent. The tide enters between the bridges, and encircles the middle compartment. The first division of the town is composed of brick houses, of three, four, and even five stories in height: most of the streets are narrow and there are no public buildings that require notice. St. Antonio, the principal division of the town, is composed chiefly of large houses and broad streets. It contains the governor's palace (formerly the Jesuits' convent), the treasury, the town hall and prison, the barracks, and the Franciscan, Carmelite, and Penha convents. It comprises several squares, and has to a certain degree a gay and lively appearance. The river Capibaribe discharges its waters into the channel between St. Antonio and Boa Vista. The harbour belonging to Recife, called the Mosquito, situated on the outward bank, is formed by a reef of rocks, which runs parallel with the town, at a very small distance. Pernambuco is daily increasing in opulence and importance, and European fashions prevail. Long. 35. 20. W., lat. 8. 13. S.

Pernau, a fortified town of Russia, in Livonia with a castle; seated near the mouth of a river of the same name, 95 m N. of Riga. Long. 24. 3. E., lat. 58. 30. N.

Pernes, a town of France, department of Vaucluse, noted as the birthplace of the celebrated orator Flechier, bishop of Nismes. 12 m. E. by N. of Avignon.

Pernes, a town in the department of Pas de Calais, seated on the Clarence, 17 m. N. W. of Arras.

Perno, a town of Sweden, in the province of Nyland, on the coast of the Baltic, 36 m. E. of Helsingfors.

Peronne, a strong town of France, department of Somme. It was called Pucelle, because never taken, though often besieged, till the 26th of June, 1815, when it was stormed by the British. Charles the Simple was imprisoned in the castle, where he miserably died; and the duke of Burgundy detained Louis XI. here three days, till he consented to sign a disadvantageous treaty. It is seated on the Somme, 27 m. S. W. of Cambrai and 80 E. by N. of Paris. Long. 3. 2. E., lat. 49. 55. N.

Perrousa, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont; seated on the river Cluson, 6 m. N. W. of Pignerol.

Perrignan, a fortified town of France, capital of the department of Eastern Pyrenees, with a good citadel and a university. The inhabitants carry on a trade in corn, wool, iron, and wine, and have manufactures of silk, woollens, soap, liqueurs, &c. This town was the scene of two battles between the French and Spaniards, in 1793. It is seated partly on a gentle declivity and partly in a plain, on the Tet, near the Mediterranean, 95 m. S. E. of Toulouse. Long. 2. 54. E., lat. 42. 42. N.

Perquimans, a county of N. Carolina. Pop. 6,857. Hertford is the capital.

Perrinton, p.t. Monroe Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,155.

Perry, a county of the E. District of Pennsylvania. Pop. 14,257. New Bloomfield is the capital. A county of Kentucky. Pop. 3,331. A county of Missouri. Pop. 3,377. Perryville is the capital. A county of Ohio. Pop. 14,018. Somerset is the capital. A county of Indiana. Pop. 3,371. Rome is the capital. A county of W. Tennessee. Pop. 7,038. Shannonsville is the capital. A county of Alabama. Pop. 11,509. A county of Mississippi. Pop. 2,285. Augusta is the capital.

Perry, p.t. Washington Co. Me. on Passamaquoddy Bay. Pop. 735. Here is a remnant of the Passamaquoddy Indians consisting of about 50 families, under the government of a chief named Sobason. They are catholics and have a priest of that religion, and a protestant missionary among them during the summer. They live in rude wigwams, and subsist by fishing, hunting and the manufacture of chip baskets, which are executed with considerable neatness. Their numbers are diminishing.

Persepolis, anciently the capital of the Persian empire. It was taken by Alexander the Great, who set it on fire. Its magnificent ruins are 50 m. N. E. of Shiras.

Pershore, a town in Worcestershire, Eng. Here are two churches, and that of Holy Cross contains several ancient monuments. It is seated on the Avon, 9 m. E. S. E. of Worcester and 102 W. N. W. of London.

Persia, a large kingdom of Asia, consisting of several provinces, which, at different times, have had their particular kings. It is bounded on the N. by the Caspian Sea, and the mountains of Caucasus, W. by the Euphrates and Tigris, S. by the gulfs of Persia and Ormus and the Arabian Sea, and E. by Hindoostan. It is about 1,225 m. in length from E. to W. and 900 in breadth from N. to S., the chief rivers are the Tigris and Amuc. In the N. and E. parts it is mountainous and cold; in the middle and S. E. parts sandy and desert; and in the S. and W. level and fertile, though for several months very hot. The soil produces various sorts of pulse and corn, and cotton in great abundance. In several places naphtha, a sort of bitumen, rises out of the ground, and here are numerous mines of gold, silver, iron, turquois stones, and salt; but the first two of these are not worked on account of the scarcity of wood. This country produces all the various sorts of fruits, excellent wine, and a great number of mulberry trees. The citron here grows to great perfection. Likewise dates, pistachio-nuts, and trees which produce manna. Sheep and goats are abundant; as are also camels, buffaloes, and horses. The principal manufactures are silks, silks mixed with cotton or with camels' or goats' hair, brocades, gold tissues, gold velvet, carpets, calicoes, camlets, &c. The Persians are subjected to a despotism similar to that which presses upon all oriental nations; yet their character is materially different. They are more gay, lively, and active. They are said to be extremely ostentatious, and to surpass all other nations in politeness—if the most profuse and hypocritical flattery may be so called. Their dress is lighter than that of the Turks, and they are lavish in the use of jewels and gold ornaments. The beard is held in high estimation, and every art employed to render it thick and tufted. They are, however, the most learned people of the E.; poetry and the sciences may even be considered as their ruling passion. In the former, their fame is decidedly superior to that of any other oriental nation. The names of Hafiz, Ferdusi, and Sadi, are classic even in Europe. The religion of the country is Mahomedism, of the sect of Ali. In the beginning of the last century, Persia was overrun by the Afghans, who carried fire and sword through its remotest extremities, and reduced its proudest capitals to ashes. The atrocities of the Afghans were avenged, and the independence of Persia vindicated, by Nadir Shah; but, though the victories of this daring chief threw a lustre on his country, after his death the country was almost torn to pieces by civil war, till the fortune of arms gave a decided superiority to Kurreem Khan. His death gave rise to another disputed succession, with civil wars, as furious as before. At length Aga Mahommed, a eunuch, raised himself to the sovereignty, and not only retained it during his lifetime, but transmitted it to his nephew, the present sovereign, who assumed the title of Futteh Ali Shah. He is represented as an accomplished prince; and his eldest son is said to be highly promising.

Persian Gulf, a sea or inland lake, between Persia and Arabia. The entrance near Ormus is not above 30 m. over; but within it is from 120 to 250 in breadth, and the length from Ormus to the mouth of the Euphrates is 500 m. The southern side is particularly celebrated for its pearl fishery.

Person, a county of N. Carolina, Pop. 10,027. Roxborough is the Capital.

Perth, a borough of Scotland, capital of Perthshire. It has been the residence of the sovereigns of Scotland, and the seat of the parliament and of the supreme courts of justice. Near the town are some saline springs, called Pitcaithly Wells, deemed beneficial in scorbutic cases. Perth is seated on the S. W. side of the Tay, which is navigable for small vessels, but the largest are obliged to unload at Newburg. Over the river is a modern bridge of 10 arches, the most beautiful in Scotland, to the town of Kinnoul. Here are several incorporated trades, some of which have halls. The salmon fishery is a great article of trade; and the manufactures of linen and cotton goods, leather, boots, shoes, and gloves are considerable. 35 m. N. by W. of Edinburgh. Long. 3. 20. W., lat. 56. 24. N.

Perthes, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne, 6 m. S. W. of Melun.

Perthes, a town in the department of Upper Marne, 6 m. N. W. of St. Dizier.

Perthshire, a county of Scotland, 76 m. long and 68 broad; bounded W. by Argyleshire, N. by the shires of Inverness and Aberdeen, E. by Angus-shire, S. E. by the frith of Tay and the counties of Fife and Kinross, and S. by the frith of Forth and the counties of Clackmannan, Stirling, and Dumbarton. It contains 4,068,640 English acres, is divided into 76 parishes, and the number of inhabitants in 1821 was 139,050. The country exhibits scenes of rugged and striking magnificence, contrasted with the most beautiful ones of cultivation. The Grampian mountains cross it from S. W. to N. E., the highest of which is Benlawers. The country N. W. of this ridge is mountainous, and contains several lakes; but the opposite side, though not free from hills, is more low and fertile. The principal rivers are the Forth and Tay. Perth is the capital.

Pertigi, a town of the island of Sardinia, 19 m. S. E. of Castel Aragonese.

Pertuis, a town of France, department of Vaucluse, near the Duranee, 11 m. N. of Aix. 38 S. E. of Avignon.

Peru, an independent state of S. America, the largest of the former Spanish viceroalties, bounded on the N. by the republic of Colombia, W. by the Pacific Ocean, S. by Chile, and E. by Brazil. It is 750 m. in medium length, from N. to S., and about 500 in breadth. Rain is unknown in the S. parts; but in the N., where the mountains are not so high, it often rains excessively. There are large forests on the sides of the mountains which advance near the sea; but none of the trees are like those in Europe. Peru has been long celebrated for its mines of gold and silver, which are the chief or only source of its riches. Besides the produce of the mines, the commodities exported are sugar, Vienna wood, cotton, Peruvian bark, copper, and cocoa. The fiercest beasts of prey in Peru are the puma and jaguar, inaccurately called lions and tigers by the Europeans; for they possess neither the undaunted courage of the former, nor the ravenous cruelty of the latter. The lama, or American camel, inhabits the cold districts, and the elk, bear, deer, armadillos, monkeys, &c., are numerous. Among the birds, the most remarkable is the condor, which is entitled to pre-eminence over the flying tribe, in bulk, strength and courage. The river Guayaquil abounds with alligators, and the neighbouring country swarms almost as much with snakes and vipers as that round Porto Bello does with toads. When the Spaniards landed in this country, in 1530, they found it governed by sovereigns called Incas, who were revered by their subjects as divinities, and the inhabitants were found to be much more polished than the natives of other parts of America, those of Mexico excepted. These were soon subdued by the Spaniards, under the command of Francis Pizarro. After the assassination of Pizarro, in 1541, the country continued a prey to civil contentions and insurrections, till about the year 1562, when Tupac Amaru the son of Manco Capac, who had taken refuge in the mountains, was attacked by the viceroy Toledo. The inca surrendered himself, and was led to the scaffold amid the tears of the people. The royal authority, thus established, continued without interruption till 1781, when a descendant of Amaru began an insurrection. After two years of varied success he was, however, surprised and taken prisoner together with his family, who were all executed. Peru now remained in subjection to Spain, and in a comparative state of tranquillity for some time; and in 1809, when juntas were established in La Paz and Quito, Peru, sent out troops which suppressed their rising efforts. In 1817 the Peruvian army was compelled to evacuate Chile; and Chile in return sent an army into Peru, under general San Martin, who in 1821, in conjunction with the fleet under Lord Cochrane succeeded in liberating it from the Spanish yoke. The country has since undergone so many changes that it cannot at present be considered as a settled state. Lima is the capital. See America.

Perugia, a province of Italy, in the pope's dominions comprehending the ancient province of Perugia. It is 25 m. long and 24 broad; and is bounded W. by Tuscany, S. by Orvieto, E. by Spoleto and Urbino, and N. by Citta di Castello. The soil is fertile in corn and good wine.

Perugia, the capital of the above province, and a bishop's see, with a strong citadel and university. The churches, and many other buildings, public and private, are very handsome. It is seated on a hill, near the Tiber, 85 m. N. of Rome. Long. 12. 20. E., lat. 43. 6. N.

Perugia, a lake of Italy, 8 m. W. of the city of its name. It is almost round, 5 m. in diameter, and in it are three islands.

Peruvian Mountains, a range in the north-eastern part of New York running parallel with Lake Champlain. The highest summit is called White-face, and is 3,000 feet above the lake.

Pesaro, a sea-port of the ecclesiastical states, in the delegation of Urbino, and a bishop's see; the cathedral is magnificent, and it has several handsome churches, with exquisite paintings. The environs are remarkable for producing olives and excellent figs. It is seated on an eminence, at the mouth of the Foglia, on the gulf of Venice, 17 m. E. N. E. of Urbino. Long. 13. 2. E., lat. 45. 52. N.

Pescara, a strong town of Naples, in Abruzzo Citra, at the mouth of a river of the same name, on the gulf of Venice, 9 m. N. N. E. of Chieti.

Peschiera, a strong town of Austrian Italy, in the Veronese. It was taken by the French in 1796; and the garrison surrendered to the Austrians in 1799. It is seated on the river Mincio, where it proceeds from the lake Garda, 16 m. W. of Verona.

Pescia, a town of Tuscany, in the province of Florence, celebrated for its fine oil, 25 m. N. E. of Florence.

Pescina, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ultra, near the Lake Celano, 20 m. S. by E. of Aquila.

Pesenas, a town of France, department of Herault, on the river Herault, 12 m. N. E. of Beziers.

Pest, a town of Hungary, capital of a palatinate of the same name, with a fortress, a royal palace, and a university, the only one in the kingdom. Here are many Greek merchants, who conduct the Levant trade to Germany and the northern nations. It is seated on the E. side of the Danube opposite Buda, 96 m. E. S. E. of Presburg. Long. 19. S. E., lat. 47. 30. N.

Pesti, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, seated near the magnificent ruins of the ancient Paestum, 20 m. S. E. of Salerno.

Petapa, a town of Mexico, 25 m. S. E. of Guatemala.

Petaguai, a province on the N. coast of Brazil, between the provinces of Seara and Rio Grande. It contains mines of silver.

Pe-tche-li, the principal province of China, bounded on the N. by the Great Wall and part of Tartary, E. by the Yellow Sea, S. by Chang-tong and Ho-nan, and W. by the mountains of Chansi. It contains nine cities of the first class, which have many others under their jurisdiction. Although Pe-tche-li extends no further than 42. N. lat. yet all its rivers are so much frozen during four mouths in the year that waggons with the heaviest loads may safely pass them. The soil is sandy, and produces very little rice; but it abounds with all other kinds of grain, and with the greater part of the fruit trees common in Europe. But, what renders this province the most considerable, is that the riches of the whole empire are brought hither, the southern provinces furnishing it with every thing they produce that is most uncommon and delicious. The inhabitants, in general, are reckoned not so polite, nor so apt to learn the sciences, as those of the southern provinces; but they are stronger and more warlike. Their number is estimated at 38,000,000. Peking is the capital.

Peter and Paul, St., or Petropaulshoi, a sea-port of Russia, in Kamtschatka. The town consists of some log-houses and a few conical huts. Captain Clerke, who succeeded captain Cook, and died at sea, was interred here. It is seated on the E. side of Awatska Bay. Long. 158. 48. E., lat. 53. 1. N.

Peter le Port, St., a market town in the island of Guernsey, with an excellent harbour, defended by two castles.

Peterborough, a city in Northamptonshire, Eng. It is a bishop's see, and contains 8,558 inhabitants; the cathedral was formerly a monastery. The market-place is spacious, the streets regular, and many of the buildings extremely neat. The manufacture of stockings is extensive, and considerable trade is carried on in corn, coal, and timber. 81 m. N. N. of London. Long. 0. 4. W. lat. 52. 30. N.

Peterborough, p.t. Hillsborough Co. N. H. 40 m. S. W. Concord. Pop. 1,984. Here are manufactures of cotton, woolen, paper, oil, &c.; p.t. Madison Co. N. Y. 122 m. W. Albany.

Peterhead, a sea-port of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, situate on a peninsula, about a m. S. of the mouth of Ugie. It has two harbours, defended by piers; a considerable trade in the fishery, and to the Baltic; and manufactures of thread, woolen cloth, and cotton. Here is a small fort and a battery. A mineral spring, of a powerful diuretic quality, and the sea-bathing, bring a great resort of company, for whose accommodation there is a ball-room and many elegant houses. 34 m. N. E. of Aberdeen. Long. 1. 35. W., lat. 57. 27. N.

Peters, a township of Franklin Co. Pa.

Petersburgh, a government or province of Russia, at the E. extremity of the gulf of Finland. The greater part of this province, was formerly called Ingermanland or Ingria. It comprises an area of 18,000 square miles, with 700,000 inhabitants. Timber forms the chief source of wealth.

Petersburgh, the metropolis of the Russian empire, in the government of the same name, is situated on the river Neva, near the gulf of Finland, and is built partly upon some islands in the mouth of that river, and partly upon the continent. So late as the beginning of the last century, the ground on which Petersburg now stands was only a vast morass, occupied by a few fishermen's huts. Peter the Great first began this city in 1703. He built a small hut for himself, and some wretched wooden hovels. In 1710 the Count Golovkin built the first house of brick, and the next year the emperor, with his own hand, laid the foundation of a house of the same material. From these small beginnings rose the imperial city of Petersburg; and, in less than nine years after the wooden hovels were erected, the seat of empire was transferred from Moscow to this place. The streets, in general are broad and spacious; and three of the principal ones, which meet in a point at the admiralty, are at least two m. in length. The mansions of the nobles are vast piles of building, furnished with great cost, in the same elegant style as at Paris or London, and situated chiefly on the S. side of the Neva, either in the admiralty quarter, or in the suburbs of Livonia and Moscow, which are the finest parts of the city. The views upon the banks of the Neva exhibit the grandest and most lively scenes imaginable. That river is in many places as broad as the Thames at London: it is also deep, rapid, and as transparent as crystal; and its banks are lined on each side with a continued range of grand buildings. On the N. the fortress, the academy of sciences, and the academy of arts, are the most striking objects. On the opposite side are the imperial palace, the admiralty, the mansions of many Russian nobles, and the English line, so called because it is mostly occupied by English merchants. In the front of these buildings, on the S. side, is the quay, which extends three m. except where it is interrupted by the admiralty; and the Neva, during the whole of that space, has been embanked by a wall, parapet, and pavement of hewn granite. There are no fewer than 35 great churches (almost every sect of Christians being tolerated), and the number of inhabitants is supposed to be about 300,000. It is said that 3,000 one-horse sledges are employed for passengers in the streets, in winter. From its low and marshy situation, it is subject to inundations, which have sometimes risen so high as to threaten the town with a total submersion. The opposite divisions of Petersburg, situated on each side of the Neva, are connected by two bridges on pontoons, which, on account of the large masses of ice driven down the stream from lake Ladoga, are usually removed when these masses first make their appearance: and for a few days, till the river is frozen hard enough to bear carriages, there is no communication between the opposite parts of the town. Among the noblest ornaments of Petersburg is an equestrian statue of Peter the Great, in bronze, erected by Catherine II. in 1782. It is of colossal size, and stands on a huge pedestal of rock, brought there at great expense. Within the walls of the fortress is the cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, in which are deposited the remains of Peter the Great, and of the successive sovereigns, except Peter II., who was buried at Moscow. The literary and scientific institutions are numerous, but the most important is the university, founded in 1819. A Bible society is established on an extensive scale, having upwards of 200 auxiliaries in different parts of the empire. Of the charitable institutions the principal are the foundling hospital, the sailors' hospital, the lazaretto, the asylum for the blind, the asylum for the deaf and dumb, the humane society, &c. The manufactures are various, and some of them of considerable extent; and the commercial intercourse is important from its extensive communication with the interior, this being the only great maritime outlet in the gulf of Finland. The principal exports are hemp, flax, skins, leather, iron, tallow, &c.: the imports sugar, coffee, cotton, indigo, dyewood, spices, hardware, &c. The number of ships that enter the Neva annually, of which nearly half are British, varies from 1,000 to 1,700. In 1831 this city suffered severely by the pestilential cholera. Petersburg is 355 m. N. W. of Moscow, 430 N. E. of Stockholm, and 1,400 E. N. E. of London. Long. 30. 20. E., lat. 59. 56. N.

Petrelia, a town of Albania, 26 m. S. E. of Durazzo.

Petrikow, a town of Poland, and for some time the meeting-place of the Polish diets, 80 m. S. W. of Warsaw. Long. 19. 46. E., lat. 51. 12. N.

Petrina, a strong town of the Austrian states, in Croatia, seated on the Kulpa, 37 m. E. of Carlstadt.

Petrozavodsk, a town of Russia, capital of the government of Olonetz, with manufactures of stoneware, leather, lead, &c., and a foundry for cannon. It is seated on Lake Onega, 65 m. N. E. of Olonetz.

Pettapally, a town of Hindoostan, in the district of Guntoor, seated on the bay of Bengal, 33 m. S. S. E. of Condavir and 48 N. E. of Ongole.

Pettau, a town of the Austrian states, in Stiria, with considerable manufactures; seated on the Drave, 15 m. S. E. of Marchburg.

Pettycur, a harbour of Scotland, in Fifeshire, one mile W. of Kinghorn, in the frith of Forth. It is the usual landing-place of passengers from Leith, on the opposite shore.

Petcworth, a town in Sussex, Eng. In the centre of the town is a very handsome market-house of stone; and in the church are interred the remains of many of the Percies, earls of Northumberland; seated near the Arun, 12 m. N. E. of Chichester and 48 S. W. of London.

Pevensy, a village in Sussex, Eng. 14 m. W. S. W. of Hastings, situate on a small river which runs into a bay of the English Channel, called Pevensy Harbour. Here is an ancient castle, which belonged to Robert, earl of Morton, and is said to be the largest and most entire remain of Roman buildings to be seen in Britain. Pevensy was anciently a famous haven, though now it is nearly 2 m. from the sea. Here William the Conqueror landed, when he invaded England.

Peytonshurg, a village of Pittsylvania Co. Va.

Pfaffenhofen, a town of Bavaria, with a Benedictine monastery at a small distance. It is seated on the Inn, 15 m. S. of Ingolstadt.—Also a town of Wurtemberg, on the Zaber, 18 m. N. of Stuttgart;—a town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol, seated on the Inn, 15 m. W. of Innspruck;—and a village of Bavaria, 8 m. S. E. of Ulm.

Pfalz, a town of Prussia, in the province of Lower Rhine. It has a convent, which was formerly a palace of the kings of the Franks, and is seated on the Moselle, 3 m. N. E. of Treves.

Pfeldersheim, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt; seated on the river Prim, 5 m. W. of Worms.

Pfiffikon, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Zurich, 12 m. E. of Zurich.

Pfeter, a town of Bavaria, on a river of the same name, near its conflux with the Danube, 14 m. E. by S. of Ratishon.

Pfinz-and-Entz, one of the ten circles of the grand duchy of Baden, lying along the two rivers Pfinz and Entz, from the Rhine to the frontiers of Wurtemberg. Bruchsal is the chief town.

Pforten, a town of Lusatia, 10 m. S. of Guben.

Pforzheim, a town of Germany, in Baden, with a castle, and a considerable trade in wood, and manufactures of cloth, stuffs, stockings, jewellery, and watches. It is seated on the Entz, 15 m. E. by S. of Durlach.

Pfreimb, a town of Bavaria, with a castle, seated at the conflux of the Pfreimbt with the Nab, 10 m. E. of Amberg.

Pfullendorf, a town of Baden, seated on the Andalspach, 22 m. N. by E. of Constance.

Pfullingen, a town of Wurtemberg, 8 m. S. E. of Tubingen.

Plalsburg, a fortified town of France, department of Meurthe, near the Vosges mountains, 27 m. W. N. W. of Strasburg.

Phanagora, a town of Russia, in the island of Taman, with a strong fort. The ruins still show that it has formerly been large and magnificent. It is seated on a gulf of the Black Sea, 70 m. E. by N. of Caffa. Long. 36. 40. E., lat. 45. 12. N.

Pharos, a small island in the Mediterranean Sea opposite Alexandria, in Egypt, the space between which and the continent forms an extensive harbour. It has a communication with the continent by a stone causeway and bridge. It had formerly an exceedingly high tower upon it called the Pharos, on the top of which were lights for the direction of ships. Long. 31. 11. E., lat. 30. 24. N.

Pharsalia, p.t. Chenango Co. N. Y. 12 m. N. W. Norwich. Pop. 987.

Pharza, anciently Pharsalia, a town of Greece, in Thessaly, famous for the decisive victory gained by Julius Caesar over Pompey, in 48 B. C. It is an archiepiscopal see, and seated on the Enipeus, 10 m. S. of Larissa.

Phelps, p.t. Ontario Co. N. Y. 200 m. W. Albany. Pop. 4,798.

Philadelphia. See Alla-Sheir.

Philadelphia, a county of the E. district of Pennsylvania comprising 120 sq. m. besides the city of that name and its suburbs. Pop. 188,961.

Philadelphia, the chief city in Pennsylvania and formerly the seat of government, stands on the western bank of the Delaware, 126 miles from the sea by the course of the river and bay, and 5 miles above the confluence of the Delaware and Schuylkill. The site is a perfect level, and the city is built on the most uniform rectangular plan. The houses are of dark colored brick, and the streets from 50 to 100 feet wide; it is probably the most regular city in the world, a circumstance that secures it numberless advantages in the way of convenience, but which deprives it of all that is picturesque and diversified in aspect. It has many buildings of striking elegance; the finest is the United States Bank, which has a front of white marble, on the model of the Parthenon. Another edifice formerly occupied for the same purpose has a handsome marble front of the Corinthian order; some of the other banks, and many of the churches are fine specimens of architecture.

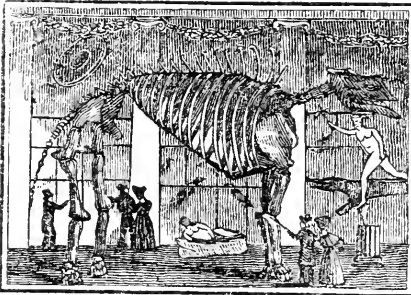

The Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts is a chartered company having for its object the encouragement of the arts of painting, sculpture, architecture and engraving. It has a good collection of paintings, some fine pieces of statuary and a library.

The academy of Natural Sciences have also a good museum and library, and conduct a scientific journal. There are about 40 periodicals in the city including 23 newspapers, 8 of which are daily. Bookselling is an active branch of business, and consists chiefly in the republication of English works.

The manufactures of this city, and the neigh bourhood are principally of cotton cloth, iron, glass, china, carpenter's work, &c. In the mechanic arts no city of the United States is superior to Philadelphia. There are 7 markets in the city, 87 places of public worship, 2 theatres, 13 banks and 10 public schools. In the north-western suburb is the State Prison or Eastern Penitentiary, the largest building in the United States; it is built of granite, and covers a space of 10 acres; the principal front is 670 feet in length.

The arcade has two marble fronts and contains Peal's Museum, the best scientific collection in this country. Here are most of the birds from which Wilson drew the figures which illustrate his work on Ornithology. This museum also contains the most perfect skeleton of the mammoth which has yet been found in this country. The mint of the United States is a neat marble edifice. The University of Pennsylvania, established at this place was founded in 1755; it has 9 instructors and 125 students. The Pennsylvania Hospital, is one of the oldest and best institutions of the kind in the country; it comprises two buildings, one of 278 feet in length; the number of patients is usually about 200. West's painting of Christ healing the sick, presented by the artist to the hospital, is shown in a building attached to the establishment. The Philadelphia library was established by the exertions of Dr Franklin, and now contains 22,000 volumes: the building is ornamented with a marble statue of the founder. The American Philosophical Society have a library of 4,000 volumes. The Athenæum, 2,000. The Academy of Natural Sciences 2,000. The Society of Friends 2,000, and the Hospital 5,000. The Pennsylvania University occupies an edifice originally designed for the residence of the President of the United States.

The Fair Mount Water Works constitute an immense hydraulic establishment upon the Schuylkill a little above the city, for supplying Philadelphia with water; the Schuylkill is dammed, and the water of the river raised into reservoirs holding nearly 20,000,000 gallons. From these the water is conveyed in pipes, amounting in aggregate length to 55 miles, through Philadelphia and the suburbs. These works cost nearly a million and a half of dollars. There are two bridges over the Schuylkill below the water works.

The Delaware at the city is three quarters of a mile wide, and is navigable for ships of the line. The city extends nearly from the Delaware to the Schuylkill. The streets are kept uncommonly clean, the markets are well supplied, and living is cheaper than in any other large city in the United States. It is a very agreeable place of residence except in summer, when the heat is intense. It was founded by William Penn in 1682; and is governed by a Mayor, two councils and a board of aldermen. The expenses of the city in 1830 were 255,551 dollars. In commerce it is the fourth city in the union: in 1828 the shipping owned here amounted to 104,080 tons. It is in N. lat. 39. 57. W., Long. 75. 18. 138 m. N. E. Washington; 100 N. E. Baltimore; 90 S. W. New York; 300 S. W. Boston. Pop. 167,811

Piritz, a town of Pomerania, seated near the lake Maldui, 12 m. S. by W. of New Stargard.

Pirmasens, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of the Rhine. Near this place, in 1793, the French were defeated by the Prussians. It is 13 m. E. of Deux Ponts.

Pirna, a town of Saxony, celebrated for a battle fought in its neighbourhood, between the allies and the French, in 1613. It has a castle on a mountain, called Sonnenstein, which was almost destroyed by the Prussians in 1756 and 1758, and is now an asylum for invalids, &c. It is a place of considerable trade, situate on the Elbe, 12 m. S. E. of Dresden.

Pisa, a city of Tuscany, capital of the Pisano, and an archbishop's see, with a famous university and three forts. The river Arno runs through Pisa, and over it are three bridges, one of which is constructed of marble; and there is a canal hence to Leghorn. This city formerly contained 100,000 inhabitants, but there are not at present 20,000. The manufactures consist of steel, jewellery, embroidery, damasks, velvet, taffeta, and calico. The cathedral is a magnificent structure, and on the right side of the choir is a leaning tower, much noticed by travellers. There are upwards of 80 other churches: that of St. Stephen belonging to an order of knights, is particularly deserving of notice. The other remarkable buildings are the palaces of the grand duke and archbishop, the arsenal, the great hospital, and the magnificent exchange, which last is almost superfluous, as the trade of Pisa is removed to Leghorn. It is seated in a fertile plain, at a small distance from the Mediterranean, 11 m. N. E. of Leghorn and 42 W. by S. of Florence. Long. 10. 23. E., lat. 43. 43. N.

Pistoia, a city of Tuscany, and a bishop's see, with a citadel. There are several fine churches, magnificent palaces, and handsome streets; but it is almost deserted, in comparison to what it was formerly. The Austrians defeated the Neapolitans here in 1815. It is seated near the river Stella, 20 miles N. W. of Florence. Long. 11. 29. E., lat. 43. 55. N.

Pitcairn's Island, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean in lat. 25. 2. S. Long. 130. 21. W. It is surrounded by rocks and difficult of access, yet is fertile and pleasant. Here the mutineers of the Bounty formed a settlement which has since been visited by British and American ships. The inhabitants are about 50 or 60, a mixture of Europeans and Otaheitan; their manners are civilized, and they speak English.

Pitcaithly, a village of Scotland, seated in a sequestered vale, 5 miles S. of Perth. Its mineral waters have been long famed in scorbutic complaints, and it has good accommodations for invalids.

Pitha, a seaport of Sweden, in W. Bothnia, seated on a small island, at the mouth of a river of its name, in the gulf of Bothnia. It is joined to the continent by a wooden bridge, and is 95 miles N. N. E. of Uma. Long. 20. 58. E. lat. 65. 15. N.

Pittsburg, city, Alleghany Co. Pa. the chief town in the western part of the state. It stands upon a point of land at the junction of the Alleghany and Monongahela rivers, which here take the name of Ohio. It is built on a regular plan upon the slope of an eminence, and a level plain at its foot. It is finely situated for trade, and enjoys a communication by steamboats with all the great towns on the Ohio and Mississippi; but it is most distinguished for its large and flourishing manufactures of glass, iron, woolen and cotton, for which see Pensylvania. The surrounding country is exceedingly rich in bituminous coal, which is delivered at the houses for three cents the bushel. The constant use of this fuel causes a perpetual cloud of black smoke to hang over the place. The suburbs, Birmingham and Alleghany, lie on the opposite sides of the two rivers and communicate with the city by bridges. Pittsburg is a very flourishing place; it is not a handsomely built town; yet it contains some neat edifices. Pop. 12,542.

Pittsfield, p.t. Berkshire Co. Mass. 135 m. W. Boston. Pop. 3,570. It is a pleasant town and has manufactures of cloth, muskets and drums. Pizra, a town of Peru, capital of a province of the same name. This was the first Spanish settlement in Peru, being founded by Pizarro in 1531. It is 25 m. S. E. of Paita. Long. 80. 29. W., lat. 5. 15. S.

Pizzighitone, a town of Austrian Italy, with a strong castle, in which Francis I. of France was kept prisoner. It was taken by the French in 1733, again in 1796, and retaken by the Austrians and Russians in 1799. It is situate on the Adda, 10 m N.W. of Cremona and 30 S. E. of Milan.

Pizzo, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, on the gulf of St. Euphemia 4 m. W. by N. of Monte Leone.

Placentia, a town of Spain in Estremadura, and a bishop's see, with a castle. It is seated in a plain, almost surrounded by mountains, 50 m. N. E. of Alcantara and 110 W. S. W. of Madrid. Long. 5. 55. W., lat. 40. 6. N.

Placentia, a town of Spain, in Biscay, seated on the Deva, 25 m. E. by S. of Bilbao.

Placentia, a sea-port of Newfoundland, on the E. side of a large bay on the S. part of the island. The harbour is capacious, and defended by a fort, called St. Louis. It is 60 m. W. S. W. of St. John. Long. 53. 43. W., lat. 47. 15. N.

Placenza, a fortified town of Italy, capital of a duchy, included in that of Parma, and a bishop's see, with a good citadel, and a celebrated university. The churches, squares, streets, and fountains are beautiful. The inhabitants, about 30,000, have scarcely any other employment than the manufacture of silk stuffs. At this place the Austrians gained a decisive victory over the Spaniards and French in 1746. In 1796 it was taken by the French, who were forced to evacuate it in 1799. In 1800 it again fell into the hands of the French, and was retained till 1814. It is of greater extent than Parma, and is seated in a well cultivated country, near the river Po, 38 m. W. W. of Parma. Long. 9. 38. E., lat. 45. 5. N. See Parma.

Platte river, a branch of the Missouri, from the west; it is 400 m. long and joins the Missouri in lat. 41. N.

Plassey, a town of Bengal, in the district of Nuddeah, memorable for a great victory obtained by colonel Clive in 1757 over the nabob Surajah Dowlah. It is 25 m. S. of Moorsshedabad.

Plata or Chuquisaca, a rich and populous city of Peru, capital of the province of Las Charcas, and an archbishop's see, with a university. The cathedral is large, and finely adorned with paintings and gildings. It is seated on the Chimao, 600 m. S. E. of Cusco. Long. 66. 34. W., lat. 19. 16. S.

Plata or Rio de la Plata, a large river of S. America, formed by the union of the great rivers Parana and Uruguay. It was discovered in 1515 by Juan Diaz de Solis, a Spanish navigator who was slain by the natives in endeavouring to make a descent in the country. It forms the S. boundary of Brazil, and enters the Atlantic between the capes of St. Anthony and St. Mary, the latter in lat. 35. S. It is 150 m. broad at its mouth; and at Monte Video, 60 m. up the river, the land is not to be discerned on either shore when a vessel is in the middle of the channel. This river has many islets and shoals, which cause adverse currents, and render its navigation intricate; and the only safe port on its shores, for ships of considerable burden, is Monte Video.

Plata, a province of Buenos Ayres, in Paraguay, seated on the S. W. of the river Plata.

Plate, a town and castle of Pomerania on the river Rega, 19 m. E. by S. of Camin.

Plum Island, on the coast of Massachusetts, extends from Newburyport harbour to Ipswich. It is 9 m. long and a mile in breadth. It is composed of sand hills bearing a scanty vegetation of plum bushes. The whole surface of the island is furrowed into singular hollows and ridges like immense snow drifts. It produces also wild grapes and cherries, and in the autumn affords a delightful resort for parties of pleasure who frequent the island in great numbers to enjoy the sea breezes. On the north end stands two light houses.

Plumpstead, a township of Berks Co. Pa.

Pluviers, or Pithiviere, a town of France, in the department of Loiret, 20 m. N. N. E. of Orleans.

Plymouth, a borough and sea-port in Devonshire, Eng. It is seated at the mouth of the Plym, and next, to Portsmouth, is the most considerable harbour in England for men of war. It affords fine anchorage for ships, particularly since the constitution of the magnificent break-water across its entrance. The fishery for pilchards extend no further E. than this port, whence great quantities are exported to Italy and other catholic countries. It carries on a considerable foreign and domestic trade. The charitable institutions are numerous, and among those for literary purposes are the Athenæum and a public library. It is 43 m. S. W. of Exeter and 216 W. by S. of London. Long. 4. 7. W., lat. 50. 23. N.

Plymouth, a county of Massachusetts, bordering on Mass. Bay. Pop. 42,993. Plymouth is the capital.

Plymouth, p.t. the capital of the above county, 36 m. S. E. Boston. Pop. 4,751. It is memorable in American history as the place where the first settlers of New England landed in December 1620. The Forefathers' Rock, on which they first set foot has been removed from the sea shore to the centre of the town. The fortifications, erected to defend them from the Indians may still be seen here, as also the first well dug in New England. The landing of the Pilgrims is annually celebrated at this place, and a large stone edifice called Pilgrim Hall was erected here in 1820 by the New England society for use on such occasions. The harbour is shallow and insecure; the town has some commerce and manufactures of cordage, iron and cotton. Pop. 4,751.

Poissy, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Oise, the birthplace of Louis XI.; seated near the forest of St. Germain, 15 m. N. W. of Paris.

Poitiers, a town of France, capital of the department of Vienne, and a bishop's see. Its pop is not in proportion to its extent; for it includes 1 number of gardens and fields within its circuit. It has several Roman antiquities, particularly an amphitheatre, partly demolished; and a triumphal arch, which serves as a gate to the great street. Here, in 1356, Edward the Black Prince gained a victory over the French, taking prisoners king John and his son Philip, whom he brought to England. The principal manufactures are stockings, woolen caps, gloves, and combs. It is seated on a hill, on the river Clain, 85 m. S. W. of Tours and 120 N. by E. of Bordeaux. Long. 0. 21. E., lat. 46. 35. N.

Poitou, a province of France, which now forms the three departments of Vendee, Vienne, and Deux Sevres.

Pola, a strong sea-port of Istria, and a bishop's see. Here are large remains of a Roman amphitheatre and a triumphal arch. It is seated on a mountain, near a bay of the gulf of Venice, 38 m. S. of Capo d'Istria. Long. 14. 9. E., lat. 45. 13. N.

Poland, a large country of Europe, bounded on the N. by Prussia, Courland, Livonia, and Russia W. by the Baltic, Brandenburg, and Silesia, S. by Hungary and Moldavia, and E. by Russia and the territories wrested by that power from the Turks. It was formerly divided into four principal parts, Great Poland, Little Poland, Red Russia, and Lithuania. In 1772 a partition of this country, projected by the king of Prussia, was effected by that monarch, in conjunction with the empress of Russia and the emperor of Germany. By this partition one-third of the country was wrested from the republic, the diet being compelled, by a foreign force, to make and to ratify this important cession. The three partitioning powers, moreover, forcibly effected a great change in the constitution. In 1791, however, the king and the nation, in concurrence, almost unanimously, and without any foreign intervention, established another constitution, and one so unexceptionable every way that it was celebrated by Mr. Burke as a revolution whereby the conditions of all were made better and the rights of none infringed. By it the broils of an elective monarchy, of which Poland, on almost every vacancy of the throne, had been involved in the calamities of war, were avoided, the throne being declared hereditary in the house of Saxony. A few of the nobility, however, discontented at the generous sacrifice of some of their privileges, repaired to the court of Russia; and, their representations concurring with the ambitious views of the empress, she sent an army into Poland, under pretext of being guarantee of the constitution of 1772. Her interference was too powerful to be resisted; and this new constitution was overthrown. But the principal object for which the Russian army entered Poland was not yet attained. The empress had planned, in conjunction with the kind of Prussia, a second partition of this country, which took place in 1793. Such multiplied oppressions

It last roused the spirit of the nation. General Kosciusko appeared, in 1794, at the head of a Polish army, to assert the independence of his country, and to recover the provinces wrested from it. He was successful at first, against the king of Prussia; but was at length overpowered by numbers; the country was in different parts desolated, the houses burnt, and the inhabitants massacred in crowds. The brave Kosciusko was taken prisoner, and sent with a number of other patriots into confinement at Petersburgh, for having dared to defend his native country against foreign aggression. The king formerly resigned his crown at Grodno, in 1795, and was afterwards removed to Petersburgh, where he remained a state prisoner, till his death, in 1798. The whole of the country was divided among the three partitioning powers. Austria had Little Poland, and the greatest part of Red Russia and Podolia, which is now called the kingdom of Galicia; Prussia had Great Poland, Polish Prussia, a small part of Lithuania, and Polachia; and Russia had Samogitia, the remainder of Lithuania, Volhinia, and Podolia. In the war with Prussia, in 1806, the French penetrated into Poland, and proclaimed their desire to restore its ancient independence, when, treaties of peace having been adjusted with Russia and Prussia, the project was for the most part abandoned. By the peace of Tilsit, the king of Prussia renounced the possession of the greater part of his Polish provinces, when they were erected into the dukedom of Warsaw, in favor of the king of Saxony. In 1809 Austria was compelled to cede part of Galicia to Russia, and a further portion to the new states. But on the retreat of the French army out of Poland, in 1813, the Russians took possession of the duchy of Warsaw, and the congress of Vienna not only confirmed to that power all the Polish and Lithuanian provinces acquired before 1795, but added the sovereignty of the central provinces, which form the present kingdom of Poland.

The towns of Poland are for the most part built with wood; and the villages consist of mean cottages, or huts. The country is so fertile in corn, in many places, that it supplies Sweden and Holland with large quantities, and it has extensive pastures. Peat, ochre, chalk, belemnites, agate, chalcedony, cornelians, onyxes, jasper, rock crystals, amethysts, garnets, topazes, sapphires, and even rubies and diamonds are found in Poland; also talc, spar, lapis calaminaris, coal, iron, lead, and quicksilver. Here is much leather, fur, hemp, flax, saltpetre, alum, manna, honey, and wax; and there are mines of salt, of a great depth, out of which is dug rocksalt. Horses are numerous, very strong, swift, and beautiful; and horned cattle are bred in immense numbers.

Poland, the central portion of the preceding country, erected into a separate state in 1815. It comprises the chief part of that which, from 1807 to 1813, formed the duchy of Warsaw, and is bounded by the respective acquisitions of Russia, Austria, and Prussia. The form of the territory is a square of 200 m; in the middle stands the capital, Warsaw; but there is also a detached tract extending N. E. towards Lithuania. Its area is 47,000 square m. and its population 3,472,500. It is subject to the same sovereign as Russia, but is governed in every respect as a separate monarchy, the czar being represented by a viceroy. The prevailing religion is the Catholic, but Protestants are numerous, as are also the Jews.

This remnant of the great republic of Poland has rendered itself noted for the desperate attempt which it made in 1830 and 1831 to throw off the Russian yoke. The Polish constitution granted in 1815 by the Emperor Alexander, had been repeatedly violated, and many causes of animosity between the Poles and their oppressors tended to embitter their servitude. The Grand Duke Constantine, commander in chief of the army, outraged the feelings of the nation by his insulting demeanor towards the soldiery. At length inspired by the recent example of the French and Belgians the Poles rose in insurrection at Warsaw on the 29th of November 1830; the revolt immediately spread throughout the kingdom and extended into Lithuania and other parts of ancient Poland. An obstinate and sanguinary war commenced, and the Poles animated by the greatness of the object for which they were contending, and hoping for aid from the powers of western Europe, obtained some advantages in the outset which seemed to promise a successful result to their heroic efforts. But none of the European powers stirred in their behalf; the Russians poured in fresh armies, and Poland overpowered by numbers, was forced to submit in the autumn of 1831. This unfortunate country now groans under a heavier tyranny than before. To the Russian armies that crushed the revolution, Europe owes the further infliction of the pestilential cholera. This disorder was introduced by them from Asia into Poland during the campaign of 1831, and spread over a great part of Europe.

Polno, a town of Prussia, in Pomerania, on the river Grabow, 38 m. E. S. E. of Colberg.

Polore, a town of Hindoostan in the Carnatic, 23 m. S. S. W. of Arcot, and 55 m. N. W. of Pondicherry.

Polotsk, a strong town of Russia, in the government of Vitepsk, celebrated for a number of battles having been fought in its vicinity, between the French and Russians, in 1812. It is seated on the Dwina, at the influx of the Polota, 60 m. S. W. of Vitepsk. Long. 27. 50. E., lat. 55. 43. N.

Poltava, a government of Russia, between those of Catharineslav and Charkov. It has an area of 16,000 square miles, with 1,500,000 inhabitants; is fertile in corn; and affords very rich pasturage.

Poltava, the capital of the foregoing government, with a considerable trade in cattle, corn, flax, hemp, wax, &c. It is famous for a battle, in 1709, between Peter the Great and Charles XII. of Sweden, in which the latter was totally defeated. 737 m. S. E. of Petersburg.

Polten, St., a town of Austria, the residence of a great number of the nobility. The adjacent country yields excellent saffron. It is seated on the Drasum, 33 m. W. of Vienna. Long. 15. 41. E., lat. 48. 13. N.

Poltzin, a town of Prussia in Pomerania, near which are medicinal springs and baths. 50 m. N. E. of Stargard.

Polynesia, a term applied by modern geographers to numerous islands in the Pacific Ocean, from the Ladrões to Easter Island. The principal groups are the Ladrões, Carolinas, Pelew, Sandwich, Society, Friendly Navigator's, Harvey, Georgian, and the Marquesas Islands.

Pombal, a town of Portugal in Estremadura, 16 m. N. E. of Leira and 21 S. of Coimbra.

Pomegue, a small island in the Mediterranean, near the coast of France, at the entrance into the harbour of Marseilles defended by a tower.

Pomerania, an extensive province of Prussia, lying along the S. coast of the Baltic, and comprising an area of 12,000 square miles, with 670, 000 inhabitants. It is divided into the governments of Stettin, Stralsund and Coslin, and is watered by several rivers, of which the Oder, Peene, Ucker, Rega, Persante Inna, Stolpen, and Leho are the most considerable. The air is pretty cold, but compensated by the fertility of the soil, which abounds in pastures and corn, of which a great deal is exported. The country is flat, contains many lakes, woods, and forests, and has several good harbours. It was formerly an independant duchy of the German empire, and was divided into Hither and Further Pomerania. The latter, and part of Hither Pomerania, were seized by the king of Prussia, and confirmed to him in 1720; the remainder N. of the Seene was ceded by the king of Sweden, at the treaty of Kiel in 1814, to the king of Denmark, in exchange for Norway, but soon after came to Prussia in exchange for Saxe Lunnenburg.

Pomerelia, a district of W. Prussia, extending W. from the river Vistula to the duchy of Pomerania, of which it was formerly a part. It is now included in the government of Dantzic.

Pomona, or Mainland, the largest of the Orney Islands, being 24 miles long and from 4 to 10 broad; but intersected by numerous arms of the sea. The general appearance of the country is much the same as the Mainland of Shetland; but the soil is more fertile, and in some parts better cultivated. Kirkwall is the capital. See Orkneys.

Pondicherry, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic. It was first settled by the French in 1674; and previously to the war, of 1756 was a fine city. It extended along the sea coast above a mile, was three-quarters of a mile in breadth, and had a citadel then the best of its kind in India. The city has been repeatedly taken by the English, particularly in 1761 (when it was immediately razed, in retaliation of M. Lally's conduct towards Fort St. David) and the last time in 1793. It was restored to the French at the general peace 85 m. S. by W. of Madras. Long. 79. 53. E., lat. 11. 42. N.

Ponte Stura, a town of the Sardinian states, in the duchy of Montferrat, seated at the conflux of the Stura and Po, 5 m. W. S. W. of Casal.

Ponta Veta, a town of Spain, in Galicia, near the mouth of the Leris, 29 m. N. of Tuy.

Pontchartrain, a lake of Louisiana 35 m. long and 25 broad. It lies in the S. E. part of the state and discharges its waters into the Gulf of Mexico through Lake Borgne. It receives the waters of Lake Maurepas and is connected with the Mississippi at New Orleans by a canal. The lake is navigable for small vessels.

Ponteba or Ponte Imperiale, a town of the Austrian states, in Carinthia, seated on the Fella, over which it has a bridge to Ponteba Veneta, a small town of the province of Friuli. It is 20 m. N. N. W. of Friuli and 25 S. W. of Villach.

Pontefract, a borough in W. Yorkshire, Eng. It is situate in a very rich soil, noted for its gardens and nurseries. Its castle, now in ruins, has been the scene of various tragical events in the English history, particularly the murder of Richard II. 22 m. S. W. of York and 175 N. N. W. of London.

Ponteland, a village in Northumberland, Eng., on the river Pont, 7 m. N. E. of Newcastle. It appears to have been the Roman station called Pons Ælii; and here, in 1244, a peace was concluded between Henry III. and the king of Scotland.

Pontvar, p. v. Oakland Co. Michigan of Huron river, flowing into L. St. Clair.

Pontian Islands, a cluster of small islands in the Mediterranean, opposite to the coast of Terra di Lavoro.

Pontiana, a river of Borneo, which enters the ocean by several mouths, at the W. side of the island, under the equinoctial line, where the Dutch have a factory.

Pontivy, a town of France, department of Morbihan, with a linen manufacture; seated on the river Blavet, 25 m. N. of Vannes.

Pontoise, a town in the department of Seine-et-Oise, with a castle. The parliament of Paris was transferred to this place in 1652, 1720, and 1753. It is seated on an eminence, near the Oise, 20 m. N. W. of Paris. Long. 2. 6. E., lat. 49. 3. N.

Pontorson, a town of France in the department of Manche, on the Coesnon, with a tide harbour, 10 m. S. S. W. of Avranches.

Pontremoli, a town of Tuscany, with a strong castle; seated at the foot of the Apennines, on the river Magra, 40 m. S. W. of Parma. Long. 9. 40. E., lat. 44. 25. N.

Pontrieux, a town of France, department of Cotes du Nord, on the river Trieux, 10 m. N. W. of St. Brioux.

Pontypool, a town in Monmouthshire, Eng. with extensive iron works, and a manufacture of japanned ware. It is seated between two hills, on the river Avon, 15 m. N. W. of Monmouth and 145 W. by N. of London.

Pouza, one of the Pontian Islands, in the Mediterranean, containing a town, harbour, and considerable salt works. It was taken by the British in 1813. Long. 13. 10. E., lat. 40. 53. N.

Ponzon, a town of the Sardinian states, in the duchy of Montferrat, 20 m. W. N. W. of Genoa.

Poole, a borough and sea-port in Dorsetshire, Eng. It is a county of itself, and situate on a peninsula projecting into a capacious bay. The principal branch of business here is the Newfoundland fishery. It has also a large importation of deals from Norway, a general commerce with America and various parts of Europe, and a fine coasting trade, particularly in corn and coal. Near the mouth of the harbour is an oyster bank, from which vast quantities are carried to be fattened in the creeks of Essex and the Thames. Poole is 40 m. W. S. W. of Winchester and 105 N. by S. of London. Long. 1. 59. W., lat. 50. 43. N.

Pooleroon, or Poleron, one of the Banda Islands, 100 m. S. E. of Amboyna. Long. 130. 0. E., lat. 4. 20. S.

Pooleroy, one of the Banda Islands, on which the Dutch have a regular pentagon, called Fort Revenge.

Poolsville, p. v. Montgomery Co. Maryland 33 m. N. W. Washington; p. v. Spartanburg Dis. S. C.

Poona, a city of Hindoostan, the modern capital of the Mahratta empire. At the bottom of Parvate Hill, in the vicinity, is a large square field enclosed with high brick walls, where the Peishwa used to assemble the Brahmins, to whom he gave alms at the great feast, when the rainy season terminated. The view from this hill commands the town with all its gardens and plantations, the cantonments, and the British residency at the Sungum. The town is entirely defenceless, the streets long and narrow, and the houses very ir regularly built. The more respectable dwellings are raised with large blocks of granite to the height of about 14 feet, after which the superstructure is composed of timber frames, with slight brick walls; those of the common people are only one story high, with tiled roofs. The palace is surrounded by high and thick brick walls, with round towers at the angles, and has only one entrance. The affairs of government are under the direction of the British resident. 100 m. S. E. of Bombay. Long. 73. 55. E., lat. 15. 30. N.

Poorunder, a fortress of Hindoostan, in Bejapore, where the archives of Poona are kept; seated on a mountain, 18 m. E. S. E. of Poona.

Pootc, a town of France, department of Mayenne, 6 m. W. S. W. of Alençon.

Popa Madre, a town of Terra Firma, with a convent and chapel of the virgin, to which the Spaniards in those parts go in pilgrimage, especially those who have been at sea. It is seated on a high mountain, 50 m. E. of Carthage. Long. 74. 32. W., lat. 10. 15. N.

Popacton, p.v. Delaware Co. N. Y.

Popayan, a province in the W. part of New Granada. A chain of barren mountains runs through the country from N. to S., and the soil near the sea is flat, marshy, and often flooded by the rains.

Popayan, the capital of the foregoing province, and the most ancient city erected by Europeans in this part of America. It contains a cathedral, several churches and convents, and two nunneries. The trade is considerable, and the inhabitants are estimated at 25,000, chiefly mulattoes. It stands in a large plain, 200 m. W. S. W. of Santa Fe and 240 N. E. of Quito. Long. 75. 55. W., lat. 2. 35. N.

Pope, a county of Illinois. Pop. 3,323. Golconda is the capital.

Popedom, or Ecclesiastical States, a country of Italy, bounded N. by the Po, which separates it from the Austrian states, E. by the Adriatic, S. by Naples, and W. by Tuscany. It is 120 m. long and from 80 to 100 broad, divided into the delegations of Bologna, Ferrara, Forli, Ravenna, Urbino and Pesaro, Ancona, Fermo, Pontecorvo, Macerata, Perugia, Spoleto, Viterbo, Ascoli, Benevento, Camerino, Civita Vecchia, and Rieti. The papal government is a bar to industry, and ill calculated to promote the happiness of its subjects; the country is consequently badly cultivated and thinly inhabited. Trade and manufactures are but little encouraged; and were it not for dates, figs, almonds, olives, and other fruits, which grow spontaneously, the indolence of the inhabitants is such that they would be absolutely starved. The pope, according to the ancient canon law, is the supreme, universal, and independent head of the church, and is invested with sovereignty over all Christian sovereigns, communities, and individuals. He has the titles of holy father and holiness, and is elected at every vacancy from among the cardinals, each of whom is styled his eminence. Their number was fixed by Sixtus V. at 70. In allusion to the number of the disciples sent out by Christ to teach the world—an allusion without any remarkable propriety, as no two classes of people could be more unlike. The annual revenue of the pope, which formerly amounted to upwards of £2,000,000 sterling, is now reduced to about £600,000, including the exactions in foreign countries. His military force is inconsiderable; his naval force consists of a few galleys, stationed at Civita Vecchia. In 1798 this state was taken possession of by the French, who overturned its ancient government, and erected it into a republic, styled the Roman republic, under the direction of five consuls. They obliged the pope, Pius VI., to remove from Rome, first into Tuscany, and afterwards into France, where he died at Valence, August 19th, 1799. In December following, a conclave was held at Venice, and on March 13th, 1800, cardinal Chiaramonti was elected to the papal chair, under the title of Pius VII., and assumed the sovereignty. A concordat was concluded for France in 1802, and in 1804, Napoleon was crowned by the pope; but in 1807 the emperor became imperious, while the pope maintained a strong feeling of independence. Measures of violence were resorted to; Rome was occupied by French troops; the pope was removed into France, and his states transformed into a kingdom, under Napoleon's son. He continued a kind of prisoner till the allies had invaded France in 1814, when he was restored to most of his former prerogatives. He died in 1823, and was succeeded by cardinal Annibal della Genga, under the title of Leo XII., on whose death, in 1826, cardinal Francesco Saverio Castiglioni (the present pontiff) was elected to the papal chair and took the title of Pius VIII. Rome is the capital.

Popo, a kingdom of Africa, on the Slave coast. The inhabitants have scarcely any houses, except the king's village, which is in an island in the midst of a river. Long. 2. 33. E., lat. 6. 18. N.

Popocatepetl, on the Smoking mountain, a volcano 45 m. S. E. in sight of the city of Mexico. 27,716 feet above the sea.

Pora, an island in the Indian Ocean, on the W. coast of Sumatra, 54 m. long, and from 9. to 12 broad. Long. 98. 30. E., lat. 1. 10. S.

Porcah, a sea-port of Hindoostan, in Travancore, taken by the English in 1795. It is populous, and carries on a considerable trade. 85 m. N. W. of Travancore. Long. 76. 20. E., lat. 9. 15. N.

Porchester, a village in Hampshire, Eng. 4 m. N. of Portsmouth, at the upper end of the harbour, between Fareham and Portsea Island. It has an ancient castle which served, during the last war, for the reception of prisoners of war, and ordnance stores.

Porco, town of Buenos Ayres, capital of a province which commences on the W. side of Potosi, from which it extends 60 m. It has its name from a mountain, in which is a rich silver mine, the first worked by the Spaniards after their conquest of the country. 25 m. W. S. W. of Potosi. Long. 67. 20. W., lat. 19. 40. S.

Porcuna, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the Salado, 22 m. N. W. of Jaen.

Porentrui, a town of Switzerland, canton of Bern, seated on the Hallan, near Mount Jura 24 m. W. S. W. of Basel. Long. 7. 10. E. lat. 47. 27. N.

Porlock, a town in Somersetshire Eng. with a trade in coal and lime. It is seated on a bay of the Bristol Channel, surrounded by hills, 7 m. W. of Minehead and 170 W. of London.

Porrogong. See Paro.

Portselou, a rich and commercial town of the kingdom of Siam. It is surrounded with 14 bastions, and situate on a large river, 300 m. N. of its mouth in the gulf of Siam. Long. 100. 2. E., lat. 17. 48. N.

Port au Prince, a sea-port of St. Domingo, seated on a bay on the W. side of the island, with considerable trade. It was nearly burnt down in 1791, by the revolting negroes, and was taken by the English and royalists in 1794. Long. 72. 10. W., lat. 18. 40. N.

Port Baltic. See Rogercrick.

Port Byron, p.v. Cayuga Co. N. Y.

Port Conway, p.v. King George Co. Va.

Port Dalrymple, a harbour on the N. coast of Van Diemen's Land, where a British settlement, dependent on the colony of Port Jackson, was established in 1804. Launceston is the capital.

Port Desire, a harbour on the E. coast of Patagonia, where ships sometimes touch in their passage to the Pacific Ocean. Long. 67. 56. W., lat. 47. 50. S.

Port Dessieux, p.v. St. Charles Co. Missouri.

Port Deposit, p.v. Cecil Co. Md. on the Susquehanna; a canal 10 m. in length, here passes along the river.

Port Discovery, a harbour on the W. coast of N. America, in the gulf of Georgia. Long. 237. 20. E., lat. 43. 7. N.

Port Egmont, one of the finest harbours in the world, on the N. W. coast of Falkland Island, discovered by commodore Byron in 1765. The whole navy of England might ride here in perfect security from all winds; and every thing for the refreshment of ships is to be obtained in abundance. Long. 55. 0. W., lat. 51. 27. S.

Port Elizabeth, p.v. Cumberland Co. N. J.

Port Francois, a harbour on the W. coast of N. America, discovered by Perouse in 1786. It is of a circular form, not to be fathomed in the middle, and bordered by peaked mountains, of an excessive height, covered with snow. The natives on this coast are described as the most complete thieves, possessed of an activity and obstinacy capable of executing the most difficult projects. Peltry is abundant, particularly that of the sea-otter. In this harbour is a small island. Long. 137. 30. W., lat. 58. 37. N.

Port Gibson, p.v. Claiborne Co. Mississippi 45 m. N. E. Natchez.

Port Genesec, Monroe Co. N. Y. at the mouth of the Genesee; on Lake Ontario; it is a port of entry with a custom house.

Port Glasgow, p.v. Severn Co. N. Y.

Port Glasgow, a town of Scotland, in Renfrewshire, near the mouth of the Clyde, erected in 1710 to serve as the port of the city of Glasgow, whose magistrates appoint a bailiff for its government. The harbour is excellent, and there are extensive warehouses on the quay, belonging to the Glasgow merchants. Contiguous to the town, and near the shore, stands the castle of Newark, a strong fortified edifice. It is 4 m. E. of Greenock and 20 W. by N. of Glasgow.

Port Jackson, a bay and harbour on the coast of New S. Wales, 13 m. N. of Botany Bay. The capes that form its entrance are high, rugged, and perpendicular cliffs; and the harbour is one of the noblest in the world, extending 14 m. in length with numerous creeks or coves. The name of Port Jackson was given to it by captain Cook, who observed it in sailing along the coast. See Sydney.

Port, Jervis, a village on the Delaware in Orange Co. N. Y. at a point where the states of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania join. A canal extends from this place to the Hudson in one direction and to the coal region in Pennsylvania, on the other, it is 108 m. in length.

Port Kent, p.v. Essex Co. N. Y.

Port Louis a strong town of France, department of Morbihan, with a citadel and a good harbour. It stands on the extremity of a peninsula, at the mouth of the Biavet, 27 m. W. of Vannes. Long. 3 18. W., lat. 47. 40. N.

Poplin, p.t. Rockingham Co. N. H. Pop. 829,91.

Port Louis, the capital of the island of Mauritius, or Isle of France, situate on the W. side of the island in a low and flat valley, surrounded by mountains. In 1817 it was almost entirely burnt down, but has since been rebuilt. It was long the chief settlement of the French in this part of the world, but now belongs to the British. Long. 57. 32. E., lat. 20. 10. N.

Port Mahon, a sea-port and chief place of a district of the island of Minorca, with an excellent harbour. It is built chiefly on lofty rocks. The houses are in general good, and are all provided with cisterns, and many with terraces. The Place D'Armes is large and handsome; on one side are barracks capable of containing 1,200 men. The only public walk is the Alameda, which is merely an alley of trees. On one side of the harbour is a dock-yard, and on the other a natural mole. Long. 4. 5. E., lat. 36. 17. N.

Port Paiz, a town on the N. coast of St. Domingo, with a good harbour, opposite the island of Tortue. Long. 73. 2. W., lat. 19. 58. N.

Port Patrick, a sea-port of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, confined by the sea on one side, and on the other by overhanging rocks and hills. It is nearly opposite Donaghadee, in Ireland, from which it is 20 m. distant; and packet boats sail hence for that place every day. The harbour is good, and has one of the finest quays in Great Britain, with a reflecting light-house. It is 28 m. W. of Wigton and 107 S. W. of Edinburgh. Long. 5. 3. W., lat. 54. 58. N.

Port Penn, a village of Newcastle Co. Del. on the Delaware, opposite Reedy Island. 8 m. S. of Newcastle.

Port Republic, p.v. Rockingham Co. Va. 131 m. N. W. Richmond.

Port Roseway. See Shelburne.

Port Royal, a sea-port of Jamaica, once a considerable town, abounding in riches and trade. In 1692 it was destroyed by an earthquake, in 1702 by a fire, in 1722 by an inundation of the sea, and in 1744 by a hurricane. After these extraordinary calamities, the custom-house and public offices were removed, and no market suffered to be held here in future. It now consists of about 200 houses, built on a neck of land which juts out several miles into the sea, and is guarded by a strong fort. The harbour is deep, and 1,000 ships may ride in it, secure from every wind. It is six miles, cross the bay, S. S. W. of Kingston. Long. 76. 45. W., lat. 18. 0. N.

Port Royal, p.t. Caroline Co. Va. on the Rappahannock 30 m. below Fredericksburg; p.v. Maryland Co. Ind; p.v. Montgomery Co. Ten.

Port Royal, an island on the coast of S. Carolina, separated from the neighbouring continent by an arm of the sea, called Broad River, which forms the most commodious harbour in the state, at the town of Beaufort.

Port St. Anne. See Killough.

Port St. Julian, a harbour on the E. coast of Patagonia, where ships bound for the Pacific usually touch. Long. 68. 44. W., lat. 49. 10. S.

Port St. Mary, a sea-port of Spain, in Audalusia, on the bay of Cadiz. The principal trade is in salt. The English made a descent here in 1702, with a design to besiege Cadiz, but without success. 10 m. N. E. of Cadiz.

Port sur Saone, a town of France, department of Upper Saone, on the river Saone, 8 m. N. W. of Vesoul.

Port Tobacco, p.t. Charles Co. Maryland, near the mouth of a small stream running into the Potomac, 34 m. S. Washington.

Port Vendre, a town of France, department of Eastern Pyrenees, with a small harbour on the Mediterranean, defended by two forts. It is 25 m. S. S. E. of Perpignan.

Port William, p.v. Gallatin Co. Ken. 44 m. N. W. Frankfort.

Portadown, a town of Ireland, in the county of Armagh, with a linen manufacture; situate on the river Bann, 16 m. N. of Newry.

Portage, a county of Ohio. Pop, 18,827. Ravenna is the capital.

Portage, a township in Portage and Sandusky Co. Ohio.

Portalegre, a strong town of Portugal, in Alentejo, and a bishop's see. It has a manufacture of woollen cloth, and is seated at the foot of a high mountain, 30 m. N. of Elvas.

Portarlinton, a borough of Ireland, partly in King's and partly in Queen's county; seated on the Barrow, 31 m. N. of Kilkenny and 36 S. W. of Dublin.

Porter, a township of Oxford Co. Me. Pop. 811. A township of Niagara Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,830; p.t. Scioto Co. Ohio.

Partici, a village 4 m. E. S. E. of the city of Naples, on a part of the site of the ancient Herculaneum, near Mount Vesuvius. Here is a palace of the king of Naples, enriched with a vast number of fine statues, and other remains of antiquity, taken out of the ruins of Herculaneum.

Portland, a peninsula in Dorsetshire Eng. connected with the mainland by a ridge of pebbles, called the Chesil Bank, extending above 7 m. up the S. W. coast. Between this bank and the mainland is a narrow arm of the sea called the Fleet. Portland Isle is 4 m. long and 2 broad, surrounded by inaccessible rocks, except at the landing place, at the N. W. end, where there is a strong castle, called Portland Castle, built by Henry VIII. The peninsula is noted for its freestone, which is used for building the finest structures, and about 9,000 tons of it are annually exported. It lies on the S. W. side of Weymouth bay, and on its S. extremity, called Portland Point, two light-houses have been erected. Long. 2. 27. W., lat. 50. 31. N.

Portland, p.t. Cumberland Co. Me. the largest town in the state, and till lately the seat of government. It has a good harbour on Casco Bay and a large coasting trade, with considerable foreign commerce. It has many handsome buildings, among which may be mentioned the custom house and the mariners church. The town is generally well built. The shipping of the port in 1828 amounted to 56,949 tons. On the N. E. side of the town stands an observatory, 70 feet in height, and the entrance to the harbour is defended by several forts. Pop. 12,601. Lat. 43. 39. N. lon. 70. 19. W.

Portland, p.t. Chatauque Co. N. Y. on Lake Ontario with a harbour. Pop. 1,771. The light house at the mouth of the harbour is a great curiosity: it is lighted with natural gas, arising from a spring in the neighbourhood.

Portland, a township in Huron Co. Ohio p.v. Dallas Co. Alab.

Portland Islands, a cluster of small islands in the S. Pacific. They are low and covered with wood; and the centre one is in Long. 149. S. E. lat. 2. 33. S.

Porto, a small sea-port of the papal states, in the patrimony of St. Peter. It is the see of a bishop (who is generally a cardinal), dependent only on the pope, and is seated on the W. side of the Tiber, 10 m. S. W. of Rome.

Porto Bello, a sea-port of Terra Firma, on the N. coast of the isthmus of Darien, nearly opposite Panama on the S. coast. It is a very unhealthy place; and the country around it swarms with toads and other reptiles in the rainy season. Before the abolition of the trade by the galleons, in 1748, and the introduction of register ships, this place was the great mart for the rich commerce of Peru and Chile. The town stands close to the sea, on the side of a mountain that surrounds the harbour, which is safe and commodious. It was taken in 1742 by admiral Vernon, who demolished the fortifications; but it has since been strongly fortified. It is 60 m. N. by E. of Panama and 300 W. of Carthage. Long. 79. 50 W., lat. 9. 33. N.

Porto Cabello, a sea-port of Venezuela, S. America, with a good harbour, defended by forts. It is a flourishing place, containing a population of 8,000, and is the centre of the navigation and commerce of Venezuela. 70 m. W. by S. of Jagde Leon. Long. 67. 32. E., lat. 10. 31. N.

Porto Farino, a sea-port of the kingdom of Tunis. Long. 10. 16. E., lat. 37. 12. N.

Porto Ferrajo, the capital of the island of Elba, with a good harbour, capable of containing the largest fleets. This town is celebrated as having been the residence of Napoleon from May 4, 1814, to February 26, 1815, when he sailed on his final expedition to France. Its position is central in the Mediterranean; and it perfectly commands the coast of Italy. It is a very pretty town, built on a shelving rock, that closes in a circular bay, about 2 m. deep and as many in breadth. The land all round is high and woody, and the entrance to the bay is easy of approach. The streets and fortifications rise one above another, like rows of seats in an ancient amphitheatre, and present a most beautiful spectacle to those who approach by water. A commodious quay communicates, by means of large flights of steps, with all the streets. Porto Ferrajo was built and fortified by Cosmo I. duke of Florence in 1548; but the fortifications were not finished till 1628, when Cosmo II. completed them with a magnificence equal to that displayed by the old Romans in their public undertakings; and it is now deemed impregnable. The gates are decorated with sculpture, and the rings for fastening cables to arc of carved bronze. 7 m. S. W. of Piombino on the coast of Italy. Long. 12. 17. E., lat. 42. 53. N.

Porto Fino, a small sea-port on the coast of Genoa, with a fort, situate between two mountains, 13 m. S. E. of Genoa

Porto Galete, a town of Spain, in Biscay, seated in a small bay, 10 m. N. W. of Bilbao.

Porto Greco, a town of Naples, in the Capitanata, near the gulf of Venice, 16 m. N. W. of Manfredonia.

Porto Guarao, a town of Austrian Italy, in Friuli, seated on the Lema, 20 m. W. by S. of Palma Nova.

Porto Longone, a sea-port on the S. E. side of the Isle of Elba, with a good harbour, and a fortress upon a rock, almost inaccessible. It is 4 m. S. E. of Porto Ferrajo and 35 N. W. of Orbitello, on the coast of Italy. Long. 10. 20. E., lat. 42. 50. N.

Porto Marina, a town of Spain, in Galicia, 48 m. E. of Compostella.

Porto Praya, a town and bay of St. Jago, one of the Cape de Verde islands. The town stands on an elevated plain, and is the residence of the Portuguese governor of the islands. Long. 23. 20. W., lat. 14. 54. N.

Porto del Principe, a sea-port on the N. coast of Cuba, with a good harbour. Near it are several springs of bitumen. Long. 78. 15. W., lat. 21. 52. N.

Porto Real, a sea-port of Spain, in Andalusia, on the E. side of the bay of Cadiz, 7 m. E. of Cadiz.

Porto Rico, an island of the W. Indies, 60 m. E. of St. Domingo, belonging to the Spaniards. It is 120 m. long and 40 broad, diversified with woods, valleys, and plains, and watered by springs and rivers, but unhealthy in the rainy season. It produces sugar, rum, ginger, cotton, maize, and rice; and there are so many cattle that they are often killed for the sake of the skins alone. St. Juan de Porto Rico is the capital.

Porto Santo, an island in the Atlantic, the least of the Madeiras, 15 m. in circumference. In 1518 a Portuguese ship, coasting along the African shore, was driven out to sea by a sudden squall, and, when they all expected to perish, they discovered this island, which, on account of their escape, they named Porto Santo; and hence they described the island of Madeira. It produces little corn; but there are oxen and wild hogs, and a vast number of rabbits. Its most valuable productions are dragons' blood, honey, and wax. It has no harbour, but good anchorage in the road. Long. 16. 25. W., lat. 32. 58. N.

Porto Seguro, a fertile province of Brazil, S. of that of Ilheos and N. of Spiritu Santo. The capital, of the same name, is seated on the top of a rock, at the mouth of a river that flows into the Atlantic. Long. 40. 0. W., lat. 16. 20. S.

Port Vecchio, a sea-port of Corsica, seated on a bay on the E. coast of the island, 38 m. S. E. of Ajaccio. Long. 9. 10. E., lat. 41. 40. N.

Porto Venero, a sea-port on the coast of Genoa, at the entrance of the gulf of Spezzia. It has a good harbour, and is seated on the side of a hill, at the top of which is a fort. 5 m. S. of Spezzia. Long. 9. 38. E., lat. 44. 5. N.

Portree, a town of Scotland, on the E. side of the Isle of Skye, one of the Hebrides. The inhabitants trade chiefly in black cattle, sheep, and kelp. It has an excellent harbour, sheltered at its mouth by the Isle of Raaza. Long. 6. 16. W., lat. 57. 33. N.

Portsea, an island between Chichester Bay and the harbour of Portsmouth, in Hampshire, Eng. It is a low tract, about 14 m. in circumference, separated from the mainland on the N. by a creek, over which are two bridges, one for the entrance and the other for the departure of passengers.

At the S. W. extremity of it, is situate the town of Portsmouth.

Portsmouth, a borough and sea-port in Hampshire, Eng. It is the most considerable haven for men of war, and the most strongly fortified place in England. Its capacious harbour is made by a bay running up between the island of Portsea, on which the town is situate, and the opposite peninsula, having a narrow entrance commanded by the town and forts. Many of the largest ships are always laid up here: and in time of war, it is the principal rendezvous of the grand channel fleet. The docks, arsenals, storehouses, barracks, &c., are all of capital magnitude, and kept in the most perfect order. To the S. of the town is the noted road of Spithead, where the men of war anchor when prepared for actual service. Portsmouth has one spacious church, and contains 7,269 inhabitants. Portsea, built on what was formerly called Portsmouth Common, is now become much larger than the parent town, containing a population of 34,785. 72 m. S. W. London Long. 1. 6. W., lat. 50. 47. N.

Portsmouth, p.t. Rockingham Co. N. H. at the mouth of the Piscataqua with an excellent harbour. It is the only sea-port in the state, and has considerable commerce. Here is a navy yard the United States. The town has 7 churches a branch of the U. S. Branch bank, 2 insurance offices, and an atheneum. Two bridges cross the river to Kittery in Maine. In December 1813 a fire destroyed 397 buildings here. It is 24 m. N. E. Newburyport, 56. m. N. by E. Boston and S. S. W. Portland. Pop. 8,032. Lat. 43. 5. Lon. 70. 45. W.

Portugal, the most western country on the continent of Europe, bounded on the W. and S. by the Atlantic, Ocean, and E. and N. by Spain. It extends from 36. 56. to 42. 20. N. lat., and from 6. 25. to 9. 30. W. long., and is divided into the provinces of Entre Douro-e-Minho, Tras os Montes, Beira, Estremadura, Alemtejo, and Algarve. It contains 36,510 sq. m. and a pop. of 3,782,550. Though Spain and Portugal are in the same climate, yet the air of the latter is much more temperate than that of the former, on account of the neighbourhood of the sea. Agriculture is in a very backward state; the implements of industry are of the rudest construction, and very little corn is raised. Indian corn, imported from Africa, is used by the peasants instead of wheat. Lemons flourish here in great abundance. This fruit was introduced into the country from the east by the Arabs. Olives, vineyards, oranges, nuts, almonds, figs, and raisins are plentiful, and in the low grounds rice and maize are cultivated.

The inhabitants also make considerable quantities of salt with the sea-water, especially in the bay of St. Ubes, whence a great deal is exported. Their export trade consists of the produce of their own country, and the merchandise which they receive from their foreign possessions, comprising Madeira, Cape Verd Islands, some settlements in Africa, Goa, and Macao: the latter consists of wine, sugar, tobacco, cotton, indigo, hides, and many excellent drugs. The horses of Portugal were formerly in great esteem; but they are now so fond of mules that horses are scarce. Towards the frontiers of Spain there are mountains, in which gold and silver were formerly found; and the river Tajo was anciently celebrated by the poets for its golden sands. There are also mines of iron, tin, lead, quarries of marble, and some precious stones. The Portuguese are indolent and luxurious. Plays and church festivals, bull fights, balls, music, &c., engross the whole attention of those who are not compelled to labour for their subsistence. The peasants are in a state of vassalage, and subsist on the hardest fare. In many respects they bear a striking resemblance to the Highlanders of Scotland. The principal rivers are the Tagus, Douro, Guadiana, Mondego, and Caldao. The government is an absolute monarchy. Formerly it had its Cortes or representative body, but, from 1697 to the recent revolution, they were never assembled. The established religion is the Roman Catholic; and there are two archbishops and 13 bishops.

Portugal appears to have been known at an early period to the Phenicians and Carthaginians. It subsequently followed the fortune of Spain, and, after being the scene of various military operations, was finally reduced and constituted a Roman province under Augustus. The Romans were succeeded by the Goths and other barbarians. The Saracens, or Moors, invaded the peninsula from Africa, and after the battle of Xeres, A. D. 712, set up several kingdoms, and were not expelled from Portugal till the 15th century. In 1092 Alphonso VI., king of Castile and Leon, made Henry of Burgundy, grandson of Robert king of France, count of Portugal, as a reward for assisting him against the Moors. Alphonso, son of Henry, was the first king. The last of his descendants by the male line dying in 1580, Philip II. of Spain took possession of the throne in right of his mother. The rapacity of the Spanish viceroys was so great that in 1640, the Portuguese revolted, and made John IV., duke of Braganza, king. In 1807 the British fleet preserved the royal family from falling into the hands of Bonaparte, and conveyed them to Brazil. Portugal itself, also, after a long and severe contest, was delivered from the French yoke by English armies under the command of the duke of Wellington and other generals. The Queen died at Rio Janeiro, March 20, 1816, in the 82nd year of her age, and the prince regent became king. At the conclusion of the general peace, the people became discontented, partly through the degradation of the kingdom to the situation of a dependent colony, and partly through the maladministration of the regency. Plot after plot was formed, in which many officers of distinction were implicated, who, as soon as they were detected, were removed, and replaced by British officers. This only served to increase the discontent both of the people and of the army, and to hasten a revolution. Every thing having been previously arranged between the civil and military authorities, a new constitution was announced at Oporto August 24, 1820, and in September a council of regency was formed at Lisbon, and letters issued to assemble the cortes. John VI. by a royal decree issued at Rio Janeiro, February 1821, approved of the constitution, and, leaving his eldest son Don Pedro as regent of Brazil, returned to Portugal, and took an oath to maintain the new constitution, July 4, 1821. On the 12th of October, 1822, the Brazilians proclaimed the prince regent constitutional emperor of Brazil, and the independence of that empire has been since acknowledged by the court of Lisbon. On the 30th of April, 1824, Don Miguel, the king's youngest son, general of the army, surrounded with guards the palace of his father, in order to depose him, and to make his nephew regent. The foreign ambassadors discountenanced the conspiracy; the king took refuge on board an English man of war; under the protection of Britain he resumed the government; and Don Miguel left the kingdom. John VI. died in March, 1826.

As soon as Pedro IV. heard of his father's death, he declared his determination to remain in Brazil, and to abdicate the throne of Portugal in favour of his daughter Donna Maria da Gloria (who was born in 1819), on condition that his brother Don Miguel should marry her, and that a free constitution should be adopted as contained in a charter which he sent over from Brazil. The acceptance of this charter was resisted by the ultra-royalist faction at Lisbon, and a rebellion took place under the direction of the marquis of Chaves. In consequence of the invasion of the kingdom by the rebels, who had mustered their armies in Spain, the sister of Pedro IV., who had by him been appointed regent, claimed the assistance of George IV.; who, in compliance with ancient treaties between the two kingdoms, sent an army to Lisbon in 1827, which checked the rebellion. Don Miguel, who resided at Vienna, returned to Lisbon in the spring of 1828, having first visited Paris and London, at both which places he professed his determination to adhere to the constitution. The professions of Don Miguel soon appeared to be insincere, and on the 30th of June he assumed the title of king of Portugal and Algarve. A weak resistance was made by the garrison and inhabitants of Oporto, but it was soon overcome, and Don Miguel now reigns as absolute king. Lisbon is the capital.

Posados, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, seated on the Guadalquivir, 19 m. S. W. of Cordova.

Posata, a town on the E. coast of the island of Sardinia, 45 m. E. S. E. of Castle Aragonese. Long. 9. 30. E., lat. 40. 36. N.

Posega, a town of Sclavonia, capital of a palatinate of the same name. It was taken from the Turks, by the Austrians in 1687; and is seated near the Orlava, 18 m. N. N. W. of Brod.

Posen, Grand duchy of, a province of the Prussian states, comprising that part of Poland which was restored to Prussia in 1815. On the E. it is bounded by the new kingdom of Poland, and S. and W. by Silesia and Brandenburg. It is divided into the two governments of Posen and Bromberg, contains about 12,000 sq. m. with 800,000 inhabitants, and is watered by the Netz, the Wartha, the Odra, and the Brahe.

Posen, the capital of Prussian Poland, and of the government of the same name, is a bishop's see, and has a university, and a castle on an island in the river Wartha. The cathedral is magnificent. The suburbs are extensive, and contain many fine buildings. The river Wartha frequently inundates the town, but is very beneficial to its trade with Germany. By the partition of Poland, in 1773, Posen became subject to the king of Prussia. In 1806 it was entered by the French army, under marshal Davoust, and added to the duchy of Warsaw, till 1815, when it was restored to Prussia. It is seated in a pleasant plain, 27 m. W. by S. of Gnesna. Long. 17. 0. E., lat. 52. 24. N.

Posey, a county of Indiana. Pop. 6,883. Mount Vernon is the capital.

Posneck, a town of Saxony, in the principality of Aldenburg. It has manufactures of cloth and leather, and is seated on the Gams, near its confluent with the Orla, 8 m. N. E. of Saalfeld.

Possession Island, an island in the S. Pacific, near the N. point of New Holland. Here captain Cook hoisted the British colours, and took possession of all the E. or N. E. coast of New Holland in the name of king George III., which he called New S. Wales. Long. 141. 30. E., lat. 10. 33. S.

Possession Island, an uninhabited island in the S. Pacific. Long. 141. 40. E., lat. 46. 30. S.

Possinco, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, 10 m. N. E. of Santarem.

Post Oak, p.v. Roane Co. Ten.

Potenza, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, seated near the source of the Basiento, 11 m. S. by W. of Acerenza.

Potomac, a river of the United States, which rises in the N. W. part of Virginia, and separates that state from Maryland, almost its whole course, till it enters the W. side of Chesapeake Bay. It is navigable nearly 300 m. for large ships and where it enters the Chesapeake is 7 1-2 m. wide. Its whole length is 550 m. The passage of the Potomac, through the mountains of the Blue Ridge, at Harper's Ferry, presents the appearance of an immense rent, three quarters of a mile wide, through a stupendous wall of rocks. The broken fragments of the mountain which lie scattered all around, and its craggy front, torn down to the base, attest the violence of the disruption, and forcibly remind the spectator of the period, when the mountain ridge opposed a barrier to the stream, and when its collected waters swelled to such a mass as to tear away the mountain from its foundation. Washington, Alexandria and Georgetown are situated upon this river.

Potomac and Ohio Canal, called also the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, is designed to unite the Potomac with the Ohio. It leaves the Potomac at Georgetown and proceeds up the north-eastern bank of the river through the mountains, by a tunnel 4 miles in length, and down the vallies of the Youghiogeny and Monongahela to the Ohio.

Its length will be 360 m. and its width 60 feet. It was begun July 4th 1828.

Potosi, a town of Bolivia. Here are the best silver mines in all America, in a mountain in the form of a sugar-loaf. Silver was as common in this place as iron is in Europe; but the mines are now much exhausted, or at least little is obtained in comparison of what was formerly produced. The country around is naked and barren. The town is seated at the bottom of the mountain of Potosi, 260 m. W. N. W. of Arica. Long. 67. 30. W., lat. 19. 50. S.

Potosi, p.t. Washington Co. Missouri, 70 m. W. S. W. St. Louis. It is surrounded by numerous lead mines. See Missouri.

Potsdam, a province of the Prussian states, in Brandenburg, comprehending the districts formerly termed the Ucker Mark, the Mark of Prenzitz, and the greatest part of the Middle Mark. It is bounded N. by Pomerania and W. Prussia, and S. and W. by Saxony. The city of Berlin, with a small district lying around it, forms a distinct government. Potsdam contains an area of about 8,000 sq. m., with 488,000 inhabitants.

Potsdam, the capital of the foregoing government, situated on an island formed by the rivers Spree and Havel. The public buildings display great magnificence and taste. The royal palace is an admirable structure, and the houses near it are almost all built in the Italian style. In the market place is a marble obelisk, 75 feet in height; also marble statues of the first four kings of Prussia. The garrison church is large, and has a marble pulpit, under which is the tomb of the Great Frederick, whose remains are enclosed in a wooden coffin, covered with copper, without any ornament or victorious trophies, to recall the memory of his actions. On a hill, near the city, is the royal palace of Sans Souci, which is only one story high, yet remarkable for its grandeur and magnificence. The inhabitants of Potsdam have manufactures of silk, velvet, cotton, linen, &c. It was entered without opposition on the 24th of October, 1805, by the French, who carried away with exultation the sword and scarf worn by the immortal Frederick during the seven years' war. 13 m. W. S. W. of Berlin. Long. 13. 49. E., lat. 52. 52. N.

Potsdam, p.t. St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. 90 m. W. Plattsburg. Pop. 3,650.

Potter, a county of the W. District of Pennsylvania. Pop. 1,265. Cowdersport is the capital; also a township of Centre Co. Pa.

Potter's Hollow, p.v. Albany Co. N. Y.

Potterstown, a village of Hunterdon Co. N. J.

Pottersville, p.v. Louisa Co. Va.

Potteries, The, a district in Staffordshire, Eng. extending about 10 m. in length and one and a half in breadth. It comprises the towns and villages of Burslem, Hanley, Lane End, Etruria, Stoke upon Trent, Tunstall, Longport, Shelton, Brownhills, &c., situated in a part of the county abounding in coal, and clays of great variety in colour and texture, which, together with the great canal intercourse kept up with all parts of the kingdom, furnish a large portion of industry and wealth.

Potton, a town in Bedfordshire, Eng. 12 m. E. of Bedford and 48 N. by W. of London.

Pottsgrove, a township of Montgomery Co. Pa. on the Schuylkill.

Pracels. See Paracels.

Prachatitz, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Prachin, 23 m. S. by W. of Pisek.

Prachin, a mountain of Bohemia, on which formerly stood a castle of the same name. It gives name to a circle on the W. side of the Muldau, of which Pisek is the capital.

Prades, a town of France, department of Eastern Pyrenees, seated in a fine plain on the river Tet, 24 m. W. S. W. of Perpignan.

Prades, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, near which is a magnificent abbey, where the ancient kings of Arragon were interred. It is 39 m. N. W. of Barcelona.

Praga, a town of Poland, on the Vistula, opposite Warsaw, of which it is considered as a suburb.

Praglas, a town of the Sardinian states in Piedmont, 7 m. W. of Turin.

Prague, the capital of Bohemia, and formerly its archiepiscopal see. It comprehends four towns, the Old, New, and Little Town, and the Hradschin. It is 15 m. in circumference, is built upon seven hills, and contains 85,000 inhabitants. The Muldau runs through the city, separating the Old Town from the New, and over it is a bridge of 18 arches, with a strong tower at each end. The Old Town is very populous; the houses are high and the streets narrow. In this part are the remains of a palace, where the ancient kings resided; but the finest ornament is the university, frequented by a great number of students; here also is a magnificent college, formerly belonging to the Jesuits, and the Jews have nine synagogues. The New Town contains fine structures, handsome gardens, and large streets; also an arsenal, and a secular foundation, whose abbess was a princess of the empire. The Little Town, which is the most ancient part of Prague, has broad streets, and is very populous. The Hradschin once belonged to the Little Town but in 1750 it was made the fourth town of Prague: its principal buildings are the royal palace, in which is a hall, 100 paces long and 40 broad, without any pillar to support the roof, the cathedral of St. Veit, containing the burial-place of the kings and many relics; the chapel of Our Lady of Loretto; the magnificent archiepiscopal palace; and the large palace of Tschernin. Prague has suffered frequents devastation by war. The White Mountain, without the gate of Strahow, is celebrated for the victory gained in 1620 by the Austrians over Frederic V., the elector palatine, whom the Bohemians had chosen for their king. In 1631 Prague was taken by the Saxons; and by the Swedes in 1648. It was taken by storm in 1741 by the French, who were obliged to leave it in 1742. In 1757 it was besieged by the king of Prussia, after a great victory, obtained near this city, over the Austrians; but the defeat at Kollin obliged him to raise the siege. 75 m. S. E. of Dresden. Long. 14. 30. E., lat. 50. 6. N.

Prairie, townships in Wayne, Holmes, and Franklin Cos. Ohio.

Prenzlo, a town of Brandenburg, capital of what was formerly called the Ucker Mark. It contains 6 churches, and has a brisk trade in corn, tobacco, and cattle. Seated on the lake and river Ucker, 58 m. N. N. E. of Berlin. Long. 13. 55. E., lat. 53. 19. N.

Prerau, a town of Moravia, capital of a circle of the same name. It is seated on the Beczwa, 13 m. S. E. of Olmutz. Long. 17. 29 E., lat. 49. 23. N.

Presburg, a city of Hungary. It is seated on the Danube, which is here very rapid, and about 250 yards in breadth. The inhabitants are estimated at 30,000. Its castle, a noble Gothic structure, was burnt down in the commencement of the present century. This town was declared by a royal decree of 1536, the capital of Hungary, on account of its vicinity to Vienna, and the sovereigns are still crowned in its cathedral; but the principal officers of government reside at Buda, and the diets and supreme courts of judicature meet at Perth. In December, 1805, a treaty of peace was concluded here between Austria and France. 33 m. E. by S. of Vienna and 95 W. N. W. of Buda. Long 17. 9. E., lat. 48. 9. N.

Prescot, a town of Lancashire, Eng. It is a long straggling town, and may be said to be built almost over coal pits, several being worked close to its extremities. It is estimated that 2,000 persons are employed in the collieries of Prescot; whence Liverpool is chiefly supplied with fuel. Here are manufactures of watch movements, pinion wire, small files, and coarse earthen ware; and also some manufactories of cotton, hats, &c. 8 m. E. of Liverpool and 197 N. N. W. of London.

Prescot, p.t. Hampshire Co. Mass. 70 m. W. Boston. Pop. 158; also a village of Upper Canada, on the St. Lawrence nearly opposite Ogdensburg.

Presezano, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro. It appears by an inscription to be the ancient Rufo, and its territory has the name of Costa Ruraria. It is 23. m N. of Naples.

Presidii, Stato delli, formerly the name of a small territory of Italy, on the coast of the Siennese. It includes 5 fortresses, which were retained by Spain when the territory of Sienna was ceded to the duke of Tuscany in 1557. In 1735 it was ceded to the king of the Two Sicilies; and now belongs to the grand duchy of Tuscany.

Prestegyn, a town of Wales, in Radnorshire. The site of its castle is now laid out in public walks. It is seated near the source of the Lug, in a rich valley, 23 m. N. N. W. of Hereford and 151 N. N. W. of London. Long. 2 53. W. lat. 52. 15. N.

Prestina, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 11 m. N. of Coimbra.

Preston, a borough in Lancashire, Eng. The chief manufactures are the various branches of cotton and muslin, which are now carried on to a considerable extent. Preston exhibits a nearer approach than any other town in the kingdom to universal suffrage, the right of voting being in the male inhabitants at large. It is noted for the defeat of the pretender's adherents in 1715, when most of them were made prisoners; also for a kind of public carnival, or jubilee, held every 20 years, the last of which was in 1822. It is seated near the river Ribble and the Lancaster Canal, 22 m. S. S. E. of Lancaster and 217 N. N. W. of London. Long. 2. 53. W., lat. 53. 46. N.

Preston, p.t. New London Co. Conn. on the Thames 15 m. above New London. Pop. 1,935; p.t. Chenango Co. N. Y. 106 m. W. Albany. Pop. 1,213.

Preston, a county of the W. District of Virginia. Pop. 5,099 Kingwood is the capital.

Prestonpans, a town of Scotland, in Haddingtonshire, with a safe harbour, called Morrison's Haven, on the frith of Forth. It has manufactures of salt, stone and earthen ware, and bricks and tiles. At this place the royal army was defeated by the Pretender's adherents in 1745. 8 m. E. by N. of Edinburgh.

Prince of Wales Fort, the most northern settlement of the Hudson Bay Company, on the west side of Hudson's Bay, at the mouth of Church hill River. Long. 94. 7. W., lat. 58. 47. N.

Prince of Wales Island, or Penang, an island 2 m. from the W. coast of Malacca, 18 m. long and 8 broad, divided longitudinally by a ridge of mountains. The channel to the mainland is a safe road for ships. This island was purchased of the king of Queda by the English E. India Company, who formed a settlement here in 1786, and, in five years after, Georgetown, its capital, was established as a sea-port. The inhabitants were estimated in 1805 at 14,000, since which time they have considerably increased. Long 93. 50 E., lat. 5. 36. N.

Prince William Henry's Island, an island in the Eastern Ocean, lying W. N. W. of Tench Island. It is pretty high, well wooded, and about 70 m. in circuit. The population is estimated at 50,000. It was discovered by lieutenant Ball in 1790, and a high mountain in the centre was called Mount Philip. Long. 149. 30. E., lat. 1. 32. S.—Also the name of an island in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by captain Wallis in 1767. Long. 141. 6. W., lat. 17. 0. S.

Prince William Sound, a gulf on the N. W. coast of America, discovered by Cook in 1778, and visited and explored by Vancouver in 1794. The dress of both sexes is a sort of close robe, made of the skins of various animals, and commonly worn with the hairy side outward, sometimes reaching only to the knees, but generally to the ancles. The men often paint their faces of a black colour, and of a bright red, and sometime of a blueish or leaden hue; but not in regular figure. The women puncture or stain the chin with black, that comes to a point on each of their cheeks. Their canoes are of two sorts; the one large and open, the other small and covered: the framing consists of slender pieces of wood, and the outside is composed of the skins of seals, or other sea animals stretched over the wood. Their weapons, and implements for hunting and fishing, resemble those used by the Esquimaux. The principal animals are bears, common and pine martens, sea otters, seals, racoons, small ermines, foxes, and the whitish cat or lynx. The birds found here are the falcon, the great king-fisher, the white-headed eagle, and the humming bird. Long. 147. 21. W., lat. 59. 33. N.

Prince's Island, an island near the W. coast of Guinea, 90 m. in circumference, discovered by the Portuguese in 1471. It is elevated and fertile, and has a town on the N. part, with a good harbour. Long. 7. 40. E., lat. 1. 40. N.

Prince's Island, a small island in the Indian Ocean, near the W. entrance of the strait of Sunda. It is visited by European ships for wood and water. Long. 104. 30. E., lat. 6. 15. S.

Prince's Islands, four small islands, in the sea of Marmora, near the strait of Constantinople, called Prinkipo, Prote, Kalke, and Antigone. The first is the largest, and has a town containing above 2,000 inhabitants. Long. 28. 56. E., lat. 40. 51. N.

Princeton, p. t. Worcester Co. Mass. 52 m. W. Boston. Pop. 1,345. It was called Wachusett by the Indians, and within its limits stands the mountain of that name, which See.

Princeton, p. t. Somerset and Middlesex Cos. N. J. 40 m. N. E. Philadelphia. The college of New Jersey, or Nassau Hall, is established at this place. It was founded in 1746; it has 10 instructors and 105 students; the libraries have 12,000 volumes. It has two vacations in spring and autumn of 12 weeks. Commencement is in September. Here is also a Theological Seminary.

Principato, a province of Naples, divided into Principato Citra and Ultra, that is, the Further and Hither Principality. The former is 60 m. long and 30 broad; the soil fertile in wine, corn, oil, and saffron; and it has a great deal of silk, and several mineral springs. Salerno is the capital. Principato Ultra is 37 m. long and 30 broad; and the soil not fertile in corn or wine, but it produces chesnuts, and has excellent pastures. Avellino is the capital.

Pristina, a town of Romania, and a bishop's see, which was pillaged by the Austrians in 1689. It is seated on the Rusca, 150 m. S. by E. of Belgrade. Long. 21. 36. E., lat. 42. 43. N.

Pritzwalk, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, seated on the Domnitz, 13 m. E. N. E. of Perleberg.

Privas, a town of France, capital of the department of Ardeche. It is seated on a hill, near the confluence of three small rivers, 68 m. S. of Lyons. Long. 4. 36. E., lat. 44. 45.

Procida, an island in the gulf of Naples, near that of Ischia, 8 m. in circumference, and very fertile and populous. The capital, of the same name, is a small fortified place, on a high craggy rock, by the sea side. Long. 14. 8. E., lat. 40. 43. N.

Proctorsville, p. v. Windsor Co. Vt. 88 m. S. Montpelier.

Prodano, an island in the Mediterranean, near the W. coast of the Morea, formerly called Sphacteria. It is 36 m. S. S. E. of Zante. Long. 21. 24. E., lat. 37. 15. N.

Prome, a city of Birmah, province of Ava. It was formerly more considerable than at present, having been greatly reduced by frequent wars. Much teak timber is sent hence to Rangoon. It is seated on the Irrawaddy, 120 m. N. W. of Pegu. Long. 95. 0. E., lat. 18. 50. N.

Prosperous, a village of Ireland, in the county of Kildare, 16 m. S. W. of Dublin. It has a considerable manufacture of cotton.

Prosnitz, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Olmutz, 8 m. S. S. W. of Olmutz.

Provence, a former province of France, which now forms the department of Var, Lower Alps, and Mouths of the Rhone.

Providence, one of the Bahama Islands, and the best of those planted by the English. It was taken by the Spaniards, in 1782, but retaken the next year. A light-house was erected, in 1804, on an eminence overlooking Nassau, the chief town. Long. 77. 20. W., lat. 25. 3. N.

Providence, an island in the Atlantic, which the Buccaneers fortified, but afterwards abandoned. It is 150 m. E. of the coast of Nicaragua. Long. 80. 44. W., lat. 13. 25. N.

Providence river, a stream of Rhode Island formed by the union of two rivers just above the city of Providence. It flows into Narraganset Bay, and is navigable from Providence to the sea for ships of 900 tons.

Providence, city, chief of a county of the same name in Rhode Island, is the largest place in the state and the second city in New England for population, wealth, and business. It stands at the head of Narraganset Bay, which at this extremity becomes narrowed to the width of a river. It is built on both sides of the river, the two parts being connected by a bridge. The new town on the W. of the river has all the bustle and liveliness, and displays the flourishing appearance of a commercial city. The hill on the opposite side, or East Providence, is chiefly occupied by private mansions, beautifully situated, and adorned with gardens and court yards. On the summit of a steep eminence stands the colege, overlooking the city. The streets are irregular, but there are many beautiful situations and fine edifices in the city. Here is a handsome arcade three stories high, with 28 rooms on each floor. Each front consists of an Ionic portico, with granite pillars. Providence has 12 churches, a theatre, a public library, many cotton and woolen manufactories, paper mills, dye-houses, &c. Its distance from the sea is 35 miles, but merchant ships of the largest size can come up to the wharves. Steam-boats pass between Providence and New York, through Long Island Sound, during all the open season, and nearly the whole of the summer travelling from Boston to the S. passes by this route. Providence was founded by Roger Williams in 1636. It retained the denomination and government of a town until 1831, when a city charter was adopted.

Brown University at this place was founded in 1764, and was first established at Warren: it was removed to Providence in 1770. It has been supported solely by individual patronage, and its funds are not large. The college edifices are two brick buildings, containing 100 rooms for students, and others for public purposes. The college is delightfully situated on an eminence in the E. part of the town, which commands a beautiful prospect. The libraries contain 12,000 volumes, including those belonging to literary societies. The officers are a President and 8 Professors. The board of trustees is composed of 36 members, of whom 22 must be Baptists, 5 Quakers, 5 Episcopalians and four Congregationalists. The Fellows, or Learned Faculty, are 12, of whom 8, including the President, must be Baptists. The number of students in 1831, was 95. There are 3 vacations in May, September and December, amounting to 13 weeks. Commencement is in September.

Providence is a port of entry, and in 1828 owned 20,252 tons of shipping. It is in lat. 41. 51. N., long. 71. 10. W., 30 m. N. by W. Newport, 40 S. S. W. Boston, 74 E. Hartford. Pop. 16,832.

Providence Inn, p.v. Chesterfield Co. Va.

Providence, a county of Rhode Island. Pop. 47,014. Providence city is the capital.

Provincetown, p.t. Barnstable Co. Mass. on Cape Cod, at the extremity of the peninsula. It is 60 m. S. E. of Boston in a straight line and 116 by land. It has an excellent harbour but there are no wharves. The houses are of one story and built on piles driven into the sand with spaces between them for the sand to drift through, otherwise they would be completely buried. The inhabitants live by fishing, as the cape produces nothing but a scanty vegetation of coarse grass sufficient for the pasturage of a few cows. Pop. 1,710.

Provins, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne, celebrated for its mineral waters. It has a considerable trade in corn, and some woolen manufactures, and is seated on the Vouzie, 60 m S. E. of Paris.

Pruck. See Bruek.

Prusa, or Prusia. See Bursa.

Prussia, a large country of Europe, occupying a great part of the N. of Germany, and extending with little interruption from the confines of Lithuania to those of the Netherlands. It is a very fertile country, producing a great deal of flax, hemp, and corn. There are a great number of domestic animals: and the sea, the rivers, and lakes, supply abundance of fish. Game abounds; and elks, wild asses, and uri, are found in the forests: these last are of a huge size, and have some resemblance to beeves; their hides are extremely thick and strong, and they are sold to foreigners at a great price. One of the most remarkable productions of this country is yellow amber, which is found along the sea-coast. There are two large lakes, besides the rivers Vistula and Pregel. The inhabitants are generally of a good constitution, laborious, and robust. There are a great number of mechanics; but the principal business is husbandry, with the feeding of cattle. The present monarchy of Prussia consists of two distinct parts separated by the German States, and contains 105,770 sq. m. of territory, and a pop. of 12,552,278. The army amounts to 165,000 men. The revenue is 40,000,000 dollars: the public debt 120,000,000. The government is an absolute monarchy. The religion of the royal family is protestant, but all creeds are tolerated.

In the 13th century Prussia belonged to the knights of the Teutonic order. In 1454, that part since denominated Polish, or W. Prussia, revolted to Casimir IV. king of Poland, and was incorporated into the dominions of the republic. At the same time the knights were constrained to hold the remaining part, called Ducal or E. Prussia, as a fief of the crown of Poland. In 1525 Albert, the grand master, betrayed the interests of his fraternity, and concluded a treaty with Sigismund, king of Poland, by which E. Prussia was erected into an hereditary duchy, and given to him as a Polish fief. Having adopted the tenets of Luther, he married a princess of Denmark, and transmitted this rich inheritance to his descendants: one of whom, Frederic William, was the first duke that threw off his dependence on Poland. The foundation of the Prussian monarchy was established by him, between 1640 and 1688. His son and successor, Frederic, in 1701 assumed the title of King of Prussia, which was soon after acknowledged by all the Christian powers, except Poland, which did not acknowledge it till 1764. In 1742 Frederic II. acquired the duchy of Silesia from the house of Austria; and by his wonderful victories, and the still more wonderful resources by which he repaired occasional defeats, he became the admiration of the age. In 1772 he compelled the Poles to cede to him Western Prussia, excepting the cities of Dantzic and Thorn. He cultivated the arts of peace as well as war, distinguishing himself as a poet, philosopher, and legislator, and expending large sums in the improvement of the country. He was succeeded by his nephew, Frederic William II., in 1786, who forcibly annexed to his kingdom Dantzic and Thorn, with several considerable provinces, which he styled Southern Prussia. He had also a share in the general contest against France, in the early part of the revolution; but made peace with that country in April, 1795; and died at Berlin in 1797.

His son, Frederic William III., continued on amicable terms with France, till the dissolution of the Germanic body in 1806, and the consequent formation of the Confederation of the Rhine, when, thinking himself aggrieved, he declared war against France. This war was of short duration, but of most disastrous consequence to Prussia. By the peace of Tilsit, the whole of the Polish dominions belonging to Prussia, with a few exceptions, were transferred to another prince; and the king of Prussia had further to renounce his right to all the territories, without exception, situated between the Elbe and the Rhine; to those belonging to Saxony and the House of Anhalt on the right bank of the Elbe; and, lastly, to the circle of Rothus, in Lower Lusatia, which was ceded to Saxony. Thus was Prussia reduced to the lowest rank among the powers of Europe. On the memorable retreat of the French armies from Russia, and the arrival of the Russians within the territories of Prussia, she, however, threw off her alliance with France, joined Russia in the war, and made such extraordinary efforts to retrieve her lost character, by the magnitude of her armies and the courage which she maintained in the field, that on the conclusion of the war all the countries which had been wrested from her by the treaty of Tilsit were restored.

The kingdom is now divided into 10 provinces, namely, E. Prussia, W. Prussia, Brandenburg, Pomerania, Westphalia, Cleves and Berg, Silesia, Posen, Saxony, and Lower Rhine; which are subdivided into 28 governments. For military purposes, the kingdom is divided into five great parts, viz. Prussia, Brandenburg and Pomerania, Silesia and Prussian Poland, Saxony, and finally Westphalia with the Lower Rhine. Berlin is the capital of all Prussia.

Prussia, Proper, an extensive division of the Prussian states, between the northern frontier of Poland and the Baltic. It comprises the provinces of E. and W. Prussia, divided formerly by the Vistula, and now by a line a few m. to the E. of that river. E. Prussia lies between 19. 20. and 24. 15. of E. long. and 52. 32. and 56. 3. of N. lat., and has a superficial extent of 15,000 sq. m. with 850,000 inhabitants. It is divided into the governments of Konigsberg and Gumbinnen. W. Prussia is a less extensive country, its area being 10,000 sq. m. its population 560,000. It is divided into the governments of Dantzic and Marienwäder.

Pruth, a river that rises in Marmaroseh, in Hungary, crosses part of the palatinate of Lemburg, flows through Moldavia, and enters the Danube above Leni, in Bessarabia.

Pruym, a town of the Prussian province of Lower Rhine, with a princely abbey; seated on the river Pruyum, 30 m. S. S. E. of Aix-la-Chapelle.

Przemisla, a town of Austrian Poland, capital of a circle of its name, with a castle; seated on the river San, 54 m. W. by S. of Lemberg.

Przbram, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Beraun, with a silver mine and an iron foundry; seated near the river Muldau, 28 m. S. S. W. of Prague.

Pskof, or Pleskof, a government of Russia, lying between those of Livonia and Smolensko. It comprises an area of 22,000 sq. m. with 700,000 inhabitants.

Pskof, the capital of the above government, and an archbishop's see, with a strong castle. It is seated on the river Welika, at its entrance into the lake Tchudskoi, 80 m. S. of Narva and 170 S. by W. of Petersburg. Long. 27. 52. E., .at. 57. 38. N.

Puculoe, a town of Bengal, 40 m. N. W. of Dacca.

Puckholi, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Lahore, 86 m. S. W. of Cashmere and 145 N. W. of Lahore. Long. 75. 5. E., lat. 33. 45. N.

Pudda, a river of Hindoostan, which rises in the S. W. part of Agimere, divides the provinces of Cutch and Guzerat, and runs into the gulf of Cutch.

Pudoga, a town of Russia, in the government of Olonetz, situate on the E. coast of the lake of Onezko, 108 m. E. of Olonetz. Long. 36. 30. E., lat. 61. 36. N.

Puebla, a town of Spain, in Galicia, seated near the Atlantic, 29 m. S. S. W. of Compostella.

Puebla de los Angeles, a city of Mexico, capital of a province of its name. The streets are broad and straight, and the buildings in general of stone, lofty and elegant. In the centre of the city is a large square, adorned on three sides with uniform porticoes, where are shops filled with rich commodities, and on the other with the cathedral, which has a beautiful front, and two lofty towers. Besides the cathedral, there are several other churches and convents, well built and finely adorned. A small river runs through the town, and the adjacent valley produces vines and all sorts of European fruits. It is 80 m. E. S. E. of Mexico. Long. 99. 22. W., lat. 19. 30. N.

Puebla Nuova, a town of Mexico, in the province of Veragua, seated near the Pacific Ocean, 100 m. W. of St. Jago. Long. 83. 0. W., lat. 8. 34. N.

Puebla de Sanabria, a town of Spain in the province of Leon, 45 m. S. W. of Astorga.

Puente, a town of Spain, in Navarre, on the river Agra, 8 m. S. S. W. of Pamplona.

Puerto Bello, Puerto Rico, &c. See Porto.

Puglia, the ancient Apulia, containing the three provinces of Capitanata, Bari, and Otranto, on the E. side of the kingdom of Naples.

Pulhely, a town of Wales, in Caernarvonshire, seated on an inlet of Cardigan Bay, between two rivers, 16 m. S. of Caernarvon and 243 N. W. of London.

Pulo Condore, see Condore; and so with other islands that have sometimes Pulo [Island] prefixed.

Pullicate, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, on the sea-coast, and at the S. end of a large lake to which it gives name, 23 m. N. of Madras.

Pultney, p.t. Steuben Co. N. Y. 30 m. S. Canandaigua. Pop. 1,730.

Pultneyville, p.v. Wayne Co. N. Y. on Lake Ontario.

Putney, a township of Belmont Co. Ohio, on the Ohio.

Puttousk, a town in the interior of Poland, where in 1807 a battle was fought between the French and Russians, in which both sides claimed the victory. It is seated on the Narew, 30 m. N. of Warsaw.

Pultoica. See Pol'ava.

Puna, an island in the Pacific Ocean, 35 m. long and 12 broad, lying at the entrance of the bay of Guayaquil. It has an Indian town of the same name, on its S. side. 115 m. N. of Païta.

Punch Hall, a village of Caroline Co. Maryland.

Punhete, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, at the conflux of the Zezere with the Tajo, 6 m. N. W. of Abrantes.

Punta del Guda, the capital of St. Michael, one of the Azores, with a strong castle. It is situated on the S. side, and contains 10,000 inhabitants. The streets are regular and of convenient width, and the churches, religious houses, and public edifices may be deemed elegant. There is no harbour in the vicinity of the town, and vessels usually anchor at a distance from the shore in an open road. Long. 25. 42. W., lat. 37. 47. N.

Punxtaweny, p.v. Jefferson Co. Pa. 70 m. N. E. Pittsburg.

Purbeck, Isle of, a rough and heathy tract in Dorsetshire, to the S. of Pool Bay. It is insulated by the sea and rivers, and is famous for its stone quarries, the principal of which lie at its eastern extremity, near Swannage, whence the stone is exported: it is of the calcareous kind, but distinguished into numerous sorts, the finest of which deserves the name of marble, and is used for chimney-pieces, hearths, &c.; while the coarser kinds are made use of in paving. Tobacco-pipe clay is dug up in several parts of this island, the finest near Corfe Castle, of which much is exported, particularly for the Staffordshire potteries.

Purchena, a town of Spain, in the province of Granada, 70 m. E. of Granada. Long. 2. 25. W., lat. 37. 19. N.

Purfleet, a village in Essex, Eng. situate on the Thames, 4 m. W. of Grays-Thurrock. It has extensive lime-works, and a large magazine for gunpowder.

Purificacion, a town of Mexico, in the province of Xalisco, 90 m. S. by E. of Compostella. Long. 105. 30. W., lat. 19. 58. N.

Purneah, a town of Bengal, capital of a fertile and populous district of its name; seated on the Scraw, 125 m. N. N. W. of Moorshedabad.

Purysburg, t. Beaufort Dis. S. C. on the Savannah, 20 m. above Savannah, 94 m. S. W. Charleston. It was established by a colony of Swiss, to introduce the cultivation of silk.

Puschiaro, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, 3 m. N. from a lake to which it gives name. It is 17 m. W. S. W. of Bormio, and 20 E. of Chiavenna.

Putala, or Pateli, a mountain of Thibet, near the banks of the Burrampooter, 7 m. E. of Lassa. On its summit is the palace of the grand lama, the high priest of Thibet.

Put in Bay, a harbour in Ohio at the West end of Lake Erie, formed by the largest of the Bass Islands, 14 m. N. W. Sandusky. It has 2 entrances, and is deep enough for the largest vessels, and sheltered from every wind. Here the American fleet under Commodore Perry rendezvoused in September 1813 when he captured the British Squadron.

Putlitz, a town of Prussia, in the province of Brandenburg, with an old castle, 11 m. N. N. E. of Perleberg.

Putnam, a county of New York. Pop. 12,701. Carmel is the capital; a county of Ohio. Pop. 230. Sugar Grove is the capital; a county of Georgia. Pop. 13,653. Eatonton is the capital.

Putnam, p.t. Washington Co. N. Y. on Lake Champlain. Pop. 718; p.t. Muskingum Co. Ohio.

Putney, a village in Surrey, Eng. seated on the Thames, over which is a wooden bridge, 4 m. W. S. W. of London. On Putney heath is an obelisk, erected in 1786, in commemoration of Mr. Hartley's invention of fire-plates, for securing buildings from fire; and on its borders are several elegant mansions.

Putney, p.t. Windham Co. Vt. on the Connecticut. 33 m. S. Windsor. Pop. 1,510.

Puttan Somnauth, or Puttan, a town of Hindoostan, near the southern extremity of the Guzerat Peninsula. Somnauth is one of the twelve images of Seeb which are said to have descended from heaven to earth; and the great fame of its temple attracted the cupidity, while it stimulated the bigotry, of Sultan Mahmood, of Ghizni. According to Mahomedan authors, the image was destroyed, but the Hindoos assert that the god retired into the ocean! The symbol placed in the temple is deemed peculiarly propitious to those who desire offspring. It is visited by pilgrims from every quarter, who pay a trifling duty to the Nabob for permission to perform their devotions at this favourite shrine. The Bombay Presidency is stated to have used its influence with the Junaghar State, in 1816, to secure greater freedom of pilgrimage to Puttan. It stands near the sea, 95 m. S. of Noanagur. Long. 69. 40. E., lat. 21. 2. N.

Puy, a city of France, capital of the department of Upper Loire, and a bishop's see. The cathedral is famous for a prodigious quantity of relics; and Our Lady of Puy is celebrated in the annals of superstition. Puy has manufactures of blankets, linen, lace, silk, stuffs, and stoneware. It is seated on the mountain Anis, near the river Loire, 45 m. N. E. of Mendo and 65 S. E. of Clermont. Long. 3. 58. E., lat. 45. 58. N.

Puy de Dome, a department of France, containing part of the former province of Auvergne. It has its name from a mountain, situate to the W. of Clermont, the capital of the department.

Puy en Anjou, a town in the department of Maine-et-Loire, 10 m. S. S. W. of Saumur.

Puy l'Evêque, a town in the department of Lot, 16 m. W. by N. of Cahors.

Puy la Roque, a town in the department of Tern-et-Garonne, 18 m. S. S. E. of Cahors.

Puy Maisson, a town in the department of Lower Alps, 15 m. S. of Digne.

Puycerda, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, capital of the county of Cerdagna, seated at the foot of the Pyrenees, near the source of the Segra, 47 m. W. by S. of Perpignan and 78 N. by W. of Barcelona. It was taken by the French in 1794. Long. 1. 50. E., lat. 42. 36. N.

Puyzaurens, a town of France, department of Tarn, 28 m. S. by W. of Alby.

Puzzuoli, or Pozzuolo, a celebrated, but now inconsiderable city of Italy, on the bay of Naples. Here are the remains of the temple of Jupiter Serapis, an interesting monument of antiquity, being different from the Roman and Greek temples, and built in the manner of the Asiatic; probably by the Egyptian and Asiatic merchants settled at Pozzuoli, which was the great emporium of Italy, till the Romans built Ostia and Antium. It has been converted into a Christian cathedral, and so much modern work added that at present only the front of the ancient edifice is visible. Many other remains of temples, amphitheatres, and other public buildings in this city, afford convincing proofs of its former magnificence. The ruins of Cicero's villa, near this place, are of such extent as to give a high idea of the wealth of that great orator; 9 m. W. of Naples.

Pyramids, a range of ancient and stupendous Egyptian monuments, extending northwards from Cairo, but on the opposite or west side of the Nile. They are continued almost uninterruptedly for about 20 leagues, upon a plain occupying the lower slope of a ridge of hills, which runs parallel to the Nile. This plain is elevated about 30 feet above the ground inundated by the river and consists of hard rock, forming a proper support for the immense weight of the structures erected upon it. The pyramids are distinguished by their form, which the name expresses, and still more by their great dimensions. The three largest are in the neighbourhood of the town of Gizeh, and are named from their founders. The following are their names and dimensions.

	Feet high.	Fl. sq. at base.
Cheops	499	693
Cephrenes	393	655
Mycerinus	162	280

The pyramids, at first view, present the appearance of solid masses; and it seems to have been the intention of the founders, that the few openings which they contain, should remain perpetually closed. The ingenuity of successive ages has traced the openings of the great pyramid, which were so studiously concealed. The exterior opening is 60 feet above the base, and leads into a passage 66 paces long. Beyond are successive galleries, one 120 feet, another 170, and another 180 feet long. The principal chamber, at the end of the longest gallery, is 36 feet long, 16 broad, and 18 high. At the farthest extremity is the sarcophagus, for the reception of which this enormous structure is supposed to have been reared. This pyramid is ascended on the outside by an uninterrupted flight of steps, from 2 1-2 to 4 feet, diminished in height, as they approach the top. The breadth is so proportioned to the height that a line stretched from the top to the bottom would touch the angle of every step. The external part is built of square stones, cut in the rock found along the Nile. They are compacted together solely by their own weight, without lime, lead, or cramps of any metal. In the body of the pyramid, however, which is full of irregular stones, it has been necessary to employ a mortar composed of lime, earth, and clay. The pyramid of Cephrenes was first opened by M. Belzoni, in 1818. The sarcophagus was found to contain bones, supposed to be human, which appeared to confirm the belief, that these stupendous monuments, as has been asserted by Strabo and Diodorus, were intended as sepulchres of the kings of Egypt. But a thigh bone, which was carried to London, and examined by the royal college of Physicians, was pronounced to belong to a cow, whence it has been inferred that these structures were reared in honour of this favourite object of Egyptian worship.

Pyrbau, a town of Bavaria, capital of a lordship of its name, situate on the frontier of Franconia, 13 m. S. E. of Nuremberg.

Pyrenees, a range of mountains which divide France from Spain, and the most celebrated in Europe, except the Alps. They reach from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic, about 212 m. in length, and have different names, according to their different situations. The passages over them are not so difficult as those of the Alps: one of the most frequented is that from Pampeluna to St. Jean de Pied de Port, by which the French under Soult marched to attack the British before Pampeluna, in July 1813. These mountains contain iron, copper, lead, silver, gold, cobalt, and zinc; they also furnish great quantities of timber for ship-building, and abundance of pitch and tar. See Perdu, Mount.

Pyrenees, Eastern, a department of France, containing the provinces of Roussillon, Cerdagne, and part of Languedoc. Its area is estimated at 1,650 sq. m., and the pop. at 126,500. Although great part of the country is mountainous, yet it is fertile in corn, excellent wine, olives, oranges, &c. Perpignan is the capital.

Pyrenees, Lower, a department of France, comprehending the province of Bearn and Navarre. The principal products are corn, wine, flax, chest nuts, and other fruits; the manufactures woolen, linen, leather, and recently cotton. The province contains an area of about 3,000 sq. m., with 350,000 inhabitants. Pau is the capital.

Pyrenees, Upper, a department of France, including the province of Bigorre, and comprising an area of 1,500 sq. m. with 200,000 inhabitants. Here are excellent horses and good partridges. The valleys are very fertile, furnishing rye, millet, Spanish corn, and flax. The mountains have mines of lead, iron, and copper, and quarries of slate, marble, and jasper. Tarbes is the capital.

Pyrmont, a town of the N. W. part of Germany, capital of a small district of the same name, belonging to the prince of Waldeck. Near it are mineral waters, well known to all Europe, and frequented by persons of the highest rank. It is seated in a delightful valley, between high mountains, 33 m. S. W. of Hanover. Long. 9 20. E., lat. 51. 57. N.

Pyrstein, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Passau, insulated in Austria. It is 10 m. N. W. of Lintz and 22 E. of Passau

Q

QUACHA, a lake of Louisiana between the Mississippi and Barataria Bay.

Quackenbrun, a town of Hanover, in the principality of Osnaburg; seated on the Hase. 23 m. N. of Osnaburg.

Quadra and Vancouver's Island, an island on the N. W. coast of America, on the S. W. coast of which is Nootka Sound. It was so named by captain Vancouver in compliment to senior Quadra, the Spanish commandment at Nootka. It is about 300 m. in length, and 80 in its greatest breadth.

Quadrello, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, 29 m. E. N. E. of Naples.

Quaker Hill, p.v. Dutchess Co. N. Y. 20 m. E. Fishkill.

Quang-ping, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Pe-tche-li, 212 m. S. S. E. of Peking. Long. 114. 30. E., lat. 36. 47. N.

Quang-si, an inland province in the S. of China. It produces plenty of rice, being watered by several large rivers. The southern part is a flat country, and well cultivated; but the northern is full of mountains, covered with trees. It contains mines of all sorts, and particularly a gold mine. Here is a tree called quang-lang, the pith of which is made into bread; and a small species of insect which produces white wax. Queiling is the capital.

Quang-tong, a province of China, bounded on the E. by Kiang-si and Fo-kien, on the S. by the ocean, and on the W. by Tonquin. It is diversified by valleys and mountains, and yields two crops of corn in a year. The northern frontier consists of a range of lofty mountains, which abound in gold, jewels, tin, quick-silver, copper, and iron. Ebony and several sorts of odiferous wood are produced in this province, as well as various sorts of fruit. There is a species of lemon as large as a man's head; and another sort which grows out at the trunk of the tree, whose rind is very hard, and contains a great number of little cells, full of an excellent yellow pulp. A prodigious number of ducks are bred in this province, their eggs being hatched in ovens. The mountains are covered with a kind of osiers, which creep along the ground, and are so tough that they make baskets, hurdles, mats, and even ropes of them. Here is also a tree the timber of which is remarkably hard and heavy, and is thence called ironwood. Canton is the capital, but the viceroys resides at Chao-king.

Quangtung, a town on the N. borders of Bir-mah, in the province of Ava, with a fort, seated on the Irrawaddy, 150 m. N. N. E. of Umerapoora.

Quarto, two towns of Naples, in Capitanata, the one 6 m. W. and the other 12 S. W. of Salpes.

Quarten, a town of Switzerland, near Wallenstadt Lake, 5 m. E. of Glaris.

Quatre Bras, a hamlet of the Netherlands, which was the scene of an obstinate conflict between the British and French, on the 16th of June, 1815.

Queaux, a town of France, department of Vienne, 21 m. S. E. of Poitiers.

Quebec, the capital of Canada, and of British America, is situated at the confluence of the rivers St. Lawrence and St. Charles (or the Little River), about 320 miles from the sea. It is built on a rock, which is partly of marble and partly of slate, and is divided into Upper and Lower. Near it is a fine lead mine. At the time it was founded, in 1608, the tide, it is said, reached the foot of the rock; but since that period this river has sunk so far that a large spot of ground is left dry, and on this an extensive suburb is built, styled the Lower Town, which stands at the foot of a rocky precipice, about 48 feet in height, and is chiefly inhabited by merchants. The houses in both towns are of stone, strong, and well built. The fortifications are extensive, but irregular. The natural situation of the town renders its defence easy. If attacked by ships from the river, their guns cannot injure the works of the Upper Town, though the ships themselves would be liable to great injury from the cannon and bombs from these elevated ramparts. The Lower Town is defended by a platform, flanked with two bastions, which, at high water and spring tides, are almost level with the surface of the water. A little above the bastion, to the right, is a half bastion, cut out of the rock; a little higher a large battery, and higher still a square fort, the most regular of all the fortifications, and in which the governor resides. The passages which form a communication between these rocks are extremely rugged. The rock which separates the Upper from the Lower Town extends, with a bold and steep front, a considerable distance W. along the river St. Lawrence. The Lower Town is well supplied with water, which is sometimes scarce in the Upper Town. This city was erected by the French in 1608; the English reduced it, with all Canada, in 1629, but it was restored in 1632. In 1711 it was besieged by the English without success; in 1759 it was again conquered, after a battle memorable for the death of general Wolfe in the moment of victory, and was confirmed to them by the peace of 1763. In 1775 it was attacked by the Americans under general Montgomery, who was slain, and his army repulsed. Of late years great improvements have been effected, and the present population amounts to nearly 22,000. The chief exports are grain, flour, timber, lumber, &c. The basin of Quebec is capable of containing 100 sail of the line. 180 m. N. E. Montreal. 330 m. N. of Boston. Long. 70. 48. W., lat. 46. 55. N.

Quida, a kingdom of Asia, in the peninsula of Malacca. The king is tributary to Siam. The principal town is of the same name, has a harbour, and is 300 m. N. of the city of Malacca. Long. 100. 5. E., lat. 7. 5. N.

Quedlinberg, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt, with a castle. The river Bode divides it into the Old and New Town. It has a trade in brandy and linen, and is 10 m. S. by E. of Halberstadt. Long. 11. 10. E., lat. 51. 50. N.

Queen Ann, a county of Maryland, on the E. of Chesapeake Bay. Pop. 14,396. Centreville is the chief town.

Queen Ann, a town of Maryland, in Prince George county, situate at the foot of a hill, on the Patuxent, 13 m. S. W. of Annapolis and 22 E. of Washington.

Queen Charlotte Island, an island in the S. Pacific, 6 m. long and 1 broad, discovered by captain Wallis in 1767. Long. 138. 4. W., lat. 19. 18 S.

Queen Charlotte Islands, a group of islands in the N. Pacific, explored by captain Carteret in 1767. The most considerable he named Egmont, but the Spaniards call it Santa Cruz. It is 60 m. long and from 20 to 30 broad, woody and mountainous, with many valleys intermixed. The inhabitants are very nimble, vigorous, and active; and their weapons are bows and arrows pointed with flint. On the N. side is a harbour named Swallow Bay. Long. 164. 26. E., lat. 10. 42 S.

Queen Charlotte Sound, a sound at the N. extremity of the S. island of New Zealand, near Cook Strait. Long. 174. 14. E., lat. 41. 6. S.

Quecnborough, a borough in Kent, Eng. in the Isle of Sheppey. It had once a strong caste, remains of which are still to be seen. The chief employment of the inhabitants is fishing, and oysters are here in great plenty. The town is seated near the mouth of the Medway, 15 m. N. W. of Canterbury and 45 E. by S. of London. Long. 0. 49. E., lat. 15. 23. N.

Queensborough, a town of S. Carolina, on the W. side of the Great Peece River, 32 m. N. N. W. of Georgetown.

Queensborough, a village in Tuscarawas Co. Ohio.

Queen's County, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, about 30 m. long and 29 broad; bounded on the N. by King's county, E. by Kildare, S. E. by Carlow, S. by Kilkenny, and W. by Tipperary and King's county. It is divided into nine baronies and 50 parishes, contains about 134,000 inhabitants, and sends three members to parliament. It was formerly full of woods and bogs, but is now much improved in cultivation. Maryborough is the capital.

Queens County, a county of New York, in the W. part of Long Island. Pop. 22,276. N. Hempstead is the chief town.

Queensferry, a borough of Scotland, in Linlithgowshire, seated on the frith of Forth, where it is not more than 2 m. wide. It has a trade in soap, and a much frequented ferry. It is 9 m. W. of Edinburgh.

Quecnstadt, a town of Prussian Saxony, 5 m. N. E. of Halberstadt.

Quecnstown, a town of Upper Canada, on the river Niagara, 7 miles below the falls. Here all the merchandise and stores received from Kingston for the upper part of the province are sent in waggons to Chippewa, a distance of 10 m. the falls and broken course of the river rendering the navigation impracticable for that space. It is 7 m. above Fort Niagara and 20 N. by E. of Fort Erie.

Quecnstown, p.v. Queen Ann's Co. Maryland. 33 m. S. E. Baltimore.

Queich, a river of Bavaria, which passes by Anweiller and Landau, and enters the Rhine near Gernersheim.

Quei-ling, a city of China, capital of the province of Quang-si. It has its name from a flower called quei, which grows on a tree resembling a laurel, and emits such a sweet odor that it perfumes the whole country. It stands on a river that runs into the Ta, but with such rapidity as not to be navigable. It is 180 m. N. by W. of Canton and 587 S. of Peking. Long. 109. 51. E., lat. 25. 12. N.

Quecmahoning, a township of Somerset Co. Pa.

Quentin, a strong town of France, department of Aisne, with a considerable manufacture of lawns and cambrics; also gauze, linen, and thread. Near this place, in 1557, Philip II. of Spain gained a signal victory over the French, and afterwards took the town by storm, but it was restored to France in 1559. It is seated on an eminence, on the river Somme, 21 m. S. of Cambray and 83 N. by E. of Paris. Long. 3. 20. E., lat. 49. 50. N.

Quercy, a province of France, now forming the department of Lot.

Queretaro, a city of Mexico, capital of a province of the same name. Pop. 35,000. 95 m. N. W. Mexico.

Querfort, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Merseberg, formerly the capital of a principality of its name, with a castle, 14 m. W. of Merseberg. Long. 11. 50. E., lat. 51. 23. N.

Querimba, a cluster of small islands on the coast of Mozambique, fertile in fruits and pastures. The principal one, of the same name, is in long. 41. 30. E., lat. 11. 40. S.

Quesnoy, a fortified town of France, department of Nord, with an old castle. In 1793 it was taken by the Austrians, but retaken the next year. It is seated in an extensive plain, on the rivulet Ronelle, 9 m. S. E. of Valenciennes and 122 N. E. of Paris. Long. 3. 40. E., lat. 50. 15. N.

Quiberon, a town in the department of Morbihan with a fort, situate at the extremity of a peninsula, to the N. of Belleisle. In 1795 it was taken by some French royalists in the pay of Great Britain; but, owing to the desertion and treachery of some of the soldiers, the republicans soon took it by surprise. It was taken by the English in 1800, but evacuated soon afterwards. 17 m. S. S. E. of Port Louis.

Quicaro, an island in the Pacific Ocean, near the coast of Veragua, about 20 m. long and 6 broad. Long. 82. 39. W., lat. 7. 50. N.

Quilimancy, a sea-port of Zanguebar, in the kingdom of Melinda. It stands at the mouth of a river of the same name, 26 m. S. S. W. of Melinda. Long. 41. 40. E., lat. 3. 10. S.

Quillan, a town of France, department of Aude, 25 m. S. S. W. of Carcassone.

Quillebeuf, a town of France in the department of Eure, seated on the Seine, 37 m. W. of Rouen, and 42 N. W. of Evreux.

Quiloa, a sea-port of Zanguebar, capital of a kingdom of the same name, with a small citadel. This country was for some time in the possession of the Portuguese, from whom it was wrested by the imam of Mascat. It produces abundance of rice, millet, fruits, cattle, and poultry. The inhabitants are Mahomedans partly black and partly tawny. The capital is well built, and stands on an island, at the mouth of the river Coava. Long. 40. 0. E., lat. 8. 38. S.

Quimper, a city of France, capital of the department of Finisterre, and a bishop's sec. It is seated at the conflux of the Oder and Benaudet, 34 m. S. S. E. of Brest and 112 W. by S. of Rennes. Long. 4. 6. W., lat. 47. 58. N.

Quimperle, a town of France in the department of Finisterre, seated on the Isolle, 30 m. E. S. E. of Quimper.

Quincy, p.t. Norfolk Co. Mass. 9 m. S. E. Boston. Pop. 2,192. Here is a quarry of excellent granite much used for building in Boston and the neighborhood. The Quincy Railroad extends from this place to Neponset river. It is 3 m. in length with a single track. It was constructed in 1826, and was the first undertaking of the kind in America. On an elevated rock at the commencement of the railroad, stands a square tower of stone with an inscription commemorating the foundation of the work. The view from the summit of the tower is exceedingly fine, embracing Boston Bay, its islands, and a wide extent of country.

Quincy, p.v. Morgan Co. and Adams Co. Illinois.

Quingey, a town of France, in the department of Doubs, seated on the Louve, 12 m. S. W. of Besancon.

Quin-nog, or Chin-chi, a bay on the coast of Cochinchina, much frequented by the vessels of the country, being an excellent harbour. The entrance is narrow, and ships of burden can get in only at high water. At the head of the harbour is the city of Quin-nong. Long. 109. 15. E., lat. 13. 52. N.

Quinsou, a town of France, department of Lower Alps, 29 m. S. of Grice.

Quintin, a town in the department of Cotes du Nord, seated in a valley, on the Goy, 10 m. S. S. W. of St. Brienc.

Quinziau, a chain of mountains in the kingdom of Fez, 160 m. in length, extending from the descent of Gret to the river Nacor.

Quirpon an island in the Atlantic, near the N. coast of Newfoundland. Long. 53. 22. W., lat. 51. 40. N.

Quistello, a town of Austrian Italy, famous for an action between the French and Austrians in 1734, when marshal Broglio was surprised in his bed. It is seated on the Seccia, 15 m. S. of Mantua.

Quito, a presidency of the republic of Colombia, lying between two chains of the high mountains called the Andes. The eastern governments are chiefly immense tracts, thinly scattered with missionary villages. The vegetable productions vary with the elevation of the ground. The champaign country produces abundant crops of maize; and the deep ravines, where the temperature is hot, produce sugar-cane. The elevated lands possess a colder climate, and produce wheat, barley, &c. Immense flocks of sheep are reared in the mountain plains, and their wool furnishes materials for the manufactures of this province. The lands are generally well cultivated, and there are a great number of towns and villages inhabited almost entirely by Indians. The streets are generally straight and in the direction of the four cardinal points; and the roads are laid out in a line, crossing each other, so that the aspect of the country is that of a large garden. Although this country is situated on both sides the equator, yet it lies so high, and so near the snow-clad mountains, that the air is very temperate. There are no noxious animals; for the tigers and serpents are below in the forests. The state of society in this province has undergone considerable improvement since its deliverance from Spanish domination, and the manufactures are in a flourishing state. Hats, cotton stuffs, and coarse woollen cloths, are made here in great quantities, and exported to other parts of S. America.

Quito, the capital of the above country, is seated on the skirts of the volcanic mountain of Pinchincha, in a pleasant valley, but on high ground, 9,510 feet above the level of the sea. Having no mines in its neighbourhood, it is chiefly famous for manufactures of cotton, wool, and flax. The town is plentifully supplied with water, and enjoys a delightful climate; but it is subject, together with the whole country, to the awful calamity of earthquakes. Of these a very destructive one was experienced in 1755. In 1797 the face of the whole district was changed by a most dreadful concussion, and 40,000 persons were in one moment hurled into eternity. Violent shocks of earthquakes have since been frequently experienced. It is notwithstanding very populous, and inhabited by several families of distinguished rank. 400 m. S. W. of Bogota. Long. 77. 55. W., lat. 0. 13. S.

Quizama, a province of Africa in the S. part of Angola. It is mountainous and badly cultivated, but produces abundance of honey, wax, and salt. The inhabitants are warlike, and have never submitted to the Portuguese.

Quaja, an inland country of Africa, lying E. of Sierra Leone. It is well cultivated, but has little commercial intercourse.

Quovedo, a town of Austrian Illyria, in Istria Quorra, See Niger.

Radimpour, or Radunpour, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Agimere, situate on the Puddar, 175 m. N. of Surat and 250 S. W. of Agimere. Long. 71. 48. E., lat. 23. 58. N.

Radnor, New, a borough of Wales, in Radnorshire. New Radnor is seated near the source of the Somergil, at the foot of a hill, on which a castle formerly stood, 204 m. N. W. of Hereford and 159 W. N. W. of London.

Radnorshire, a county of Wales, 30 m. long and 25 broad. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 22,459. Its principal rivers are the Wye and Tend, the former divided it from Brecknockshire, and the latter from Shropshire. The E. and S. parts are tolerably level and productive of corn. The other parts are rude and mountainous devoted chiefly to the rearing of cattle and sheep.

Radnor, a township of Delaware Co. Pa.

Radom, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Sandomir, 60 m. N. N. W. of Sandomir.

Radomsk, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Siradia, 50 m. S. E. of Siradia.

Radstadt, a town of Bavaria, near the source of the Ens, 35 m. E. S. E. of Salzburg. Long. 13. 26. E., lat. 47. 18. N.

Ragivolo, a town of Austrian Italy, in the province of Mantua, 19 m. S. of Mantua.

Ragland, a village in Monmouthshire, Eng. famous for its castle, where Charles I. passed much of his time, and lived in a magnificent style. This castle was the last in Cromwell's time which surrendered to general Fairfax. 5 m. N. E. of Usk and 8 E. of Monmouth.

Ragnit, a town of Russian Lithuania, with a very ancient castle, in which is a large royal magazine for provisions, &c. It is situate on the Niemen, 56 m. E. N. E. of Konigsberg. Long. 21. 30. E., lat. 55. 30. N.

Ragoogur, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Malwa, 116 m. N. E. of Ougein and 256 S. of Dehli. Long. 77. 30. E., lat. 24. 23. N.

Ragusa, a district of Austrian Dalmatia, containing the territory of the ancient republic of Ragusa and several islands. It has an area of 700 square miles, with 55,000 inhabitants. The soil is so barren that the inhabitants receive the greatest part of their necessaries from the neighbouring islands and Turkish provinces. The chief rivers are the Drino Gliuta, and Ombra

Ragusa, the capital of the above district, and an archbishop's see. It is 2 miles in circumference, and strong by situation, having an inaccessible mountain on the land side, and a strong fort on the gulf of Venice. It has a considerable trade with the Levant and Italy, and is 66 m. W. of Scutari. Long. 17. 55. E., lat. 42. 32. N.

Ragusa, a populous town of Sicily, in Val di Noto near the river Maulo, 13 m. W. N. W. of Noto.

Rahway, p.t. Middlesex Co. N. J. 5 m. S. W. Elizabethtown.

Raiatea, or Iorotea, the Ulietea of captain Cook, the largest of the Society Isles, in the S. Pacific, about 40 m. in circumference. The mountains are lofty, and picturesque. The lowland is extensive, and the valleys, which are capable of the highest cultivation, are not only spacious, but conveniently situated for affording to the inhabitants an intercourse with other parts of the island. It is well supplied with rivers and streams of excellent water. On the N. W. is a small but very secure harbour, called Hamanino, which is sheltered from the strong E. and S. winds by the mountains of the interior. Long. 151. 38. W. lat. 16. 45. S.

Rain, a fortified town of Bavaria, seated on the Acha, 12 m. W. of Neuberg.

Rain, or Old R in, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, near the river Ury, 23 m. N. W. of Aberdeen.

Reisenburg, a town of E. Prussia, 78. m. S. W. of Konigsberg.

Reisterstown, p.v. Baltimore Co. Maryland. 15 m. N. W. Baltimore.

Rembertstown, p.v. Sumter Dis. S. C.

Rensen, p.t. Oneida Co. N. Y. 35 m. N. Rome Pop. 1,400.

Remberviller, a town of France, department of Vosges, 17 m. N. N. E. of Epinal.

Remich, a town of the Netherlands on the Moselle, 20 m. S. E. of Luxemburg.

Remiremont, a town of France, department of Vosges, 11 m. S. E. of Epinal.

Remo, St., a town of the Sardinian states, in the territory of Genoa, situate in a fruitful valley, with a good harbour, in the Mediterranean, 7 m. E. by N. of Vintimiglia and 66 S. E. of Genoa.

Rems and Fils, one of the 12 departments of the kingdom of Wurtemberg, situate E. of that of Rothenburg. Goppingen is the capital.

Remy, St., a town of France, department of Mouths of the Rhone. A triumphal arch, and a mausoleum, in the neighbourhood, display the taste of the Augustan age; the former is not entire, but the latter is in the best state of preservation. 10 m. N. E. of Arles.

Reudeshurg, a fortified town of Denmark, in the duchy of Holstein, on the frontiers of Sleswick, and on the river Eyder. It is composed of three parts, the Old Town, the Skleusskule, and the New Town; the former of which stands on an island formed by the river. The principal manufactures are porcelain, earthenware, and gold and silver lace; and the trade in timber, by means of the Eyder Canal, is considerable 15 m. W. of Kiel, and 16 S. S. E. of Sleswick. Long. 9. 53. E., lat. 54. 20. N.

Renfrew, a borough of Scotland, and the county town of Renfrewshire. The principal branch manufacture is that of thread, but many looms are employed in the silk and muslin. Robert II. had a palace here. It is seated near the Clyde, to which there is a canal, 9 m. W. by N. of Glasgow, and 13 E. by S. of Greenock. Long. 4. 26 W., lat. 55. 54. N.

Renfrewshire, a county of Scotland, 30 m. long and from 10 to 20 broad; bounded on the W. and N. by the frith of Clyde, E. by Lanarkshire, and S. by Ayrshire. It is divided into 20 parishes, and the number of inhabitants in 1821 was 112, 175. In the N. part, towards the borders of the Clyde, the soil is fertile, but the S. part is mountainous and rather barren. Besides the Clyde, it is watered by the Gryfe, and the White and Black Cart. The largest town is Paisley.

Reni, a town of European Turkey, in Bessarabia, seated on the Danube 135 m. S. W. of Bender.

Kennes, a city of France, capital of the department of Ile-et-Vilaine, and a bishop's see. It contains eight parish churches, besides the cathedral, several convents, and a small university. The streets are broad and strait, but they were narrow before the fire in 1720, which lasted seven days, and consumed 850 houses. In the great square are the Palace of Justice and the Hotel de Ville. It is seated on the Vilaine, which divides it into two parts. 190 m. W. S. W. of Paris. Long. 1. 42. W., lat. 48. 7. N.

Rensselaer, a county of New York, on the East bank of the Hudson. Pop. 49,472. Troy is the capital. Also a village in this county. 12 m. E. Albany, with a manufacture of window glass.

Rensselaerville, p.t. Albany Co. N. Y. 24 m. S. W. Albany. Pop. 3,689.

Rentoun, a village of Scotland, near which is one of the most considerable printfields in Scotland; also the old mansion of Dalquhurn, where Dr. Smollett was born, and the lofty column erected to his memory, on the bank of the Leven, 4 m. N. W. of Dumbarton

Renty, a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, seated on the Aa, 12 m. S. W. of Aire, 50 N. W. of Arras.

Reole, a town in the department of Gironde seated on the Garonne, 30 m. S. E. of Bordeaux.

Repaillz, a town of the Sardinian states, in Savoy, famous for the retreat of Amadeus, duke of Savoy, in 1440, when he went to enjoy the pleasures of a country life; seated on a river which runs into the lake of Geneva, 20 m. N. E. of Geneva.

Reppen, a town of Brandenburg, 16 m. S. S. E. of Custrin.

Repton, a village in Derbyshire, Eng. 8 m. S. S. W. of Derby, celebrated for the burial place of several of the Saxon kings of Mercia, and for several antiquities. Here is a noted free-school, which appears to have been the refectory of a priory.

Requena, a town of Spain, in New Castile, with a castle, and a considerable manufacture of silks. It was taken by the English in 1706 and retaken by the French the next year. It is seated on a hill, on the borders of Valencia, 64 m. E. S. E. of Cuenca. Long. 1. 9. W., lat. 39. 44. N.

Resht, a city of Persia, capital of Ghilan. It has a considerable trade, particularly in silk; and much rice grows in the environs. It is seated on a river, 6 m. from the Caspian Sea and 100 N. of Cashin. Long. 49. 50. E., lat. 37. 28. N.

Resolution Island, an island in the N. Atlantic, 50 m. long and 20 broad, on the N. side of the entrance into Hudson Strait. Long. 65. 0. W., lat. 61. 40. N.

Resolution Isle, a small island in the S. Pacific, 160 leagues E. of Otaheite, so called from the ship in which Cook made his second voyage. Long. 141. 15. W., lat. 17. 23. S.

Retel, a town of France, department of Ardennes, seated on a hill, near the Aisne, 26 m. N. E. of Rheims. Long. 4. 24. E., lat. 49. 32. N.

Retford, East, a borough in Nottinghamshire, Eng. It is in general well built, and consists of three principal streets, disposed nearly in the form of a Roman Y. The chief trade is in malt, and it has manufactures of hats. It is seated on the Idle, 29 m. N. by E. of Nottingham and 144 N. by W. of London. West Retford is situated on the opposite side of the river.

Rethem, a town of Hanover, seated on the Aller, 35 m. N. N. W. of Hanover.

Retino, a sea-port of Candia, and a bishop's see, with a citadel. It was taken by the Turks in 1645. The silk, wool, honey, wax, ladanum, and oil, are preferred to all others. It is seated on the N. coast of the island, 42 m. W. of Candia. Long. 24. 38. E., lat. 35. 20. N.

Retz, a town of Bavaria, on the Schwara, 28 m. E. S. E. of Amberg.

Reuss, a river of Switzerland, which rises in the lake of Locendro, on the N. W. of St. Gothard, flows through the lake of Lucern and the town of that name, and joins the Aar below Bruck.

Reutlingen, a town of Germany, in Wurtemberg. In the town-house is preserved an ancien-battering-ram; and in the vicinity are many paper and powder mills. It is seated on the Echetz near the Neckar, 17 m. S. of Stutgard.

Revel, a town of France, department of Upper Garonne, near the canal of Languedoc, 27 m. S. E. of Toulouse.

Revel, a government of Russia. See Esthonia.

Revel, a sea-port of Russia, capital of the government of Esthonia, and a bishop's see. It is surrounded by high walls and deep ditches, and defended by a castle and good bastions. The houses are well built, and have fine gardens. It is become a place of great trade, since the Russians obtained possession of it in 1710; and there are two great fairs, in May and September, frequented by English and Dutch merchants. It is seated on the gulf of Finland, partly in a pleasant plain and partly on a mountain, 160 m. N. by E. of Riga and 220 W. by S. of Petersburg. Long. 24. 17. E., lat. 59. 18. N.

Revello, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, seated near the Po, on the top of a mountain, fortified by nature and art, 8 m. N. W. of Saluzzo.

Revin, a town of France, department of Ardennes, seated on the river Meuse, 6 m. E. of Roeroy.

Revolution Isle, a group of islands in the Pacific Ocean, to the N. W. of the Marquesas, of which they may be deemed a continuation. They were discovered in 1791. The most considerable are Baux and Marchand. The latter is about 15 m. in circuit, and was taken possession of, in the name of the French nation, by captain Marchand. Long. 140. 5. W., lat. 0. 21. S.

Rewah, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Allahabad, the residence of a Hindoo chief, tributary to the British, 57 m. S. S. W. of Allahabad.

Revari, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district in the province of Dehli. It is the residence of a chief, tributary to the British, and is seated on the Sadi, 55 m. S. W. of Dehli. Long. 76. 52. E., lat. 23. 13. N.

Reynoldsburgh, p.v. Humphreys Co. Ten. on the Tennessee, 83 m. W. Nashville.

Rhamaie, a town and fort of Egypt, on the W. branch of the Nile, where the canal of Alexandria enters that river. It is 25 m. above Rosetta and 58 E. S. E. of Alexandria.

Rhayadergwy, a town of Wales, in Radnorshire. It is situate on the Wye, where there was formerly a cataract, which is now destroyed, and a neat bridge erected; and an eminence near it is the site of an ancient castle, of which no ruins remain. In the neighbourhood are lead and copper mines. 19 m. W. N. W. of New Radnor and 173 of London.

Rheas, a county of E. Tennessee. Pop. 8,182. Washington is the capital.

Rheatown, p.v. Green Co. Ten.

Rheda a town of Prussian Westphalia, 10 m. N. of Lipstadt.

Rheims, a city of France, department of Marne, and an archbishop's see. The inhabitants are estimated at 40,000. The principal church, built before the year 406, is a very beautiful structure; and that of St. Nicaise is remarkable for its fine architecture. Behind the high altar of the church of St. Remy, the corpse of that archbishop is preserved in a magnificent shrine. The kings of France have been successively crowned at Rheims; probably because Clovis, the founder of the French monarchy, when converted from paganism, was baptized in the cathedral here, in the year 496. The remains of an amphitheatre, a castle, and a triumphal arch, are among the ancient monuments of the Romans. Rheims is long and narrow, and the houses are low. Here are manufactures of flannel, coverlets, and other wolen stuffs. The city was taken and retaken several times, by the French and allied armies, in 1814. It is seated in a plain, surrounded by hills that produce excellent wine, on the river Vesle, 62 m. N. of Troyes and 75 N. E. of Paris. Long. 4. 2. E., lat. 49. 15. N.

Rhein, a town of Prussia, with a large fortified castle, seated on a lake, 75 m. S. E. of Konigsberg. Long. 21. 38. E., lat. 53. 48. N.

Rheinau, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Thurgau, with an abbey, on an island formed by the Rhine, 5 m. S. S. W. of Schaffhausen.

Rheinbach, or Rhybach, a town of the Prussian states, in the province of Cleves and Berg, 20 m. S. of Cologne.

Rheinberg, a town of the Prussian states in the government of Cleves, seated near the Rhine, 13 m. E. of Gelders, and 4 N. by W. of Cologne.

Rheine. a town of Prussian Westphalia, seated on the Ems, 18 m. W. N. W. of Osnaburg.

Rheinbeck, a town of Germany, seated on the Rhine, 16 m. N. W. of Coblentz.

Rheinck, a town of Franconia, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle on the river Sinn, 25 m. N. by W. of Wurtzburg.

Rheinck, a town of Switzerland, capital of the Rheinthal, in the canton of St. Gall, with a castle, seated on the Rhine, 25 m. S. E. of Constance.

Rheinfeldou, a town of Germany, in Baden, the best of the four Forest-towns; seated on the Rhine, over which is a bridge, 8 m. E. of Basel.

Rheinfels, a strong fortress of Germany, in the Prussian states. It is one of the most important places on the Rhine, and stands on a stupendous craggy rock, at the foot of which is the fortified town of St. Goar. It was taken by the French in 1794. 16 m. S. of Coblentz.

Rheinnagen, a town of the Prussian states, in the government of Coblentz, situate on the Rhine 19 m. N. W. of Coblentz.

Rheinthal, a district of Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gall, lying along the Rhine. It is a fertile valley, 30 m. long and from 3 to 8 broad, and produces excellent wine. Rheinck is the capital.

Rheinzaburn, a town of France, department of Lower Rhine, seated on the Erlbach, 10 m. S. E. of Landau.

Rhena, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg, on the river Radegast, 14 m. E. S. E. of Lubec.

Rhenen, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Utrecht, seated on the Rhine, 20 m. S. E. of Utrecht.

Rhine, a great and remarkable river of Europe, which rises in Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons. It is formed of three streams, the Further Rhine from the head of the valley of Disentis; the Middle Rhine from the valley Medelo, and appendage of St. Gothard; and the Hither or Upper Rhine from the mount Avicula. The first two torrents united take the name of Lower Rhine which receives the Upper Rhine at Richenau; and the height is here about 6,180 feet above the sea Flowing by Coire, at the distance of a mile, the Rhine here becomes navigable for rafts. It is soon after the boundary between the Rheintal and a territory of Austria, and passes through the Lake of Constance from E. to W. Leaving this lake, it flows W. by Schaffhausen, below which it forms a celebrated cataract. It continues in a westerly course to Bale, when it turns to the N. and enters the Netherlands, in which course it waters many considerable cities and towns, and receives some large rivers. Below Emmerick, in the duchy of Cleve, it divides into two streams, the right, which retains its name, passes on to Utrecht, when it divides once more into two streams: the smaller one is called the Vecht, which runs N. into the Zuider Zee at Muysden; and the other, the remains of the noble Rhine, flows W. by Woerden to Leyden, where it divides into several channels, and afterwards is lost among hills of sand near the village of Catwyck.

Rhine, a province of the grand duchy of Hesse, to the N. of the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, comprising an area of 1,000 square m. with 155,000 inhabitants.

Rhine, Circle of, a province of Bavaria, situate to the W. of the Rhine, between Weissenburg and Worms. It was ceded to Bavaria in 1814. It contains an area of 1,500 square m. with 308,000 inhabitants.

Rhine, Lower, a grand duchy of the Prussian states, consisting of territories taken from France and the grand duchy of Berg in 1814, and assigned to Prussia by the congress of Vienna. It is bounded N. by the province of Cleves and Berg, E. by Nassau and Hesse-Darmstadt, S. by the French and W. by the Dutch frontier. It has an area of 5,700 square m. with 950,000 inhabitants. Aix-la-Chapelle is the capital.

Rhine, Lower and Upper, two divisions of Germany, abolished in 1806.

Rhine, Lower, a department of France, containing the late province of Lower Alsace. It has an area of 1,900 square m. with 440,000 inhabitants. Strasburg is the capital.

Rhine, Upper, a department of France, consisting of the late province of Upper Alsace, and containing an area of about 1,700 square m. with 320,000 inhabitants. Colmar is the capital.

Rhinbeck, p. v. Dutchess Co. N. Y. 26 m. S. Hudson, on the Hudson. Pop. 2,938.

Rhode Island, an island in the state of the same name, in Narraganset Bay 13 m. long from N. E. to S. W. with a mean breadth of 2 1/2 m., con-but it is destitute of trees, the whole island having been laid waste by the British in the revolutionary war. It affords excellent pasturage, and maintains more than 30,000 sheep. The town of Newport is in the S. part.

Rhode Island, one of the New England States bounded N. and E. by Massachusetts; S. by the ocean and W. by Connecticut. It extends from 41. 15. to 42. N. lat. and from 71. 8. to 71. 52. W. long. 42 m. in average length and 29 in breadth and containing 1,225 sq. m. including Narraganset Bay which intersects it from N. to S. and embosoms Rhode, Connecticut, Prudence, and several other small islands. Block Island which lies off the coast also belongs to this state. The rivers are the Pawtucket, Pawtuxet and Pawcatuck which flow into Narraganset Bay. There are no mountains in the state, nor any hilly tracts, yet the general face of the country is somewhat rough and rocky. There are some level districts upon the borders of Narraganset Bay, and some flats on the Atlantic shores. The aspect of the country on the whole is picturesque, the highest eminences, are Mount Hope, in Bristol; Hopkins' Hill, in W. Greenwich; and Woonsocket Hill, in Smithfield but they are not remarkable for elevation. The whole state enjoys a salubrious climate; the winter in the maritime parts is sensibly milder, and the seasons there are more uniform than in the rest of New England; the heat of summer is much alleviated by refreshing sea breezes. In other respects the climate resembles that of Connecticut and Massachusetts. The soil is pretty uniform; on the continent it is generally a gravelly loam, which is tolerably fertile but difficult of cultivation. Upon the islands, the soil is light and productive. There are a few pine plains in the state, but very little alluvial land. Considerable quantities of anthracite coal exist in the state but the mines are little worked at present. Iron ore occurs in the northern parts, and there is a mine wrought at Cranston. There are quarries of limestone at Smithfield, and the same place affords excellent marble. Beds of serpentine, are found at Newport. The mineral treasures of this state as far as yet discovered, are not on the whole either extensive or valuable.

Rhode Island is divided into 5 counties, Providence, Kent, Washington, Newport and Bristol. The Pop. is 97,212. Fourteen of which are slaves. There is no seat of government; the legislature meet alternately at Providence, Newport, East Greenwich and South Kingston. The other large towns are Bristol, Warwick and North Providence. The Blackstone canal, which See, lies partly in this state, and a railroad is projected from Providence to Boston. Agricultural industry is chiefly confined to grazing and the dairy.

The islands and shores of Narraganset bay are celebrated for their fine cattle, their numerous flocks of sheep, and the excellence and abundance of their butter and cheese. Of the different kinds of grain, maize, barley, oats and rye, are the most generally cultivated.

The commerce is chiefly confined to the ports of Newport and Providence. The foreign imports, in 1828, amounted to 1,128,226 dollars. The exports of domestic produce to 541,675 dollars, and the shipping to 40,666 tons.

Pawtucket has the largest manufactories in the state. The manufactures of this place are chiefly of cotton. The mills are seated upon three falls in Pawtucket river, and run 45,000 spindles. They employ nearly 900 looms taining about 37 sq. m.; it is a very beautiful island; the air is pure and salubrious, and the climate milder than on the continent, rendering it a very desirable residence for invalids in summer. The surface of the island is agreeably diversified,

Providence has also large manufactures of cotton, woolen, cordage, spermaceti, &c. Warwick has several cotton manufactories, and at Newport is a manufacture of lace. At Slatersville, in the town of Smithfield, are extensive manufactures of cotton. Rhode Island is almost exclusively occupied in manufactures.

Blackstone river affords an immense water power for manufactories. Upon Woonsocket Falls, and in the neighbourhood, are about 20 different establishments, and others are begun. These already produce annually 2,500,000 yards of sheeting, calico, shirting, drilling, satinnet, &c. At this place are also an iron foundry and manufactures of machinery.

Rhode Island is the only state in the Union that is without a written constitution, the government being to this day founded on the provisions of the charter, granted to the colony by Charles II. in 1663. The obligations of this charter as a constitution of civil government, became annulled by the declaration of independence, but by the common consent of the people, the form of government was preserved without any essential variation. The legislature is called the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives; the senators are 10. The representatives are two from each town but Providence, Portsmouth and Warwick send each four, and Newport, sends 6. The representatives are chosen twice a year. The executive consists of a Governor, whose powers are very limited, and a Lt. Governor, both of whom have seats in the Senate; these, as well as the State Treasurer, Secretary, and Attorney General are chosen annually. Suffrage is universal. The legislature have 2 stated sessions annually, and meet commonly four times a year. Common schools are supported by an annual payment of 10,000 dollars from the state; and there is an university at Providence. The most numerous religious sect are the Baptists, who have 12 ministers; the Congregationalists have 10, and the Episcopalians, 8. There is a remnant of the Narraganset Indians at Charlestown in this state, amounting to about 430, and possessing 3,000 acres of land. They are Baptists, and support a missionary.

Rhode Island was settled by Roger Williams, who was expelled from Massachusetts for avowing himself a friend to religious freedom. With a few followers he journeyed beyond the limits states which acceded to the Union. This took place in 1790.

Rhodes, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, at the entrance of the gulf of Macri, 40 m. long and 15 broad. The soil is pretty fertile but badly cultivated. This island is much celebrated in ancient history, having been frequently under the dominion of different masters. The Saracens became possessors of it in 665; and, in 1309, it was taken from them by the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, who afterwards took the name of Knights of Rhodes. They retained it till 1623 when it was taken by the Turks, after an obstinate resistance; and the small number of knights that remains were afterwards removed to Malta. Like the neighbouring islands, it has been reduced by the oppressions of the Porte to a state of great poverty and wretchedness.

Rhodes, the capital of the above island and an archbishop's see; was anciently 9 miles in circumference, and was regarded by Alexander, who deposited his last will here, as the first city in the world; but the present town occupies only a quarter of the extent of the ancient city. It has a good harbour, with a narrow entrance between two rocks, on which are two towers to defend the passage. Here, in all probability, stood the famous Colossus, a statue of bronze, 70 cubits high reckoned one of the seven wonders of the world: it was thrown down by an earthquake; and, when the Saracens became masters of the island, they knocked it to pieces, and sold the fragments to a Jew of Edessa, near 900 years after its fall. Rhodes was deemed an impregnable fortress, being surrounded by triple walls and double ditches, which have long been in a state of dilapidation. Long. 25. 20. E., lat. 36. 27. N.

Rhodes. See Rodex.

Rhone, a large river that rises in Switzerland, in Mount Furca, and soon joins a more considerable stream from an extensive glacier called that of the Rhone. After passing through the vale of Valais, it runs through the Lake of Geneva, and separating Savoy from Bresse, it flows W. to Lyons, then S. to Vienne, Tournon, Valence, Viviers, Pont St. Esprit, Avignon, Beaucaire, Tarascon, and Arles, and enters the Mediterranean by several mouths.

Rhone, a department of France, so named from the river Rhone, which flows on its E. border. It includes the late provinces of Beaujolois and Lyonois, and contains an area of 1050 square miles, with 330,000 inhabitants. Lyons is the capital.

Rhone, Mouths of the, a department of France on the coast of the Mediterranean, at the influx of the Rhone, containing the W. part of the late province of Provence. It comprises an area of 2,000 square miles, with 300,000 inhabitants. Marseilles is the capital.

Rhonhouse, a village of Scotland, in Kirkcudbrightshire, 8 m. N. N. W. of Newton Douglass, noted for a great annual fair, and a weekly cattle market from October to January.

Rhaden, a town of Prussian Westphalia, on the Monne, 12 m. S. S. E. of Lipstadt.

Rhynberg, or Rhinsberg, a town of Brandenburg, with a handsome palace, built by Frederic II., when hereditary prince. It is seated on the Rhyn, 10 m. N. of Ruppın.

Rhynney. See Rumney.

Rhynov, a town of Brandenburg, at the conflux of the Rhyn with the Havel, 9 m. S. E. of Havelburg.

of the state and founded a settlement in 1636 which he called Providence. Two years afterward their number had increased so far that a settlement was made on the island of Aquetnet, or Rhode Island. A government was organized and a code of laws established in 1647. Religious toleration with a trifling exception has always prevailed in this state. It was the last of the

Rochester, p.t. Monroe Co. N. Y. on the Genesee river, is a place of great trade and opulence, and astonishingly rapid growth. It was founded in 1812, and is already the fourth town in the state in point of numbers: it is also the emporium of the western parts. It stands upon the great canal, 7 m. from Lake Ontario, with a ship navigation by Genesee river within 2 m. of the town, communication with New York, Quebec and the great lakes. Rochester contains 2,000 buildings, and the streets are handsome and regular. It has 11 churches, 2 banks, a museum, an arcade, an atheneum, and several literary institutions, 2 daily and several weekly newspapers. Within the limits of the village, for such is the title of this flourishing city, are 13 large flour mills, built of stone, which grind 342,000 barrels of flour annually. Some of these mills are on a scale of magnitude not equalled elsewhere in the world. One of them covers more than 4 acres, and all are considered unrivalled in the perfection of their machinery. Here are also cotton and woolen manufactories, and saw-mills which turn out 9,000,000 feet of lumber in a year. The Genesee falls are in the northern part of the town, and the water power which the river affords here, is immense.

There are three bridges across the Genesee at this place; the canal aqueduct deserves particular notice. The canal strikes the river in the S. part of Rochester, and after following the eastern bank for half a mile, crosses the river in the centre of the town in an aqueduct built upon 11 arches of hewn stone 804 feet in length; the structure is no less worthy of admiration for its strength than its architectural beauty. From the observatory at the summit of the arcade may be seen in a clear day the waters of Lake Ontario like a strip of blue cloud on the verge of the horizon. Rochester is 236 m. W. Albany. 396 N. Washington. Pop. 10,855.

Rochford, a town in Essex, Eng. 16 m. S. E. of Chelmsford and 40 E. by N. of London.

Rochlitz, a town of Saxony, with a castle on a rock, and a handsome bridge over the Mulda, 24 m. S. E. of Leipzig.

Rockbridge, a county of the W. District of Virginia. Pop. 14,244. Lexington is the capital. This county takes its name from the celebrated natural bridge which is situated within its limits. This remarkable work of nature has been formed by the bursting of the waters of a stream called Cedar creek through a wall of rock more than 200 feet in height. The bridge is 60 feet in width and the sides for the great part of their height are nearly perpendicular. A road passes over the top. The scenery it affords is exceedingly grand and romantic.

Rocky Mountains, an immense chain in the western part of North America which may be regarded as a continuation of the Cordilleras of Mexico. They extend Northwesterly nearly to the Frozen Ocean, and form the ridge which separates the waters of the great basin of the Mississippi from those which fall into the Pacific Ocean.

In extent, in elevation, and in breadth, the Rocky mountains far exceed the Alleghanies of the eastern states. Their mean breadth is 200 miles, and where broadest, 300. Their height must be very great, since, when first seen by captain Lewis, they were at least 150 miles distant. On a nearer approach, the sublimity of the prospect is increased, by the appearance of range rising behind range, each yielding in height to its successor, till the most distant is mingled with the clouds. In this lofty region the ranges are covered with snow in the middle of June. From this last circumstance, these mountains have been sometimes denominated the Shining mountains—an appellation much more appropriate than that of the Rocky or Stony mountains, a property possessed by all mountains, but peculiar to none. The longitudinal extent of this great chain is immense, running as far N. W. as 60 N. lat., and perhaps to the Frozen Ocean itself. The snows and fountains of this enormous range, from the 38th to the 48th degree of northern latitude, feed, with never-failing supplies, the Missouri and its powerful auxiliary streams.

A great number of lateral ranges project to the S. E., E., and N. E. of the main range. Where the Missouri enters the plains, is the most eastern projection; and from where the Yellow Stone leaves the snowy range, there is a range, running more than 200 miles south-east, which is intersected by the Bighorn river. As these mountains have not yet been explored by the eye of geological science, it is impossible to say any thing respecting their component parts; but, from any thing that we can learn from Pike and Clarke, they seem to be chiefly granitic. No volcanoes have yet been discovered amongst them; but strange unusual noises were heard from the mountains, by the American party, when stationed above the falls of the Missouri. These sounds seemed to come from the northwest. "Since our arrival at the falls," says the narrative, "we have repeatedly heard a strange noise coming from the mountains, a little to the north of west. It is heard at different periods of the day and night: sometimes when the air is perfectly still and unclouded, and consists of one stroke only, or of five or six discharges in quick succession. It is loud, and resembles precisely the sound of a six pounder at the distance of three miles. The Indians had before mentioned this noise like thunder, but we had paid no attention to it. The watermen also of the party say, that the Pawnees and Ricarees give the same account of a similar noise made in the Black Mountains, to the westward of them." Again, near the same place, it is afterwards said: "They heard, about sunset, two discharges of the tremendous mountain-artillery."

The base of these mountains is between three and four thousand feet above the sea. The highest point is supposed to be a peak called the Great White mountain, between the Arkansas and Platte rivers, which according to the measurement of Pike is 12,531 feet above the sea and 10,581 above the level of the meadow at its base. The lofty regions of these mountains are inhabited by an animal called the Rocky mountain goat. Their manners are said to resemble greatly those of the domestic goat. The exact limits of the range of this animal have not been ascertained, but it probably extends from the 40th to the 64th or 65th degree of latitude. It is common on the elevated part of the range that gives origin to the Mackenzie, Oregon, Nelson, and Missouri rivers. The fine wool which the animal produces, grows principally on the back and hips, and is intermixed, with long coarse hair. From the circumstance of its bearing wool, it has occasionally been termed a sheep by the voyagers and even by naturalists; some little confusion has therefore crept into the accounts of its habits, which have been published from the reports of traders. Its flesh is hard and dry, and little esteemed. The Indians make caps and saddles of its skin. The Hudson's Bay company have lately presented a perfect specimen of the goat to the Zoological Society. This animal is of the size of the domestic sheep, and is totally white, except the horns, hoofs, lips, and margins of the nostrils: the horns are black and shining.

Another remarkable race of animals are the Rocky Mountain Sheep, which are found in this elevated region from its northern termination in latitude 68 to about latitude 40, and most likely still further south. They also frequent the elevated and craggy ridges with which the country between the great mountain range and the Pacific is intersected; but they do not appear to have advanced further to the eastward than to the declivity of the Rocky Mountains, nor are they found in any of the hilly tracts nearer to Hudson's Bay. They collect in flocks consisting of from three to thirty, the young rams and females herding together during the winter and spring, while the old rams form separate flocks. The ewes bring forth in June or July, and then retire with their lambs to the most inaccessible heights. Mr. Drummond informs us that in the retired parts of the mountains, where the hunters had seldom penetrated, he found no difficulty in approaching the Rocky Mountain Sheep, which there exhibited the simplicity of character so remarkable in the domestic species; but that where they had been often fired at, they were exceedingly wild, alarmed their companions on the approach of danger by a hissing noise, and scaled the rocks with a speed and agility that baffled pursuit. He lost several that he had mortally wounded, by their retiring to die amongst the secluded precipices. Their favourite feeding places are grassy knolls, skirted by craggy rocks to which they can retreat, when pursued by dogs or wolves. They are accustomed to pay daily visits to certain caves in the mountains that are encrusted with a saline efflorescence, of which they are fond. These caves are situated in slaty rocks. Mr. Drummond says that the horns of the old rams attain a size so enormous, and curve so much forwards and downwards that they effectually prevent the animal from feeding on level ground. Its flesh is said by those who have fed on it, to be quite delicious when it is in season, far superior to that of any of the deer species which frequent the same quarter, and even exceeding in flavour the finest English mutton.

Rocroy, a town of France, department of Ardenes, celebrated for the victory gained by the French over the Spaniards in 1643. It is seated in a plain, surrounded by forests, 26 m. N. of Rethel.

Rodach, a town of Germany, in the principality of Saxe-Coburg, on a river of its name, 9 m. N. W. Coburg.

Rodby, a sea-port of Denmark, in the island of Laland. The passage hence to Heiligenhaven, in Holstein and to the island of Femern, is much frequented. It is 10 m. N. E. of Naxkow. Long. 11. 45. E., lat. 54. 45. N.

Rodenburg, a town and castle of Germany, in the district of Schauenburg, near which is a mineral spring. 11 m. W. by S. of Hanover.

Rodez, a town of France, capital of the department of Aveyron, and a bishop's see. Here are four great annual fairs, and some manufactures of gray cloths and serges. The lofty steeple of its cathedral is admired for its architecture. It is seated in the midst of mountains, on a hill, at the foot of which flows the Aveyron 30 m. W. by S. of Mende.

Rodings, a district of Essex, Eng. comprising eight parishes, each of which is called Roding, but they are distinguished by the additional appellation of Beauchamp, Eythorp, High, Leaden, White, Abbot's, Berner's, and Margaret's.

Rodman, p.t. Jefferson Co. N. Y. 160 m. N. W. Albany. Pop. 1,901.

Rodok, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Dehli, 50 m. E. of Hissar and 60 W. N. W. of Dehli.

Rodosto, a sea port of Romania, and a bishop's see, seated on the side of a hill, on the sea of Marmora, 62 m. W. of Constantinople. Long. 27. 37. E., lat. 41. 1. N.

Rodriguez, an island in the Indian Ocean, 30 m. long and 12 broad, lying 100 leagues E. of Mauritius. The country is mountainous, and in many parts rocky, though in some places the soil is excellent; but the best production of the island is the land turtle, which are in great abundance. On the N. side is a bay that affords secure shelter for ships, and ample supplies of wood and water. Long. 63. 0. E., lat. 19. 30. S.

Röer, a river of the Prussian states, which rises in Westphalia, flows by Arensburg, Schwerte, Werden, and Duysburg, and enters the Rhine at Roerort.

Roerort, a town of the Prussian states, in the duchy of Cleve, at the conflux of the Roer with the Rhine, 17 m. S. by E. of Weael.

Rogonathpur, a town of Bengal, capital of the district of Pachete. 126 m. N. W. of Calcutta. Long. 86. 47. E., lat. 23. 32. N.

Roha, or Rouah. See Orfa.

Rohan, a town of France, department of Morbihan, on the Aoust, 20 m. N. of Vannes.

Rohilkund, or Rohilla, a territory of Hindoostan, inhabited by the Rohillas, and formerly belonging to the province of Dehli, but now included in the district of Bareilly. It was conquered by the nabob of Oude, with the assistance of the British, in 1774. But in 1801 it was ceded to the British, and is now governed by a civil establishment.

Rokitzan, a town of Bohemia, with good cloth manufactures and a trade in iron, 7 m. E. by N. of Pilsen.

Rolduc, a town of the Netherlands, in the late duchy of Limburg, 10 m. S. W. of Juliers.

Rom, an island of Denmark, on the coast of S. Jutland. It is 7 m. long and nearly 3 broad, and contains a few villages.

Romagna, the former name of a province of Italy, in the papal states, bounded on the N. by the Ferrarese, E. by the gulf of Venice, S. by Tuscany and Urbino, and W. by Bologna and Tuscany. It is fertile in corn, wine, oil, and fruits; and has also mines, mineral waters, and salt-works, which makes its principal revenue. Ravenna is the capital.

Romainmotier, a town of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud, capital of a bailiwick, with a castle; seated in a narrow valley, through which flows the river Diaz, 11 m. S. W. of Yverdun.

Romani, a town of European Turkey, in Mol-davia, and a bishop's see; seated on the Siret, 50 m. W. S. W. of Jassy.

Romania, a province or division of Turkey, about 200 m. long and 130 broad; bounded on the N. by Bulgaria, E. by the black Sea, S. by the sea of Marmora and the Archipelago, and W. by Macedonia. The whole of this fine country, comprising Thrace, Macedonia, and ancient Greece, is at present in a very backward state, owing to the oppression and arbitrary exactions of the Turks. The inhabitants have, however, at length been liberated from the galling yoke which they long maintained an arduous struggle to throw off. See Greece.

Romano, a town of Austrian Italy, on a river that runs between the Oglio and Serio, 26 m. E. of Milan.

Romans, a town of France, department of Drome, on the Isere, 22 m. S. W. of Grenoble and 30 S. of Vienne.

Rome, a celebrated city of Italy, the capital of the pope's dominions. It is situate on the Tiber, over which it has four bridges. The walls are of brick, in which are 15 gates; and its whole circumference, including that part beyond the Tiber and all belonging to the Vatican, is upwards of 16 m. It has 144,541 inhabitants, which, though greatly inferior to what it could boast in the days of its ancient power, is considerably more than it could number at some former periods since the fall of the empire. Some of the principal streets are of considerable length, and perfectly straight. That called the Corso is the most frequented. The shops on each side are three or four feet higher than the street, and there is a path for foot passengers on a level with the shops. The palaces, of which there are several, in this street, range in a line with the houses, having no courts before them. The Strada Felice and the Strada di Porta Pia, are also very long and noble streets. Rome exhibits a strange mixture of magnificent and interesting, and of common and beggarly objects; the former consist of palaces, churches, fountains, and the remains of antiquity; the latter comprehend all the rest of the city. The church of St. Peter, in the opinion of many, surpasses, in size and magnificence, the finest monuments of ancient architecture. It was begun in 1506, finished in 1621, and is entirely covered both within and without with marble. Its length is 730 feet, the breadth 520, and the height, from the pavement to the top of the cross which crowns the cupola, 450. The high altar under the cupola is 90 feet in height, and of extraordinary magnificence. A complete description of this church, and of its statues, basso-relievos, columns, and various other ornaments, would fill volumes. The cathedral of St. John Lateran, the Romans say, is the most ancient of all the churches of Rome, and the mother of all the churches in Christendom. It contains the Scala Santa, of 28 white marble steps, brought from Jerusalem, by which Christ is said to have ascended to the palace of Caiaphas. To this church every new pope constantly goes first, in a magnificent procession, to take possession of the holy see. The Pantheon, which from its circular form has obtained the name of the Rotunda is the most perfect of the Roman temples which now remain, and notwithstanding the depredations it has sustained from Goths, Vandals, and popes, is still a beautiful monument of Roman taste. The pavilion of the great altar of St. Peter, and the four wreathed pillars of Corinthian brass which support it, were formed out of the spoils of the Pantheon, which, after nearly 2,000 years, has still a probability of outliving its proud and capacious rival. Its height is 150 feet, and its width nearly the same. There are no pillars to support the roof, which is constructed in the manner of a cupola; neither has it any windows, a sufficiency of light being admitted through a central opening in the dome. As the Pantheon is the most entire, the amphitheatre of Vespasian is the most stupendous monument of antiquity in Rome. About one-half of the external circuit still remains, from which a pretty exact idea may be formed of the original structure, and by computation it could contain 85,000 spectators. But the antiquities of Rome are too numerous to be minutely described; so that the ancient Forum, now a cow-market, the beautiful column of Trajan, &c., must be passed over. The Campidoglio, built by Michael Angelo, is a beautiful structure, standing on the site of the ancient Capitol, so long the centre of the empire of the world. The body of this palace is the residence of the Senators of Rome, and the wings are inhabited by the conservators of the city. The pope has three superb palaces, of which the principal is the Vatican, near St. Peter's church. The library of this palace is the largest and most complete in the world; rich, especially in MSS., in all languages, and of all ages. In Rome the connoisseur will meet with innumerable paintings by the greatest masters, and with the finest works of sculpture, &c. Besides the university, which consists of several noble colleges, there are numerous academies and literary societies. The castle of St. Angelo serves more to keep the city in awe than to repel any foreign attack.

Rome was formerly the metropolis of one of the greatest empires that have ever existed, and may be regarded as the parent of all the cities, the arts, and states of modern Europe. The ancient Romans were governed by seven kings, for about 220 years. During the next 488 years, they were governed by consuls, tribunes, decemvirs, and dictators, in their turns. They were afterwards governed by 60 emperors, for the space of 518 years. Their wars with the Carthaginians, Spaniards, Gauls, Mithridates of Pontus, Parthians, and Jews, were the most noted. The Roman empire was afterwards much distracted by various commotions, and in 410 Rome was taken and burnt. In May, 1527, Rome was invested by the army of the emperor Charles V.; and the general, to prevent a mutiny, promised to enrich them with the spoils of this opulent city. The general, however, was himself killed, as he was planting a scaling ladder against the walls; but his soldiers, not discouraged by his death, mounted to the assault with the utmost valor, and, entering the city, exercised all those brutalities that may be expected from ferocity aggravated by resistance. In the wars which attended the French revolution, Rome was again a considerable sufferer. Large contributions, and severe military exactions, were drawn from the inhabitants; and a great number of the most valuable statues and paintings were sent off to Paris. The pope was finally restored in 1814. See Popedom. Rome is 110 m. N. W. of Naples, 410 S. S. W. of Vienna, and 600 S. E. of Paris. Long. 12. 29. E., lat. 41. 54. N.

Rome, a township of Kennebec Co. Me. 22 m. N. Augusta. Pop. 883; p.t. Oneida Co. N. Y. 111 m. W. Albany. Pop. 4,360. It is pleasantly situated half a mile from the Erie Canal; p.v. Ash tabula, Lawrence and Athens Cos. Ohio; p.v. Perry Co. Ind.

Romenay, a town of France, department of Saone-et-Loire, 15 m. N. N. E. of Maçon.

Romerstadt, a town of Moravia, in the neighbourhood of which are some iron mines. 20 m. N. N. E. of Olmutz.

Romhild, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Saxe-Meinungen, with a castle, 13 m. S. of Meinungen.

Romkala, a town of Syria, with the remains of an ancient and strong castle, and two churches. It is seated on the Euphrates, at the influx of the Simeren, and is used by the Turks as a place of banishment for great men in disgrace. 85 m. N. N. E. of Aleppo.

Romna, a town of Russia, in the government of Tchernigof, 88 m. E. S. E. of Tchernigof.

Romney, p.v. Hampshire Co. Va. on the Potomac 50 m. W. Winchester; t. Kent. Co. U. C.

Romney, New, a borough in Kent, Eng. It is one of the cinque-ports, and once contained five churches and a priory; but, since the sea was retired, it is much reduced. About a mile to the W. is Old Romney, the original port, which is now a small place. 22 m. S. W. of Dover and 71 S. E. of London.

Romney Marsh, a tract in the most southern part of Kent, Eng. between Dungeness and Rye-haven, defended from the sea by a strong embankment, called Dymchurch Wall. It is 20 m. long and eight broad, containing about 50,000 acres of firm land, and some of the richest pastures in England. Vast flocks of sheep and herds of cattle are fattened here for the London market.

Romont, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Friburg, seated on a mountain, 10 m. N. W. of Friburg.

Romorentin, a town of France, in the department of Loire-et-Cher, with a castle, and manufactures of serges and cloths; seated on the Sautre, 26 m. S. E. of Blois and 40 S. by W. of Orleans.

Romsdal, a town of Norway, capital of a province in the government of Drontheim, 100 m. S. W. of Drontheim. Long. 7. 54. E., lat. 62. 28. N.

Romsey, a town in Hampshire, Eng. It has a manufacture of shalloons, and several paper mills; and is seated on the Andover canal and the river Test, 8 m. N. W. of Southampton and 73 W. by S. of London.

Romulus, p.t. Seneca Co. N. Y. 204 m. W. Albany on Seneca Lake. Pop. 2,089.

Ronaldshay, North and South, two small islands of the Orkneys.

Ronay, one of the Hebrides, situate between the Isle of Sky and the mainland.

Roncevalles, a town of Spain, in Navarre, situate in a valley to which it gives name, 14 m. N. N. E. of Pamplona.

Ronciglione, a town of Italy, in the states of the church, with a fortified castle. It is seated on the Tereia, near a lake of the same name, 28 m. N. N. W. of Rome. Long. 12. 32. E., lat. 42. 18. N.

Ronda, a strong town of Spain, in Granada, with a castle; situate on a craggy rock, near the river Guadiaro, 43 m. N. by E. of Gibraltar.

Roney's Point, p.v. Ohio Co. Va.

Ronne, a sea-port of Denmark, in the island of Bornholm, and the residence of the governor. The harbour is fortified, but not deep. Long 14 55. E., lat. 55. 10. N.

- Ronneburg, a town and castle of Germany, in the principality of Altenburg, belonging to Saxe-Gotha, 14 m. S. W. of Altenburg.
- Roopat, an island in the straits of Malacca, separated from Sumatra by a narrow channel. Long. 101. 9. E., lat. 3. 0. N.
- Root, p.t. Montgomery Co. N. Y. 46 m. N. W. Albany. Pop. 2,750.
- Rootstown, p.v. Portage Co. Ohio. 134 m. N. E. Columbia. Pop. 663.
- Roque, St., a town of Spain, in Andalusia, at the entrance of the isthmus which separates Gibraltar from the continent. It stands on the top of a hill, overlooking the bay, 17 m. N. E. of Tariffa, and 58 S. E. of Cadiz.
- Rouquefort, a town of France, department of Landes, seated on the Douese, 15 m. E. N. E. of Mont de Marsan.
- Roquemare, a town in the department of Gard. 22 m. N. E. of Nismes.
- Rouquetas, a town of Spain, in Granada, on the coast of the Mediterranean, 10 m. S. W. of Almeria. 52 S. E. of Granada.
- Roras, a town of Norway, in Drontheim, noted for important mines of copper, 65 m. S. of Drontheim.
- Rosa, a singular mountain of the Pennine Alps, at the N. E. boundary of Piedmont, little inferior in height to Mont Blanc. It forms as it were, a circus of gigantic peaks, round the village of Macugnaga; and its appearance is supposed to impart the name from some resemblance to an expanded rose.
- Rosamarino, a town of Sicily, in Val di Demona, at the mouth of a river of its name, 22 m. W. by S. of Patti.
- Rosana, a town of Russian Lithuania, in the government of Grodno, seated near the Zolva, 56 m. S. W. of Novogrodec.
- Rosbach, a village of Prussian Saxony, famous for a victory obtained by Prussia over the French and Austrians in 1757. 10 m. S. E. of Merseburg.
- Roschad, a town of Switzerland, with a castle on a mountain; seated on the lake of Constance, 7 m. E. N. E. of St. Gall.
- Roschill, a town of Denmark, in the isle of Zealand, and a bishop's see. It is now a poor place, but was the residence of the kings of Denmark for several centuries before Copenhagen was founded; and the cathedral has long been the place of their sepulture. A treaty of peace was concluded here in 1658. It is seated at the end of a deep gulf, 16 m. W. of Copenhagen.
- Roscoe, p.t. Coshocton Co. Ohio, 68 m. N. E. Columbia.
- Roscommon, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, 60 m. long and 37 broad; bounded on the N. by Sligo and Leitrim. E. by Longford and W. Meath, S. by Galway, and W. by Galway and Mayo. It contains about 209,000 inhabitants, is divided into 56 parishes, and sends three members to parliament. It is a tolerably level country, producing excellent corn and pasturage, yet there are some extensive bogs.
- Roscommon, a town of Ireland, capital of the above county, 80 m. W. by N. of Dublin. Long. 8. 42. W., lat. 55. 34. N.
- Roscommon, p.v. Steuben Co. N. Y.
- Roscrea, a town of Ireland, in Tipperary. 2 m. to the S. E. are the singular ruins of an abbey, on an island of about three acres, in the centre of a bog. It is 20 m. W. S. W. of Maryborough and 32 N. of Cashel.

- Roses Bluff, p.v. Dallas Co. Alab.
- Rosetta, a town of Egypt, one of the pleasantest in the country. It has a great manufacture of striped and other coarse linens; but its chief business is the carriage of goods to Cairo; for all European merchandize is brought hither from Alexandria by sea. The rice grown in its vicinity, called sultani, is chiefly sent to Constantinople, and its exportation to any other place is prohibited. Rosetta was taken by the French in 1798, and here the English were defeated by the Turks in 1807. It stands on an island, formed by the W. branch of the Nile, 25 m. E. N. E. of Alexandria and 100 N. N. W. of Cairo. Long. 30. 23. E., lat. 31. 23. N.

Rostak, a town of Arabia, in the province of Oman, and the seat of a sovereign prince. It is 120 m. W. of Maskat. Long. 57. 30. E. lat. 23. 30. N.

Rostock, a fortified town of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, with a university, a good harbour, a strong citadel, an arsenal, and three churches. It is divided into three parts, the Old, the New, and the Middle Town, and carries on a large trade. It is seated on the river Warne, 10 m. from its entrance into the Baltic and 32 E. N. E. of Wismar. Lon. 12. 20. E., lat. 54. 10. N.

Rostof, a town of Russia, in the government of Xaroslaf, and an episcopal see. It is seated on the Lake Nero, or Rostof, which communicates with the Volga by the river Kotorost, 93 m. N. E. of Moscow. Lon. 40. 25. E., lat. 57. 5. N.

Rostrenan, a town of France, department of Cotes du Nord, near the Blavet, 35 m. S. W. of St. Brieux.

Rostrevor, a sea-port of Ireland, in the county of Down, with a considerable saltwork and a pottery. It is much frequented for sea-bathing, and the peculiar beauty of its situation renders it one of the most delightful summer retreats in the province. Adjoining the town is Rostrevor Hill, a romantic mountain of extraordinary elevation and beauty. The town is seated on Carlingford Bay, 9 m. S. E. of Newry.

Rota, a town and castle of Spain, in Andalusia, at the entrance of the bay of Cadiz, 9 m. N. N. W. of Cadiz.

Rotenburg, a town of Hanover, in the duchy of Verden, on the river Wunne, 15 m. N. by E. of Verden.

Rotenburg, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Hesse, with a palace; seated on the Fulda 24 m. S. S. E. of Cassel.

Rotenfels, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of Lower Maine; seated on the Maine, 13 m. N. W. of Wurtzburg.

Roth, a town and castle of Bavaria, in the district of Anspach, noted as the birthplace of the celebrated Gessner. It stands at the conflux of the Roth with the Rednitz, 18 m. S. of Nurenberg.

Rothbury, a town in Northumberland, Eng. situate on the Coquet, in a sequestered and romantic glen, sheltered from the northern blasts by towering hills: on the S. an abrupt bank rises in a pyramidal form, the summit of which is crowned by a stately tower. The duke of Northumberland is lord of the manor, though he possesses very little freehold property in the town 12 m. S. W. of Alnwick and 303 N. by W. of London.

Rothenberg, a town of Prussian Silesia, on the river Neissa, 15 m. N. of Gorlitz.

Rothenburg, a town of Bavarian Franconia, surrounded by moats and ramparts. It stands on a mountain, by the river Tauber, from which it is supplied with water by means of a machine. 15 m. W. N. W. of Anspach. Long. 10. 18. E., lat. 49. 22. N.

Rotherham, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. It is famous for the extensive iron-works in its vicinity at Masbrough. It is seated at the conflux of the Rother with the Don, 32 m. S. of Leeds and 159 N. by W. of London.

Rotherhithe, a village in Surrey, Eng. noted for its dock yards. The church contains an interesting monument to Lee Boo, prince of the Pelew Islands, who came over to England with captain Wilson, and died of small pox in 1784. Rotherhithe is situate on the S. bank of the Thames, 2 m. E. of London.

Rothsay, a borough of Scotland, the capital of the isle of Bute. Here is an ancient castle, once a royal palace. The inhabitants are actively engaged in the herring fishery, and several cotton works are also established. Rothsay joins with Ayr, Irvine, Campbeltown, and Inverary, in sending one member to parliament. It is situate on the E. side of the island, and has an excellent harbour and pier. 80 m. W. by S. of Edinburgh. Long. 4. 53. W., lat. 55. 48. N.

Rothneil, a town of Germany, in Wurtemberg; seated on the Neckar, near its source, 27 m. S. S. W. of Tubingen. Long. 8. 37. E., lat. 48. 8. N.

Rottenmann, a town of the Austrian states, in Stiria, with a college of regular canons, 20 m. N. W. of Judenburg.

Rotterdam, a city of S. Holland, with one of the finest harbours in the Netherlands. Next to Amsterdam, it is the most considerable place in Holland, for the beauty of its buildings and for its trade; and the inhabitants are computed at 60,000. There are so many deep canals that ships may unload at the very doors of the warehouses. On the E. side of the city is a large basin and dock, for the purpose of building and launching vessels employed in the service of the admiralty and the E. India Company. This port is more frequented than Amsterdam, because the ice breaks up sooner, and the tide, in two or three hours, will carry a ship into the open sea. The townhouse, the bank, and the arsenal, are magnificent. Some of the houses are built in the old Spanish style, with the gable ends embattled in front; but there is a great number of modern brick houses, which are lofty and spacious, particularly on that magnificent quay called the Boom Tees. On this quay is a handsome Jewish synagogue. In an open place at the head of one of the canals is a bronze statue of Erasmus, who was born here in 1467. This city was in a very flourishing state previously to the admission of the French troops in January 1795, and the war with England, when the commerce of Holland was suspended. It had begun to recover in 1800, when it was again rapidly depressed by the renewal of war. After the fall of Napoleon its prosperity greatly increased, and it is thought that the separation of Belgium from Holland will operate favourably on the commerce of this town. It is seated at the influx of the Rotte with the Merwe (the most northern branch of the Meuse), 36 m. S. S. W. of Amsterdam. Long. 4. 29. E., lat. 51. 56. N.

Rotterdam, one of the Friendly Islands, in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Tasman, in 1643. Long. 174. 30. W., lat. 20. 16. S.

Rotterdam, a village of Oneida Co. N. Y.

Rottlingen, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of Lower Maine, situate on the Tauber, 17 m. S. of Wurtzberg.

Rouah, or Roika. See Orfa.

Rouen, a city of France, capital of the department of Lower Seine, and an archbishop's see. It is 7 m. in circuit, and stands on the N. side of the Seine, over which is an elegant stone bridge of recent erection. The streets are narrow and crooked, and many of the houses are of wood; notwithstanding which it is one of the most opulent and commercial places in France. Among the public buildings, the most distinguished are the great hall of the palace, in which the parliament of Rouen met, the old castle, and the principal church, ornamented with three towers. Near this church, which is not the only remarkable one is the public library. In the market-place is a statue of the celebrated Maid of Orleans, who was burnt here by the English as a witch. The inhabitants have manufactures of woolen, linen, cotton, iron ware, paper, and pottery; also sugar refineries and salt-works. Rouen is the birth-place of the two Corneilles, and of Fontenelle. It is 50 m. S. W. of Amiens and 70 N. W. of Paris. Long. 1. 2. E., lat. 49. 26. N.

Rouergue, a former province of France, which now forms the department of Jevron, which see.

Round Lick, p.v. Smith Co. Ten. 60 m. N. E. Murfreesborough.

Rousay, one of the Orkneys, lying N. W. of the mainland. It is about 9 m. long and 4 broad, and contains 800 inhabitants.

Rouse's Point, p.v. Clinton Co. N. Y. on the western point of the outlet of Lake Champlain 156 m. N. Albany. A large castle of hewn stone with 3 tiers of embrasures has been erected at this spot by the United States, and was claimed by the British as within the boundary of Canada.

Rousselart, a town of the Netherlands, in W. Flanders, seated on the Mandel, 10 m. N. E. of Ypres.

Roussillon, a former province of France, now included in the department of Eastern Pyrenees. See Pyrenees, Eastern.

Roveredo, a town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol, seated near the Adige, at the foot of a mountain, on the river Lens, over which is a bridge, defended by a strong citadel. It has a very considerable trade in silk, and a great quantity of tobacco is raised here. In 1796 the Austrians were defeated near this place by the French, who took possession of the town; but they were obliged to abandon it soon afterwards. 13 m. S. of Trent. Long. 10. 55. E., lat. 45. 50. N.

Rovigno, a sea-port of Austrian Illyria, on the coast of Istria, with two good harbours. The inhabitants are estimated at 10,000, who are chiefly employed in the pilchard fishery, ship-building, and the sale of wood. Near it are quarries of fine stone. It is seated on a peninsula in the gulf of Venice, 36 m. S. of Capo d' Istria. Long. 13. 58. E., lat. 45. 11. N.

Rovigo, a town of Austrian Italy, capital of a province or delegation of its name, and the residence of the bishop of Adria, to the decline of which town it owes its present prosperity. It is seated on the Adige, 37 m. S. W. of Venice. Long. 12. 4. E., lat. 45. 8. N.

Roxburghshire, a county of Scotland, sometimes called Teviotdale; bounded N. by Berwickshire, E. and S. by Northumberland and Cumberland, and W. by the shires of Dumfries and Selkirk. It is of an irregular figure, and the greatest extent in every direction is about 30 m. It is divided into 31 parishes, and the number of inhabitants in 1821 was 40,802. The principal rivers are the Tweed, Teviot, and Liddel. The face of the country exhibits a rough appearance of mosses, hills, and mountains, interspersed with a narrow valley, well watered, and fertile in corn. The hills feed great number of sheep and cattle. Some remains are still visible of the Catrail, or Pict-work ditch, a stupendous British work, probably constructed in the fifth century, as a line of defence against the Saxons. It appears to have been a vast fosse, 26 feet broad, with a rampart 8 or 10 feet high on either side. In many parts of the county there are sepulchral tumuli, in which coffins and urns have been found. There are also Druidical circles and other antiquities. The country had its name from the once magnificent city and castle of Roxburg, situate between the Teviot and the Tweed, nearly opposite Kelso; of the city few traces are now evident; and the castle, near the mouth of the Teviot, is entirely a ruin. At this castle, in 1460, James II. of Scotland lost his life, by the bursting of a canon. About 2 m. from the castle, on the banks of the Teviot, is a village called Roxburgh. The present capital of the county is Jedburg.

Roxborough, p.v. Person Co. N. C. 80 m. N. W. Raleigh.

Roxbury, p.t. Norfolk Co. Mass. adjoining Boston. It is properly a suburb of the city, and is connected with it by the neck and the western causeway. The compact part of the town borders on the neck. The whole surface is exceedingly picturesque and abounds with lofty hills, covered with gardens, cultivated fields and elegant villas, delightfully situated. Many of the hills are crowned with the remains of the fortifications thrown up here during the revolution. Pop. 5,249

Russey, a town of France, department of Doubs, 34 m. E. by S. of Besançon.

Russia, a vast empire, partly in Asia and partly in Europe; bounded on the N. by the Frozen Ocean, E. by the Pacific, S. by Great Tartary, the Caspian Sea, Persia, Turkey in Asia, and the Black Sea, and W. by Turkey in Europe, Poland, the Baltic Sea, and Sweden. There were three countries that had the name of Russia.—namely, Red Russia, which formed the S. part of Poland; White Russia, which comprehended the E. part of Lithuania; and Black Russia, which included the governments of Kaluga, Moscow, Tula, Rezan, Volodimir, and Yaroslaf; and hence his imperial majesty takes the title of emperor of all the Russias. This empire, exclusive of the acquisitions from the Turks and from Poland (see Poland), forms a square, whose sides are 2,000 m. each. A country of such vast extent must lie in different climates, and the soil and products must be as different. The most fertile part is near the frontiers of Poland, the inhabitants of which are able to supply their neighbours with corn. The N. part is not only colder, but very marshy, and overrun with forests, inhabited chiefly by wild beasts. The country affords a variety of commodities, which, being of great use to foreigners, produce a considerable annual balance of trade in favor of Russia. The home commodities are chiefly sables, black furs, the skins of black and white foxes, ermines, hyanas, lynxes, bears, panthers, wolves, martins, white hares, &c., red and black juchte or Russian leather (which for colour, smell, and softness, is not equalled in the world), copper, iron, talc, tallow, wax, honey, potash, tar, linseed and train-oil, castor, isinglass, hemp, flax, thread, sail-cloth, calimanco, Siberian musk, soap, feathers, timber, &c. To these commodities may also be added almost all the merchandise of China, India, Persia, Turkey, and some European countries.

This extensive empire is divided into 51 provinces. The principal towns are Petersburg, Moscow, Riga, Odessa, Tula, Wilna, &c. The religion is that of the Greek or Eastern Church, which is governed by a patriarch, under whom are the archbishops and bishops. Every priest is called a papa or pope, and of these there were formerly 4,000 in Moscow alone. They have images in their churches; and the priests give a passport to those that are dying, addressed to St. Nicholas, who is desired to entreat St. Peter to open the gates of heaven, as they have certified that the bearer is a good Christian. A considerable number of the Russians profess the Mahometan religion, and many are still pagans. The inhabitants of the Swedish provinces are Lutherans; and Protestants, as well as Papists, enjoy full liberty of conscience. There are many convents for both sexes, but it has been wisely ordained that no male can enter into a monastic life before he is 30 years of age; and that no female can take the veil till she is 50, and even then not without the licence of the holy synod. The inhabitants in general are robust, well shaped, and of pretty good complexions. They are great eaters, and very fond of brandy. They use bathing, but smoke no tobacco, lest the smoke should dishonour the images of the saints, which they keep in great veneration; however, they take a great deal of snuff, made of the tobacco brought from the Ukraine. The Russians were formerly wholly employed in agriculture, feeding of cattle, hunting and fishing; and he was thought a learned man who could read and write.

Peter the Great undertook to introduce arts and sciences, and in 1724, the first university was founded that ever was in Russia: there is also an academy of sciences at Petersburg, supplied with eminent professors. With respect to dress, a long beard is in high estimation with the people of Russia, notwithstanding the efforts of their monarchs to root it out; and it is only those depending upon government, in the army and navy, who have yet complied with the custom and wish of the court. Those who retain their beards, retain likewise the ancient dress; the long swaddling coat, either of skins, or of coarse cloth lined with skins, in winter, and in summer of cloth only. About their middle they have a sash of any colour; but what they most affect is green or yellow. Their shirts are fashioned as women's; and their necks, being exposed to the cold, become very hard and impenetrable from this practice. Government continue to exert every nerve to compel the subjects to adopt the can procure any place, or favour, from court, upon other conditions than banishing the Asiatic sheep-skin robes. The worn-out veteran retires with a pension, upon the express terms of never again assuming the habit of his fathers. But so jealously attached are the multitude to former manners, and so honorable do they esteem them, that a Russian, dressed in his beard and gown, acquires the greatest respect. The dress of the women is the reverse of that of the men, both in fashion and colour, every part of it being as short and tight as decency will allow, and very gaudy. It resembles that of the Highland women in Scotland. The Russian women are, however, far more rich in their attire; nor is gold lace wanting, any more than the art of painting, to complete the Russian belle. The rising generation are modernizing their antic vestments: the stiff embroidered napkin is supplanted by one of flowing silk; the jacket and petticoat are of muslin, or other fine stuffs; and the plaid is exchanged for a silk or satin cloak, in the cold season lined with fur. The richer class of females wear velvet boots. The dress of the higher ranks is after the French and English fashion; and all must have a covering of fur six months of the year. Thus equipped, the prince and the peasant are drawn in their chaises and sledges through the dreary Scythian winter. The principal rivers are the Dnieper, Volga, Don, Duna or Dwina, and Oby. The sovereigns of Russia are absolute. They were formerly called Grand Dukes, which is still the title of the heir apparent. They afterwards assumed the title of czar, and, in the sequel, that of emperor. The first who bore the title of czar was Basil, son of John Basilides, who freed his country from its subjection to the Tartars, about the year 1470. The title of emperor was first assumed by Peter I., who, by his illustrious actions, justly acquired the surname of Great. He died in 1725, and perhaps no country ever exhibited, in so short a time, the wonders that may be effected by the genius and exertions of one man. Peter the Great, at his accession to the throne, found his subjects of all ranks involved in the grossest ignorance and barbarism; his numerous armies ferocious and undisciplined; and he had neither merchant ships nor men of war; which, added to the remoteness of the situation, rendered the influence of Russia in the politics of Europe of little consideration. Peter civilized his barbarous subjects, disciplined his armies, built cities and fortresses, and created a navy. These national improvements have been still further prosecuted since his time, and Russia now holds a rank among the nations of the world of which human foresight, at the commencement of the 18th century, could have formed no conception.

The population of European Russia is 45,633,203, and of the whole empire 59,263,700. The revenue is 52,000,000 dollars and the national debt 200,000,000. The military force in time of peace is 600,000 men and in war above 1,000,000. Petersburg is the capital of the whole empire.

Sagadahoc, a river of Maine falling into the Androscoggin at Rumford. This name was anciently applied to the eastern part of Maine.

Saginaw Bay, an arm of Lake Huron in Michigan Territory; it receives the waters of a river of the same name.

Saginaw, a town of Michigan Territory on the above river.

Saghalien, or Amour, a river of Chinese Tartary which rises near the Yablonoi mountains, where it is first known by the names of Kerlon and Argun, and forms part of the boundary between Siberia and Eastern Tartary, where it receives the Schilka, and takes its present name. It then takes a circuitous eastern course of 1,850 m during which it receives many other rivers, and enters the sea of Okotsk, opposite the N. part of the island of Saghalien.

Saghalien, or Tchoka, a large island in the sea of Okotsk, separated from the continent by the channel of Tartary on the W., and from the island Jesso by Perouse Strait on the S. It extends from lat. 46. to 54., or not less than 550 m. in length, by about 90 of medial breadth. The centre is mountainous, and well wooded with pine, willow oak, and birch; but the shores are level, and well adapted to agriculture. The natives resemble the Tartars in form, and the upper lip is commonly tattooed blue. The dress is a loose robe of skins, or quilted nankeen, with a girdle. Their huts are of timber, thatched with grass, with a fire-place in the middle. In the S. are found some Japanese articles; and there is a little trade with the Mandshurs and Russians.

Saghalienoula Hotan, a city of Eastern Tartary, in the province of Teiticar. It is rich and populous, and very important on account of its situation, as it secures to the Mandshur Tartars the possession of extensive deserts covered with woods, in which a great number of sables are found. It is seated on the river Saghalien, 200 m. N. N. E. of Teiticar. Long 127. 25. E., lat. 50. 6. N.

St. Simon's, an island of Georgia, at the mouth of the Altamaha.

St. Stephen's, p.t. Washington Co. Alab. on the Tombigbee, at the head of schooner navigation. The houses are mostly built of stone. The neighbouring country is highly fertile.

St. Tammany, a Parish of Louisiana. Pop. 2,864. Covington is the capital; p.t. Mecklenburg Co. Va.

St. Thomas, p.t. Franklin Co. Pa.

** Other names beginning with St. will be found under the second initial.

Saintes, three of the Leeward Carribee Islands in the W. Indies, between Guadaloupe and Dominica. The middle one seems nothing more than a large barren rock, but contributes to form a good harbour. Long. 61. 45. W. lat. 15. 52. N.

Saintes, a town of France, capital of the department of Lower Charente. Here are several monuments of antiquity, of which the most famous are the amphitheatre, the aqueducts, and the triumphal arch on the bridge over the Charente. The castle, built on a rock, is deemed impregnable; and the ancient cathedral has one of the largest steeples in France. It is seated on the Charente, 40 m. S. S. E. of Rochelle. 76 S. W. of Poitiers. Long. 0. 35. W., lat. 45. 45. N.

Saintonge, a former province of France, which now forms the greater part of the department of Lower Charente, and part of that of Charente.

Sal, one of the Cape Verde Islands, 42 m. in circumference, lying to the E. of St. Nicholas. It has its name from the number of salt ponds that from time to time are filled by the sea, where the water crystallizes into a beautiful salt, the chief production of the island. Long. 22. 56. W., lat. 16. 38. N.

Sala, or Salberg, a town of Sweden, in the government of Westeras, near which is a silver mine; seated on a river, 30 m. W. of Upsal, 50 N. W. of Stockholm.

Salado, a river of S. America, which rises in Tucuman, about 60 m. W. of Salta, and flows S. S. E. to the Parana at Santa Fe.

Salamanca, a city of Spain, in Leon, and a bishop's see, with a famous university, consisting of 24 colleges. The structure called the Schools, where the sciences are taught, is very large and curious. There were formerly 7,000 students, when the Spanish monarchy was in a flourishing condition; but at present the number does not exceed 400, who are all clothed like priests. Here are magnificent churches, a large public square, fine fountains, and every thing that can contribute to the beauty and commodiousness of the city. The cathedral is one of the handsomest in Spain; and there are several fine convents, with churches belonging to them, adorned with images, and some with curious pictures. The town is seated partly in a plain and partly on hills, and is surrounded by a wall. The river Thormes, which washes its walls, has a bridge over it 300 paces long, built by the Romans. 120 m. N. W. of Madrid. Long. 5. 48. W. lat. 41. 24. N.

Salamanca de Balcalzar, a town of Mexico, in Yucatan, 140 m. S. E. of Campeachy. Long. 89. 58. W., lat. 17. 55. N.

Salanche, a town of Sardinia, in Savoy with a considerable trade in horses, cattle, cheese, woollen stuffs, iron tools, &c. It is situate in a mountainous district, on the river Arve, 30 m. S. E. of Geneva.

Salanhemen, a town of Sclavonia, where a victory was obtained by the prince of Baden over the Turks, in 1691. It is seated on the Danube, opposite the influx of the Teisse, 20 m. N. W. of Belgrade, 25 S. E. of Peterwaradin.

Salem, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, capital of a district of its name, included in that of Barramaul. It is the residence of the judge, collector, &c., and is seated on a river that flows into the Cavery, 120 m. S. E. of Seringapatam. Long. 78. 15. E., lat. 11. 37. N.

Salem, a county of New Jersey. Pop. 14, 155. Salem is the capital.

Salem, p.t. Essex Co. Mass. This is the second town in the state for population, wealth and trade. It is irregularly built on a peninsula, and has a secure harbour, but without a sufficient depth of water near the shores to allow large ships to approach the wharves, without being lightened. The commerce of the place is very flourishing, and it was one of the first towns of the United States, that entered into the East India trade. In 1828 the shipping owned here amounted to 48,210 tons. The streets of the town are narrow, and the houses generally of wood, yet there are many elegant private mansions, and in the centre of the town is an enclosed common planted with trees. Salem has an Athenaeum with a library of 5,000 volumes; a valuable Museum belonging to the East India Marine Society, 3 banks and 11 churches. It is connected on the north with Beverly by a bridge, and on the south it is separated by the harbour from Marblehead. It is 14 m. N. E. Boston. 24 S. Newburyport. Lat. 42. 34. N. Long. 70, 54 W. Salerno, a fortified sea-port of Naples, capital of Principato Citra, and an archbishop's see, with a castle and a university, principally for medicine. It is seated on a bay of the same name, 27 m. S. E. of Naples. Long. 14. 53. E., lat. 40. 35. N.

Salers, a town of France, department of Cantal, seated among mountains, 9 miles N. of Aurillac.

Salford Lower and Upper, two townships in Montgomery Co. Pa.

Salies, a town in the department of Lower Pyrenees, where are springs from which fine salt is made. 7 m. W. of Orthes.

Salignac, a town in the department of Upper Vienne, 10 m. S. of Limoges.

Salina, p.t. Onondaga Co. N. Y. on Onondaga Lake, 153 m. W. Albany. Pop. 6,929. Here are large establishments for manufacturing salt. The salt water is obtained by sinking wells and boring; it is raised by large metallic pumps, moved by the surplus water of the Erie canal, or by steam conveyed into reservoirs, and passed through pipes to the manufactories. The works principally used in the manufactory of the salt are denominated Blocks, Solar works and Steam works. The Blocks are constructed with boilers containing from 80 to 120 gallons each, and placed in masonry in two parallel lines, having 8 to 20 in each line.

The Salina salt is beautifully white, and fine grained; the whole quantity made in 1830 was 1,430,000 bushels; the average price at the works exclusive of the state duty, was 12 1-2 cents per bushel of 56 pounds. It is commonly packed for sale in barrels of 5 bushels, and is inspected and branded before removal.

Saline, a township of Columbiana Co. Ohio. Pop. 664, and villages in Randolph and Gallatin Cos. Ill.

Saline River, a branch of the Ouachitta in Arkansas, of the Little river of the North in Arkansas, and of Black Lake river in Louisiana.

Saline, a branch of the Ohio in Illinois. On the banks of this stream, about 20 m. from the Ohio are extensive salt works owned by the United States Government.

Salines, a village of St. Genevieve Co. Missouri.

Salins, a town of France, department of Jura, with a strong fort and famous salt works. In the neighbourhood are quarries of jasper, alabaster, and black marble. It is seated in a fertile valley, 29 m. S. of Basancon.

Salisbury, or New Sarum, a city and the capital of Wiltshire, Eng. and a bishop's see. It is situated in a chalky soil, almost surrounded by the Avon, Willey, Nadder, and Bourn; and is rendered particularly clean by a small stream flowing through every street. It has a fine cathedral, the spire of which is the loftiest in the kingdom. The town-hall is a handsome building, and stands in a spacious market-place. Salisbury has manufactures of flannels, linseys, hard ware, and cutlery. 38 m. S. E. of Bath, 81 W. by S. of London.

Salisbury Craig, a hill in Scotland on the E. side of Edinburgh, remarkable for a great precipice of solid rock, about one mile long, and in some parts 100 feet high, which passes with some regularity along its brow.

Salisbury Plain, an open tract in England, which extends from the city of Salisbury, 25 m. E. to Winchester and 25 W. to Shaftsbury, and is in some places, from 35 to 40 m. in breadth. There were so many cross roads on it, and so few houses to take directions from, that Thomas, earl of Pembroke, planted a tree at each mile-stone from Salisbury to Shaftsbury, as a guide for travellers. That part of it about the city is a chalky down; the other parts are noted for feeding numerous and large flocks of sheep. In this plain, besides the famous Stonehenge, are traces of many Roman and British antiquities.

Salvador, St., the capital of Congo, stands on a large mountain, the summit of which forms a plain, 10 m. in circuit, which is well cultivated. The city has 12 churches besides the cathedral; also a large palace, in which the king and a Portuguese bishop reside. 230 m. E. S. E. of Loango. Long. 14. 20. E., lat. 5. 40. S.

Salvador, St., a city of Brazil, capital of a province of Bahia, and an archbishop's see, with several forts. The cathedral is large; but the most superb structure in the city is the grand church of the ex-jesuits, built of European marble, and the internal part exceedingly rich. The houses are two or three stories high, and built of stone. The principal streets are good, but the generality are narrow and dirty. In the royal square are the governor's house, the mint, and the public offices; and along the beach are the custom-house, dock-yard, storehouses, &c. There are many gardens, full of a great variety of fruit-trees, herbs, and flowers. The chief commodities are cotton, sugar, tobacco, coffee, gums, wood, hides, tallow, and train oil. The inhabitants are estimated at upwards of 100,000. It is seated on an eminence, in the bay of All-Saints, 120 m. S. W. of Sergippe. Long. 39. 30. W., lat. 13. 30. S.

Salvatierra, a town of Spain, in Biscay, seated at the foot of Mount St. Adrian, 18 m. E. N. E. of Vittoria.

Salza, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Magdeburg, famous for its salt-works. It is seated near the Elbe, 12 m. S. S. E. of Magdeburg.

Salzburg, a province of the Austrian empire bounded on the N. by Bavaria, E. by Stiria, S. and W. by Tyrol and Bavaria. It is a mountainous country, but pretty fertile, and contains mines of copper, silver, and iron. It was formerly subject to an archbishop, who was a prince of the empire and primate of Germany. In 1802 it was made an electorate and given to the grand duke of Tuscany; incorporated with the Austrian states in 1806; and transferred in 1809 to Bavaria. On the fall of Napoleon it was restored, with the exception of a part of its territory, to Austria. It now comprises an area of 2,800 square miles, with 142,000 inhabitants.

Salzburg, the capital of the above province, has a strong castle on a mountain and two noble palaces. The inhabitants are estimated at 13,000. The cathedral of St. Rupert is very fine, and contains five organs. The university founded in 1623 was converted in 1810 into a lyceum, with a theological and surgical school. Near Salzburg are some very productive salt-works. The French became masters of this city in 1800 and again in 1805. In 1818 upwards of 100 houses were destroyed by fire. It is situate between three mountains, on both sides the river Salza. 46 m. S. by W. of Passau, 155 W. by S. of Vienna. Long. 13. 4. E., lat. 47. 46. N.

Salzungen, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Meiningen, with a castle called Schneppenburg, on an eminence, and several salt-works. It is seated on the Werra, 10 m. S. of Eisenach.

Salzwedel, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the government of Magdeburg, with manufactures of woolen, linen, and cotton; and a considerable trade in corn, cattle, and hops. It is seated on the Jeezte, 72 m. E. of Hamburg.

Samana, an island of the W. Indies, on the N. E. side of that of St. Domingo, from which it is separated on the W. by a narrow channel. It is 33 miles long and 8 broad, and has a town and bay of the same name on the coast. It was taken by the British in 1808. Long. 69. 20. E., lat. 19. 10. N.

Samantraki, or Samontrachi, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, between Stalimeni and the coast of Romania, and to the N. of the isle of Imbro. It is 17 m. in circumference, and has a town of the same name, with a spacious harbour. Long. 25. 17. E., lat. 40. 34. N.

Sanaar, or Tenday, one of the Philippine islands, S. E. of that of Luconia, from which it is separated by a strait. It is 320 miles in circumference, and is full of craggy mountains, among which are fertile valleys.

Samara, a town of Russia, in the government of Simbirsk, seated on the Volga, 95 m. S. S. E. of Simbirsk.

Samarang, a fortified town in the N. E. part of the island of Java, and next to Batavia, the most considerable settlement in the island. It stands at the mouth of a river of the same name, 290 m. E. by S. of Batavia. Long. 110. 38. E., lat. 6. 54. S.

Samaraend, an ancient city of Asia, formerly the capital of Usbec Tartary, in Bokharia, with a castle and a university. It was the birthplace and seat of Tamerlane the Great, and afterwards the residence of a Tartar prince. The city falls short of its ancient splendor, yet is still very large, and fortified with strong bulwarks of earth. The houses are mostly of hardened clay, but some are of stone, from quarries in the neighbourhood. The silk-paper made here is in great request, and it has a considerable trade in excellent fruits. It is seated on the Sogd, 138 m. E. by N. of Bokhara. Long. 65. 15. E., lat. 39. 40. N.

Samarof, a town of Siberia, in the government of Tobolsk, seated on the Irtysh 135 m. N. of Tobolsk.

Samatan, a town of France, department of Gers, with a castle on a mountain; seated on the Save, 6 m. N. by E. of Lombez.

Samba, a sea-port of Terra Firma, in the province Carthagina, 33 m. N. E. of Carthagina. Long. 75. 16. W., lat. 10. 45. N.

Samballas, a multitude of small uninhabited islands, on the N. shore of the isthmus of Darien. Most of them are low, flat, and sandy, covered with a variety of trees, and abound with several kinds of shell fish; some few afford springs of fresh water. Long. 78. 25. W., lat. 9. 26. N.

Sambas, a town of Borneo, near the W. coast, inhabited by pirates, against whom a British force was sent out in 1812 and 1813, which proved completely successful. In its vicinity diamond mines are found. Long. 109. 0. E., lat. 2. 20. N.

Sambor, a town of Austrian Poland, capital of a circle of its name, seated on a large plain, on the Dniester, 46 m. S. W. of Lemberg.

Sambre, a river which rises in Picardy, flows by Landrecy, Maubeuge, Thun, and Charleroy, and joins the Meuse at Namur.

Samiri, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Irac Arabi, on the Tigris, 70 m. N. N. W. of Bagdad.

Sansisat, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in the sangaiate of Marasch, on the Euphrates, 30 m. E. of Marasch.

Sanogitia, a county in the N. W. of Prussian Lithuania, bounded on the N. by Courland, S. by Russia proper, and W. by the Baltic. It is full of forests and high mountains, which feed a great number of cattle, and produce abundance of honey. Here are also very active horses, in high esteem. The inhabitants are clownish, but honest; and they will not allow a young woman to go out in the night without a candle in her hand and two bells at her girdle.

Samos, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, on the coast of Natolia, about 32 m. long and 22 broad, and extremely fertile. It contains two ranges of lofty mountains, between which are rich and well cultivated plains, producing abundance of grain, melons, lentils, kidney beans, and excellent muscadine grapes; also white figs, four times as big as the common sort, but not so well tasted. The silk is very fine, and the honey and wax admirable. The island abounds with partridges, woodcocks, snipes, thrushes, wood pigeons, turtle doves, wheatears, and excellent poultry. It has emery, stone, and iron mines, and most of the soil is of a rusty colour. All the mountains are of white marble. Their bishop resides at Corea. The principal harbour is that of Vati.

Samoyedes, once a numerous and powerful nation of Tartary. They are now dispersed: some of them are found in small detached bodies among the mountains to the W. of Lake Baikal; others are supposed to be within the Chinese frontiers; others are scattered among the deserts which extend along the Frozen Ocean; and some nearly as far to the W. as Archangel. The Samoyedes have a large head, a flat face, high cheek bones, small eyes, a wide mouth, a yellow complexion, straight black hair, and a little or no beard; they still preserve the manners of a pastoral people, and retain the use of moveable habitations, with which they wander from place to place. They neither have, nor appear ever to have had, any kind of a regular government. Their traditional songs mention only certain heroes, who in better times, led their ancestors to battle. These songs form their principal amusements; but the exploits they celebrate, are never likely to be renewed.

Samptown, a village of Middlesex Co. N. J. 13 m. S. W. Elizabethtown.

Sampton, a county of N. Carolina. Pop. 11,768. Clinton is the capital.

San's Creek, p.v. Frederick Co. Maryland.

Samsoe, an island of Denmark, on the E. coast of N. Jutland, 12 m. long and 3 broad, and very fertile. It has a town of the same name, and the inhabitants carry on some commerce in small vessels. Long. 10. 33. E., lat. 56. 2. N.

Samson, St., a town of France, department of Eure, on the Rille, 5 m. N. of Pont Audemer.

Samson, St., a town in the department of Maine-et-Loire, 4 m. N. E. of Angers.

San, a river of Austrian Poland, which rises in the Carpathian Mountains, in Hungary, and falls into the Vistula near Sandomir. It forms part of the boundary between Austrian Galicia and Russian Poland.

Sana, a city of Arabia, capital of Yemen, with a castle on a hill, in which are two palaces. The city, properly so called, is not very populous; for gardens occupy a part of the space within the walls, which are 4 m. in circuit, and contain seven gates. Here are a number of mosques, some of them built by Turkish pachas; also several palaces, 12 public baths, and some large caravanseras. Fruits are very plenteous, particularly grapes; and the exportation of raisins is considerable, one kind of which is without stones. The city stands near the source of a river, which flows S. into the Arabian Sea, and at the foot of Mount Nikkum on which are to be seen the ruins of a castle, said to have been built by Shem. It is 250 m. N. N. E. of Mocha, 490 S. E. of Mecca. Long. 45. 10. E., lat. 15. 24. N.

Sana, or Zana, a town of Peru, capital of a province of its name. It is situate in a valley, fertile in fruit and corn, and adorned with the most beautiful flowers, whence it has been sometimes, called Miroforis. 90 m. N. of Truxillo. Long. 78. 30. W., lat. 40. 35. N.

Sanaashygotta, a flourishing town of Bengal; seated on the Mahanuddy, 165 m. N. of Moorshedabad.

San Blas, a city and sea-port of Mexico, on the Pacific Ocean, at the mouth of the river Santiago. Lat. 21. 33. N.

Sanborntown, p.t. Stafford Co. N. H. 25 m. N. W. Portsmouth. Pop. 2,866.

Sancerra, a town of France, department of Cher, seated on a mountain, near the Loire, 22 m. N. W. of Nevers, 110 N. of Paris.

Sancian, an island of China, on the coast of Quang-tong, 40 m. in circumference, famous for being the burying place of Francis Xavier, whose tomb is to be seen on a small hill.

Sancoins, a town of France, department of Cher, seated on the Argent, 15 m. S. W. of Nevers.

Sanda, or Sanday, one of the Orkney islands, about 12 m. in length, but of an irregular form, and seldom above a m. in breadth. It lies N of that of Stronsay, from which it is separated by a narrow channel. Much kelp is made here in summer, and it feeds many sheep and beeves. On the Start Point is a light-house. Long. 2. 15. W., lat. 59. 21. N.

Sanda, a small island on the W. coast of Scotland, near the Mull of Cantyre, famed for having been the rendezvous of the Danish fleets during their expeditions to the western coasts. On it are the remains of a chapel, dedicated to St. Columba.

Sandbach, a town in Cheshire, with a manufacture of silk. 162 N. N. W. of London.

Sandec, New, a town of Austrian Galicia, capital of a circle of its name which is covered with extensive forests. 44 m. S. W. of Cracow.—6 m. farther N. is Old Sandec, which is now a small place.

Sanders, p.v. Grant Co. Ken. 50 m. N. E. of Frankfort; p.v. Limestone Co. Alab.

Sandford, p.v. Broome Co. N. Y. Pop. 931.

Sandgate, a township of Bennington Co. Vt. Pop. 933.

Sandisfield, p.t. Berkshire Co. Mass. 112 m. S. W. Boston. Pop. 1,655.

Sandhem, a sea-port of Sweden, in the province of Upland, where all vessels to and from Stockholm are examined. 10. m. E. of Stockholm.

Sandiston, a township of Sussex Co. N. Y.

Sando, an island of Japan, 87 m. in circumference, on the N. coast of Nippon; with a town of the same name. Long. 139. 30. E., lat. 38. 35. N.

Sandomir, a strong town of Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, with a castle on a steep rock, and several colleges. It is seated on a hill, on the Vistula, 75 m. E. by N. of Cracow and 112 S. by E. of Warsaw. Long. 22. 0. E., lat. 50. 21. N.

Sandomir, a palatinate of Poland, bounded on one part by the Vistula, on another by the Pilica and the palatinate of Cracow. It contains, according to the territorial division of 1815, 4,700 square m. with 448,000 inhabitants.

Sandomir, the capital of the above palatinate, is seated on the Vistula, 108 m. S. by E. of Warsaw.

Sandown, a village in the Isle of Wight, 2 m. S. of Brading. It stands on a bay of its name, and has a fort erected by Henry VIII., which maintains a small garrison.

Sandogal, a town of Portugal, in Beira, seated on the Coa 12 m. S. S. E. of Guarda.

Sandover, p.v. Abbeville Dis. S. C. 90 m. W. Columbia.

Sandover, a township of Rockingham Co. N. H. 23 m. W. Portsmouth. Pop. 533.

Sandtown, p.v. Kershaw Dis. S. C.

Sandusky, a county of Ohio. Pop. 2,881. Lower Sandusky is the capital.

Sandusky river, a stream of Ohio flowing into the west end of Lake Erie. At its mouth it expands into a bay 20 m. in length and 3 to 4 broad. It has a rapid current and is navigable.

Sandusky city, p.t. Huron Co. Ohio, on Sandusky Bay. Pop. 591. This is one of the chief points of communication between the state of New York and the towns on the Ohio and Mississippi by the way of Lake Erie. It has the best harbour on the American side of the lake, and maintains a constant intercourse with Buffalo and Detroit, by steam-boats. Ship building is carried on to a considerable extent, and the town has already become a place of active trade. A turn-pike is in progress to Columbus.

Sandusky, a township of Richland Co. Ohio Pop. 588.

Sandvliet, a town of Belgium in the province of Antwerp, seated on the Scheldt, 12 m. N. W. of Antwerp.

Sandwich, a town in Kent, Eng. It is one of the cinque-ports, and walled round; but the walls are greatly decayed, and only one of the gates is standing. Its trade is much diminished, the river Stour, on which it is seated, being so choked up with sand as to admit only small vessels. 65 m. E. by S. of London.

Sandwich, p.t. Strafford Co. N. H. near Lake Winipisogee. Pop. 2,743; p.t. Barnstable Co. Mass. on Cape Cod. 54 m. S. E. Boston. Pop. 3,367.

Sandwich Island, an island in the Pacific Ocean, near the W. coast of New Ireland. Long 149. 17. E., lat. 2. 53. S.

Sandwich Island, one of the New Hebrides, in the Pacific Ocean. Long. 168. 33. E., lat. 17. 41. S.

Sandwich Islands, a group of islands in the N. Pacific, discovered by Cook in 1778. They are 11 in number, extending from 18. 54. to 22. 15. N. lat., and from 150. 54. to 160. 24. W. long. They are called by the natives, Owhyee, Mowee, Ranai, Morotoi, Tahoorowa, Woahoo, Atooi, Neeheehou Oneehou, Morotinne, and Takooa; all inhabited except the last two. The climate differs little from that of the W. Indies in the same latitude; but there are no traces of those violent winds which render the stormy months in the W. Indies so dreadful. There is also more rain at the Sandwich isles. The vegetable productions are nearly the same as those of the other islands in this ocean; but the taro root is here of a superior quality. The breadfruit trees are not in such abundance as in the plains of Otaheite, but produce double the quantity of fruit. The sugar canes are of a very unusual size, some of them measuring eleven inches in circumference, and having fourteen feet eatable. There is also a root of a brown colour, shaped like a yam, and from 6 to 10 pounds in weight, the juice of which is an excellent substitute for sugar. The quadrupeds are hogs, dogs, and rats. The fowls are of the common sort; the birds beautiful and numerous, though not various. Goats, pigs, and European seeds were left by captain Cook, but the possession of the goats soon gave rise to a contest between two districts, in which the breed was destroyed. The inhabitants are of the same race with those of the islands S. of the equator; and in their persons, language, and manners, approach nearer to the New Zealanders than to their less distant neighbours, either of the Society or Friendly Islands. They are in general above the middle size, and well made; they walk gracefully, run nimbly, and are capable of bearing great fatigue. Many of both sexes have fine open countenances; and the women, in particular, have good eyes and teeth, with an engaging sweetness and sensibility of look. There is one peculiarity characteristic of every part of the nation, that even in the handsomest faces there is a fulness of the nostril, without any flatness or spreading of the nose. The dress of both men and women nearly resembles those of New Zealand, and both sexes wear necklaces of small variegated shells. Tattooing the body was formerly practised by every colony of this nation. The hands and arms of the women were very neatly marked, and they had the singular custom of tattooing the tip of the tongue. They lived in villages, containing from 100 to 200 houses, built closely together, without any order, and having a winding path between them. Towards the sea they were generally flanked with detached walls intended both for shelter and defence. Some of the houses were from 40 to 50 feet long, and from 20 to 30 broad; others were mere hovels. The food of the lower class still consists principally of fish and vegetables, to which the people of higher rank add the flesh of hogs and dogs. The making of canoes, mats, &c., formed the occupations of the men; the women were employed in manufacturing cloth, and the servants principally engaged in the plantations and fishing. They had various amusements, such as dancing, boxing, wrestling, &c., all of which have now entirely ceased. The bottoms of their canoes are of a single piece of wood, hollowed out to the thickness of an inch, and brought to a point at each end; the sides consist of three boards, each about an inch thick, neatly fitted and lashed to the bottom part. Some of their double canoes measure 70 feet in length, three and a half in depth, and 12 in breadth. The government is monarchical and hereditary. The same system of subordination prevails here as at the other islands: absolute authority on the part of the chiefs, and unremitting submission on the part of the people. So long as idolatry prevailed here, human sacrifices were frequent; not only the commencement of a war, or signal enterprise, but the death of any considerable chief called for a repetition of these horrid rites. From their intercourse with Christians they had renounced idolatry before any missionaries were settled among them; and of late years they have made great advances in civilization. They live in the utmost harmony with each other, and in hospitality to strangers they are not exceeded even by the inhabitants of the Friendly Islands. Their natural capacity seems in no respect below the common standard of mankind.

Sandwich Land, a desolate country in the southern ocean, to the S. E. of the island of Georgia. The mountains are of a vast height, their summits wrapped in clouds, and their bases covered with snow to the water's edge. Thule, the southern extremity of Sandwich Land, seen by Cook in 1775, lies in 27. 45. W. long, and 59. 54. S. lat. This was the greatest S. lat. of land then known, on which account it received the name of Southern Thule.

Sandy, a township of Stark Co. Ohio. Pop. 909. A township in Tuscarawas Co. Ohio. Pop. 765.

Sandy Bay, p.v. Essex Co. Mass. adjoining Gloucester on Cape Ann.

Sandy Creek, a township of Mercer Co. Pa.

Sanford, p.t. York Co. Me. Pop. 2,327.

Sangamon, a river of Illinois, rising in the centre of the state and flowing into the Illinois.

Sangamon, a county of Illinois, on the above river. Pop. 12,960. Springfield is the capital.

Sangerfield, p.t. Oneida Co. N. Y. 15 m. S. Utica. Pop. 2,272.

Sangerville, p.t. Penobscot Co. Me. Pop. 776.

Sangerhausen, a town of Prussian Saxony, in Thuringia, with a castle, seated near the Hartz mountains, 14 m. E. S. E. of Stolberg.

Sanguesa, a town of Spain, in Navarre, 32 m. S. E. of Pamplona.

Sanky, a village in Lancashire, Eng. 2 m. W. of Warrington. It is a place of traffic, being seated near the Mersey, from which it has a canal to the various works in the vicinity of St. Helens.

San Marino, a small republic of Italy. It is enclosed in the states of the Church, among the Apennines, and contains 22 sq. m. and 7,000 inhabitants. The soil produces wine and corn. The capital is San Marino, a small town on the summit of a mountain. This republic is under the protection of the Pope. It has existed for 1,300 years. The government is a mixture of aristocracy and democracy.

Sanore, a district of Hindoostan, lying to the S of Visiapour and N. of Mysore. It was ceded to the Mahrattas in 1792.

Sanore, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, capital of the above district, seated on the left bank of the Toom, 15 m. before its junction with the Nigouden to form the Tungebadra. On the opposite bank is another town called Sanore Bancapour. It is 103 m. N. by W. Chitteldroog and 130 S. by E. of Visiapor.

Sinquhar, a borough of Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, with a ruined castle, once the residence of the Crichton family. It has a trade in coal and manufactures of carpets and cottons. It is seated on the Nith, 27 m. N. W. of Dumfries and 53. S. W. of Edinburgh.

Santaalla, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 24 m. S. of Cordova.

Santa Fe, the chief town of New Mexico, seated on the Rio del Norte. It was founded in the beginning of the 17th century. It is surrounded by a fertile territory, and has lately become a great mart for the trade between the Mexican provinces and the United States. This traffic is carried on by caravans of mules and horse wagons which proceed generally from St. Louis in Missouri. They carry to Santa Fe manufactured goods, tobacco, spirits, &c. and receive specie and bullion in return. Santa Fe is 1,020 m. W. New Orleans, 1,131 N. N. W. Mexico. Lat. 36. 12. N. Long. 104. 52. W. Pop. 4,000.

ceed generally from St. Louis in Missouri. They carry to Santa Fe manufactured goods, tobacco, spirits, &c. and receive specie and bullion in return. Santa Fe is 1,020 m. W. New Orleans, 1,131 N. N. W. Mexico. Lat. 36. 12. N. Long. 104. 52. W. Pop. 4,000.

Santander, a strong sea-port of Spain, in Asturias, capital of a small district of its name, and a bishop's see. The harbour is good, and large enough to contain a numerous fleet, defended by two castles, and a mole that advances into the sea. It is 11 m. N. E. of Santillana. Long. 3. 37. W., lat. 43. 27. N.

Santarem, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, with a citadel on a mountain; seated on the river Tajo, in a country fertile in wheat, wine, and oil, 55 m. N. E. of Lisbon. Long. 8. 20. W., lat. 39. 18. N.

Santee, a river of S. Carolina, the largest and longest in that state. It enters the ocean by two mouths, a little S. of Georgetown. About 120 m. from its mouth it branches into the Congaree and Wateree; the latter, which is the N. branch, bears name of the Catawba River, from this settlement to its source.

Santen, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Cleve; seated on the Rhine, 15 m. S. E. of Cleve.

Santianes, a town of Spain, in Asturias, 17 m. S. S. W. of Oviedo.

Santillana, a town of Spain, seated in a fruitful valley, near the Bay of Biscay, 96 m. E. of Oviedo and 200 N. of Madrid. Long. 3. 58. W., lat. 43. 23. N.

Santorin, the ancient Thera, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, to the S. of Nio. It is in the form of a crescent, 10 m. from N. to S. and from one to four in breadth. Between its two points, to complete the circle, are the small islands of Therasia, and Aspronisi; and within these are three other islands. between which and Santorin is a road for ships; but it affords no anchorage, on account of its depth in some places, and rocky bottom in others. All these islands are of volcanic origin, but the three interior ones are evidently of much later date. Santorin, in proportion to its extent, is the richest and most populous island of the Archipelago. There are two bishops; the one Latin, whose see is Scauro, and the other Greek, whose residence is at Pargos, near the middle of the island. The soil is very dry, and far from fertile; but it produces plenty of barley, cotton, and wine, in which, and the cotton manufactures, its trade consists. Fruit is scarce, except figs, and it has only cistern water. The inhabitants, about 12,000 in number, are almost all Greeks. Scauro is the capital.

Santos, a sea-port of Brazil, on an island, called Amiaz, on the W. side of the entrance into Santos Bay. It is defended by a rampart and two castles. The town of St. Vincent stands on the same island, which is 18 m. in circuit. 10 m. from the sea and 190 S. W. of St. Sebastian Long. 46. 30. W., lat. 24. 15. S.

Saone, a large navigable river of France, which rises in the Vosges Mountains, and, after a course of about 200 m. falls into the Rhone at Lyons.

Saone, Upper, a department of France, including part of the former province of Franche Comte; bounded N. by the department of Vosges, and E. by that of Upper Rhine. It comprises an area of 2,500 square m. with 312,000 inhabitants. The capital is Vesoul.

Saone-et-Loire, a department of France, including part of the former province of Burgundy, bounded by the departments of Jura, Rhone, and Allier, and comprising an area of 3,500 square m. with 471,000 inhabitants. It is named from two rivers, which flow through it in different directions. Macon is the capital.

Saorgio, a town of the Sardinian states, in the county of Nice, situate on the top of a rock, which is nearly enclosed by the Roia and the Bendola. On the opposite side of the Roia is a sharp rock, completely insulated, with an ancient fortress on the summit, and near the town is a strong fort. Saorgio was taken by the French in 1794. 19 m. N. E. of Nice.

Sapiezza, three small islands, and a cape, in the Mediterranean, near the S. coast of the Morea. The largest island was formerly called Sphaacteria, and is famous in ancient history for a victory obtained by the Athenians over the Lacedemonians. Long. 21. 35. E., lat. 36. 50. N.

Saracens, a people celebrated some centuries ago, who came from the deserts of Arabia: sarra in their language signifying a desert. They were the first disciples of Mahomet, and, within 40 years after his death, conquered a great part of Asia, Africa, and Europe. They kept possession of Spain till 1511, when they were expelled. For a long time they maintained a war in the Holy Land against the Western Christians, and at length drove them out of it. There are now no people known by this name; for the descendants of those who conquered Spain are called Moors.

Saragossa, a city of Spain, capital of Arragon, and an archbishop's see, with a university. It is said to have been built by the Phœnicians, and the Romans sent a colony hither in the reign of Augustus, whence it had the name of Cæsarea Augusta, which by corruption has been changed into Saragossa. Before this city was taken by the French, in 1809, there were many magnificent buildings, 17 large churches, and 14 handsome convents, besides others less considerable. The Ebro runs through the city, dividing it into two parts; and on its banks is a handsome quay, which serves for a public walk. The Holy Street is the largest, and so broad that it may be taken for a square. The cathedral is a spacious Gothic building; but the finest church is that of Nuestra Señora del Pilar, and a place of the greatest devotion in Spain. They tell us that the Virgin, while yet living, appeared to St. James, who was preaching the gospel, and left him her image, with a handsome pillar of jasper. This image stands on a marble pillar, with a little Jesus in her arms, ornamented with a profusion of gold and jewels, and illuminated by a multitude of lamps and wax lights. The town-house is a sumptuous structure; and in the hall are the pictures of all the kings of Arragon. Saragossa has no manufactures, and but little trade. It is seated in a large plain (where the Ebro receives two other rivers), which produces all kinds of fruit in great abundance. A victory was obtained here over the French and Spaniards in 1710, but it was abandoned by the allies soon after. Saragossa is also celebrated for the brave defence it made under general Palafox, when besieged by the French in 1808-9. 189 m. N. E. of Madrid. Pop. 41,000.

Saranac, a small river of N. Y. flowing into Lake Champlain at Plattsburg.

Saratof, a government of Russia, lying along both sides of the Wolga, and having on one side the country of Astracan and on the other that of the Don Cossacks. The extent is estimated at 91,000 sq. m. with a pop. not exceeding 1,000,000. It is divided into 12 districts, of which that of the same name is the principal.

Saratof, the capital of the above government, is surrounded by a wall and is neatly built, chiefly of wood. The inhabitants (about 5,000) have a brisk trade in fish, caviar, salt, &c. It is seated on the side of a mountain near the Wolga, 374 m. N. by W. of Astracan. Long. 46. 1. E., lat. 51. 32. N.

Saratoga, a county of N. Y. Pop. 36,616. Ballston is the capital. Also a p.t. in the same Co. 35 m. N. Albany. Pop. 2,461. Here General Burgoyne surrendered his army to Gen. Gates. Oct. 17, 1777.

Saratoga Springs, p.t. Saratoga Co. N. Y. 39 m. N. Albany. Pop. 2,204. In this town and the neighbourhood are situated those mineral springs which draw to this quarter in summer, crowds of visitors from all quarters of the country. The village is located on an elevated spot of ground, surrounded by a productive plain country, and enjoys the advantage of a salubrious air and climate, contributing much to the health and benefit of its numerous visitants. The springs, so justly celebrated for their medicinal virtues, are situated on the margin of a vale, bordering the village on the east, and are a continuation of a chain of springs discovering themselves about 12 m. to the south, in the town of Ballston, and extending easterly, in the form of a crescent, to the Quaker village. In the immediate vicinity are 10 or 12 springs, the principal of which are the Congress, the Hamilton, the High Rock, the Columbian, the Flat Rock, the Washington and the President. About a mile east, are found a cluster of mineral springs which go by the name of the Ten Springs. The Congress Spring is owned by Doct. John Clarke; to whose liberality the public are much indebted for the recent improvements that have been made in the grounds adjoining the fountain, and the purity in which its waters are preserved. This spring was first discovered about 30 years since, issuing from a crevice in the rock, a few feet from its present location. Here it flowed for a number of years, until an attempt to improve the surface around it produced an accidental obstruction of its waters, which afterwards made their appearance at the place where they now flow. It is enclosed by a tube sunk into the earth to the distance of 12 or 14 feet, which secures it from the water of the stream, adjoining to which it is situated. Besides a handsome enclosure and platform for promenading, the proprietor has thrown an awning over the spring for the convenience of visitants.

The High Rock is situated on the west side of the valley, skirting the east side of the village, about half a mile north of the Congress. The rock enclosing this spring is in the shape of a cone, 9 feet in diameter at its base, and 5 feet in height. It seems to have been formed by a concretion of particles thrown up by the water, which formerly flowed over its summit through an aperture of about 12 inches in diameter, regularly diverging from the top of the cone to its base. This spring was visited in the year 1767 by Sir William Johnson, but was known long before by the Indians, who were first led to it, either by accident or by the frequent haunts of beasts, attracted thither by the saline properties of the water. A building was erected near the spot previous to the revolutionary war; afterwards abandoned, and again resumed; since which the usefulness of the water has, from time to time, occasioned frequent settlements within its vicinity.

Between the Red Spring in the upper village, and the Washington in the south part of the lower village, are situated most of the other mineral springs in which this place abounds. At three of the principal springs, the Hamilton, Monroe and Washington, large and convenient bathing houses have been erected, which are the constant resort for pleasure as well as health, during the warm season.

The mineral waters both at Ballston and Saratoga are supposed to be the product of the same great laboratory, and they all possess nearly the same properties, varying only as to the quantity of the different articles held in solution. They are denominated acidulous saline and acidulous chalybeate. Of the former are the Congress, (which holds the first rank), the Hamilton, High Rock and President, at Saratoga; and of the latter are the Columbian, Flat Rock and Washington, at Saratoga, and the Old Spring and United States, at Ballston. The waters contain muriate of soda, hydriodate of soda, carbonate of soda, carbonate of lime, carbonate of magnesia, oxide of iron, and some of them a minute quantity of silica and alumina. Large quantities of carbonic acid gas are also contained in the waters, giving to them a sparkling and lively appearance. The Congress, in particular, the moment it is dipped, contains nearly one half more than its bulk of gas; a quantity unprecedented in any natural waters elsewhere discovered.

The Congress Hall is situated within a few rods of the Congress spring, to which a handsome walk, shaded with trees, has been constructed for the convenience of guests. The space in front of the building is occupied by three apartments, each of which is enclosed by a railing, terminating at the front entrances of the piazza, and each used as a flower garden. The edifice is 200 feet in length, 2 1-2 stories high, with two wings extending back, one 60, and the other about 100 feet. The billiard rooms belonging to the establishment are contained in a building adjoining the north wing. In front of the Hall is a spacious piazza, extending the whole length of the building, 20 feet in width, with a canopy from the roof, supported by 17 massy columns, each of which is gracefully entwined with woodbine. There is also a back piazza, which opens upon a beautiful garden annexed to the establishment, and a small grove of pines, affording both fragrance and shade to their loitering guests. The Congress Hall can accommodate nearly 200 visitors, and is justly ranked among the most elegant establishments in the union.

The United States Hotel, with its gardens and out buildings, occupies a space in the centre of the village of about five acres. The main building is composed of brick, 125 feet long and 34 wide.

The hotel is situated equally distant between the Congress and Flat Rock springs, and commands a view of the whole village, and from its fourth story a distinct view is had of the surrounding country for a number of miles. This establishment can accommodate nearly 200 visitors, and is one of the largest and most splendid edifices in the United States.

The Pavilion is situated in a pleasant part of the village, immediately in front of the Flat Rock spring. The building is constructed of wood, 133 feet in length, with a wing extending back from the centre of the main building, 80 feet. It is 2 1-2 stories high, with the addition of an attic story, which, with the handsome portico in front, sustained by delicate colonnades, renders it, in beauty and proportion, one of the finest models of architecture.

There are many other fine hotels at this place. The town of Ballston Spa in the neighbourhood has also several springs which are much visited.

Saratoga Lake, a lake in the neighbourhood of the above springs, 9 m. long and 3 broad. It affords excellent fish and game.

Sarbruck, a town of Germany, capital of a county of its name, with a handsome palace, and a magnificent Lutheran church. It is seated on the W. side of the Sarre, 14 m. W. of Deux Ponts. Long. 7. 5. E., lat. 49. 16. N.

Sarburg, a town of France, department of Meurthe, 40 m. E. by N. of Nancy.

Sardam, a town of the Netherlands, in N. Holland, where there are vast magazines of timber for ships and naval stores, and a great number of shipwrights. In this town Peter the Great resided for some time, and worked as a shipwright. It is seated on the Wye, 7 m. N. W. of Amsterdam.

Sardinia, an insular and continental kingdom of Southern Europe, containing, besides the island of Sardinia, Piedmont, Savoy, the county of Nice, the duchy of Montferrat, part of that of Milan, and the territory of Genoa. The government is monarchical, with few definite limits, except the privileges granted to particular states. Popery is the religion of the royal family and the state. The reigning family is descended from the ancient counts of Savoy, whose dominions became progressively extended by purchase, conquest, and donation. In the war of the French Revolution, in 1792, the Sardinians were aided by Austrian troops and a British subsidy, but, on Bonaparte assuming the command, the allied forces were speedily overthrown, all the continental dominions of the king of Sardinia were seized and incorporated with the French territory, and afterwards parcelled out anew into departments of the French empire. The changes of 1814 reinstated the king of Sardinia in all his continental dominions, except the duchy of Savoy; and in 1815 this also was restored, and the Genoese territory added to the kingdom.

Sardinia, an island in the Mediterranean, 160 m. from N. to S. and 70 from E. to W., separated from Corsica on the N. by the strait of Bonifacio. This island has been neglected by the government; for, exclusive of the mountains, the chief part of the country may be regarded as waste, but where cultivated it is fertile in corn, wine, oranges, citrons, and olives. Here are mines of silver, lead, sulphur, and alum, and quantities of cheese and salt are made. There are many pestilent marshes here. The frequent wastes abound with wild ducks; but the cattle and sheep are not numerous. The Mouffon or Argali is very common among the mountains of this island

On the coast is a fishery for anchovies and coral. This island has undergone various revolutions: in 1708 it was taken from the Spaniards by the English, and allotted to the emperor of Germany at the peace of Utrecht. The Spaniards recovered it in 1717, but were obliged to abandon it two years after; and, in 1720, it was ceded to the duke of Savoy, as an equivalent for Sicily. In 1794 the inhabitants, rose against their Piedmontese rulers, and caused the viceroy and others to be sent out of the island; but he was afterwards received, on the king pledging himself to assemble the Cortes every 10 years, and confirming all the ancient laws and privileges of the inhabitants. The island continues to be governed as a province of the kingdom to which it gives name.

Sardinia, p.v. Niagara Co. N. Y.; p.t. Erie Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,114.

Sarcelto, p.v. Dublin Co. N. C. 80 m. N. Wilmington.

Sarapta, a settlement of Moravians, in the government of Saratoy in Russia in Europe, founded in 1765. 8 m. S. Tzaritzin.

Sargans, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gall, with a castle on a rock. Near the town are mineral springs and a productive iron mine. It stands on the summit of a hill, near the Rhine, 14 m. N. of Coire and 47 S. E. of Zurich.

Sargel, a sea-port of Algiers, in the province of Mascara, with a castle. Near this town Andrew Doria was defeated by Barbarossa. 25 m. S. S. W. of Algiers. Long. 2. 15. E., lat. 36. 30. N.

Sari, a town of Persia, in Mazanderan, the residence of one of the Persian princes; situate in a country abounding in rice, oranges, cotton, sugar, and silk, 25 m. S. W. of Ferabad.

Sark, a small island in the English Channel, near the coast of France, and about two leagues E. from the island of Guernsey, on which it is dependant.

Sark, a river of Scotland, which rises in the central part of Dumfries-shire, and flows S. into Solway Frith. Its mouth forms a good harbour, at the village of Sarkfoot, E. by S. of Annan.

Sarlat, a town of France, department of Dordogne, 27 m. S. E. of Perigueux.

Sarnon, a town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of Underwalden, near a lake to which it gives name. 9 m. S. of Lucerne. Long. 8. 14. E., lat. 46. 52. N.

Sarno, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, seated near the source of a river of its name, 12 m. N. N. W. of Salerno, and 20 E. S. E. of Naples.

Saros, a strong castle of Hungary, in a county of the same name, seated on the Tariza, at the foot of Mount Krapach, 5 m. N. N. W. of Eperies.

Sarp, or Sarpen, a town of Norway, in the province of Christiansand. Near it is a great cataract, the noise of which may be heard at the distance of 20 m. 10 m. W. S. W. of Frederickstadt.

Sarreal, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, near which are quarries of alabaster, so transparent that it is used for windows. It is seated on the Francoli, 11 m. N. N. Tarragona.

Sarsana, a town of the Sardinian states, in Genoa, with a fortress; near it is a fort in the mountains called Sarsanello. It stands on the river Magra, 5 m. from its mouth, and 45. E. S. E. of Genoa. Long. 9. 58. E., lat. 44. 9. N.

Sarsina, a town, of Italy, in Romagna, on the river Savio, 24 m. W. S. W. of Rimini.

Sart, a town of Asia Minor. It was the ancient Sardis, capital of Lydia; and under the Romans was a large city, but was almost destroyed by an earthquake in the reign of Tiberius. Here are many remains of massive buildings, a mosque (which was formerly a Christian church), and a large caravanserai. The inhabitants are chiefly shepherds, who feed their flocks in the adjacent plains. 35 m. E. N. E. of Smyrna.

Sarte, a department of France, including part of the ancient province of Maine, and containing an area of 2,400 square miles, with 410,000 inhabitants. The climate is mild and salubrious, and the soil in general fertile. The manufactures are hardware, woollens, paper, leather, &c. It takes its name from a river which flows by Mans to Angers, where it joins the Mayenne. The capital is Mans.

Sarvar, a town and fortress of Hungary, at the conflux of the Guntz with the Raad, 40 m. S. S. E. of Presburg.

Sarum, Old, a borough in Wiltshire, Eng. which is now reduced to a single house, and scarcely any thing remains to indicate its former importance, except that it still sends two members to parliament. 2 m. N. of New Sarum, or Salisbury.

Sarum, an extensive district of Hindoostan, in the province of Bahar, and one of the most prosperous in the British territories. It is situate on the N. side of the Ganges, in lat. 26. N.

Sarwerdeu, a town of France, department of Moselle, seated on the Sarre, 33 m. W. N. W. of Metz, and 45 E. N. E. of Nancy.

Sas van Ghent, a town and fortress of Belgium, in Flanders, situate on the Canal from Ghent to the river Scheldt, and fortified with sluices, by means of which the country can be laid under water. It was built by the inhabitants of Ghent, as a bulwark to that city, but was taken in 1664, by the Dutch, from whom the French took it in 1747 and again in 1794. 10 m. N. of Ghent.

Sascram, a town of Hindoostan, in Bahar, seated at the foot of a mountain, near a lake, 64 m. S. E. of Benares and 88 S. W. of Patna.

Saskatchewan, a river of N. America, rising in two large head streams on the E. side of the Rocky mountains and flowing easterly into Lake Winnipeg. It is 800 m. long.

Sassafras, a village of Kent Co. Maryland on a stream of the same name, falling into the Chesapeake.

Sassari, a city of the island of Sardinia, and an archbishop's see, with a castle and a university. Here is a fountain called Rossel, said to be more magnificent than the best at Rome; and in the neighbourhood are mines of gold and silver. It is seated on the river Torres, 7 m. from the sea, and 64 N. of Oristagni. Long. 8. 45. E., lat. 40. 48. N.

Sassuolo, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Modena, with a castle, seated on the Secchia, 10 m. S. W. of Modena.

Satalia, or Antalia, a strong sea-port of Asia Minor, in Caramania. It is divided into three towns, and is so situate that from the harbour the streets appear to rise behind each other like an amphitheatre. The country around is very fertile; and the citrons and oranges are extremely fine. The chief trade is in wool, cotton, goats' hair, agarie, tragacanth, opium, and bees' wax. It is seated on a gulf of the Mediterranean, to which it gives name, 150 m. S. W. of Cogni. Long. 31. 21. E., lat. 37. 1. N.

Satunket, p.v. Suffolk Co. N. Y.

Satgong, or Satagong, a village of Bengal, formerly an important city, in which the European traders in Bengal had their factories. It is seated on a creek of Hoogly River, 4 m. N. W. of Hoogly.

Satimangalam, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a large stone fort, and a considerable temple. It has manufactures of cotton cloths, and a great trade to Seringapatam. In its vicinity the troops of Tippoo Sultan maintained a severe conflict with the British. It is 30 m. W. of Bhawanikudal and 75 S. S. E. of Seringapatam.

Satriano, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, 8 m. S. of Squillace.

Sattarak, a town and fort of Hindoostan, in the province of Visiapour, the residence of the Maharratta prince, who was restored by the British in 1818. It is situate near the source of the Kistnah. 50 m. S. of Poonah and 77 W. of Visiapour.

Satteagal, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Coimbatore, with a fort of considerable size. It stands near the Cavery, which 3 m. below forms and island 9 m. in length, with noble cataracts on each side. 36 m. S. E. of Seringapatam.

Sauceda, a town of Mexico, in New Biscay, on a river of the same name, which joins the Nassas to form the Palmas. 100 m. N. N. W. of Durango. Long. 105. 36. W., lat. 25. 18. N.

Sauccon, Upper, a township in Lehigh Co. Pa.

Sauccon, Lower, a township in Northampton Co. Pa.

Saugatuck, a river of Connecticut, flowing S. in to Long Island Sound near Fairfield.

Saugerties, p.t. Ulster Co. N. Y. on the Hudson, 49 m. S. Albany. Pop. 3,750.

Saugur Island, an island of Hindoostan, well known as a place of pilgrimage. The temple of Kapila Muni, on the S. coast of Gunga Saugur, is under the alternate charge of a Byragee and Sunysee, who levy a tax of 4 annas on each person visiting the temple, the amount of which is divided among 5 different establishments of Ramanandi Byragees in the vicinity of Calcutta. In 1802, during the administration of the marquis Wellesley, the horrid practice of infanticide was abolished on this island. It is seated at the mouth of the Hoogly River, 100 m. from Calcutta.

Saugus, p.t. Essex Co. Mass. 7 m. N. E. Boston, adjoining Lynn. Pop. 960.

Saugen, or Saulgau, a town of Germany, in Wurtemberg, 5 m. S. W. of Buchau.

Saulieu, a town of France, department Cote d'Or, noted as the birth-place of the celebrated Vauban. Here was anciently a college of the Druids; and in a wood, where they performed their sacrifices, the ruins of a druidical temple are still visible. It is seated on an eminence, 38 m. W. of Dijon and 46 S. E. of Auxerre.

Saumur, a town, of France in the department of Maine-et-Loire, with an ancient castle, and manufactures of woolen, linen, and leather, and some trade in wine and brandy. Here is a famous bridge over the Loire, consisting of 12 elliptical arches, each 60 feet in diameter. 27 m. S. E. of Angers and 38 W. S. W. of Tours.

Saunders's Island, one of the Society Islands, in the S. Pacific, called by the natives Tapoamanoo. It is about 6 m. long, and has in the centre a mountain of considerable height. Long. 150. 40. W., lat. 17. 30. S.

Sauguait, p.v. Oneida Co. N. Y.

Saurungpour, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Malwa, 42 m. N. N. E. of Indore and 43 N. E. of Ougein.

Sauve, a town of France, department of Gard, on the Vidoure, 12 m. S. W. of Alais.

Sauveterre, a town in the department of Lower Pyrenees, with an old ruined castle, seated on the Gave d'Oleron 20 m. W. N. W. of Pau.

Sauveterre, a town in the department of Aveyron 15 m. S. W. Rodez.

Sauveterre, a town in the department of Gironde, 26 m. S. E. of Bordeaux.

Sava, a town of Persia, in Irak, surrounded by walls of earth. The environs produce exquisite fruit, particularly pomegranates and almonds, and a considerable quantity of rice and cotton. 60 m. S. of Casbin and 110 E. of Amadan. Long. 52. 15. E., lat. 34. 30. N.

Savage Isle, an island in the S. Pacific, about 35 m. in circumference, discovered by Cook in 1774. It received this name from the rude and inhospitable behaviour of the inhabitants, who were stout well made men, naked except round the waists; some of them had their face, breast, and thighs painted. It is of a round form, and covered with trees, shrubs, &c. Long. 169. 30. W., lat. 19. 2. S.

Savannah, a river of the United States, which separates Georgia from S. Carolina. It is navigable for boats of 100 feet keel from Augusta to Savannah, and thence for large vessels to its entrance into the Atlantic Ocean, at Tybee Island.

Savannah, city, in Chatham Co. Georgia, the largest city in the state, is situated on the western bank of the river of that name, 17 m. from the sea, with a good ship navigation for that distance. The site of Savannah is elevated and pleasant. The streets are wide and regular, with spacious squares and many handsome edifices. It contains 10 churches, a theatre, an exchange, a hospital and a public library. It is an unhealthy place in summer, yet enjoys considerable commerce, and is the great mart for the cotton plants of the whole state. It is 118 m. S. W. Charleston: 123 S. E. Augusta: 160 E. S. E. Milledgeville and 658 S. W. Washington. Lat. 32. 8. N., long. 81. 10. W. Pop. 7,308.

Savanna la Mar, a town of Jamaica, in Cornwallis county, with a good anchorage for large vessels. In 1780 great part of the town was destroyed by a dreadful hurricane and inundation of the sea; but it has since been rebuilt. It is seated on the S. side of the island. Long. 73. 6. W., lat. 18. 12. N.

Savatopoli. See Sebastopoli.

Sare, a river of the Austrian empire, which has its source on the N. W. confines of Carniola, runs E. through that country, separates Sclavonia from Croatia, Bosnia, and Servia and joins the Danube near Belgrade.

Savenay, a town of France, department of Lower Loire, 18 m. N. W. of Nantes.

Sarendraog, a strong fortress of Hindoostan, in Mysore, situate on the top of a vast rock, rising half a mile in perpendicular height, from a base of above 8 m in circumference, and divided at the summit by a chasm that forms it into two hills: these having each its particular defences, serve as two citadels, capable of being maintained independently of the lower works, which are also wonderfully strong. Notwithstanding this, it was taken by a the English, in 1791, after a siege of seven days. 85 m. N. E. of Seringapatam.

Saverdun, a town of France, department of Arriège, with a castle, seated on the Arriège, 25 m. S. S. E. of Toulouse.

Saverne, a town in the department of Lower Rhine, seated at the foot of Mont Vosges, in a country which produces plenty of wine, 20 m. W. N. W. of Strasburg.

Savigliano, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, with a rich Benedictine abbey. Here the French were repulsed in 1799 by the Austrians. It is seated in a fertile plain, on the river Maira, 30 m. S. of Turin.

Sacolax, a district of the Russian empire, in the province of Finland, 200 m. long and 100 broad, consisting mostly of woods, lakes, rivers, and morasses, and abounding in elks and reindeers. The inhabitants are thinly dispersed, and subsist by cultivating buck-wheat, breeding cattle, hunting, fishing, and making wooden ware. Kuopia is the capital.

Savana, a strong town of the Sardinian states, in the territory of Genoa, with a citadel on a rock, and several fine churches. The Genoese, fearing that it would hurt their trade, ruined the harbour, and rendered it unfit for large vessels. It was taken by the king of Sardinia in 1746, restored to the republic of Genoa in 1748, and taken in 1795 by the French, who surrendered to the Austrians in 1800, through famine. In 1800 and 1801 it was the residence of the pope, during his dispute with Bonaparte. By the congress of Vienna it was ceded, with the whole Genoese territory, to the king of Sardinia. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 24 m. W. S. W. of Genoa. Long. 8. 20. E., lat. 44. 18. N.

Savoniers, a town of France department of Indre-et-Loire, near which are caverns famous for their petrifications. 8 m. S. W. of Tours.

Savoy, a duchy of Europe, belonging to the kingdom of Sardinia, 85 m. long and 67 broad; bounded on the N. by the lake of Geneva, which separates it from Switzerland; E. by the Alps, which divide it from Vallais and Piedmont; S. by the latter and France; and W. by France. The air is cold on account of high mountains, which are almost always covered with snow; but the valleys are fertile in corn and wine, and many of the mountains abound with pastures that feed a great number of cattle. The principal rivers are the Isere, Arc, and Arve. The Savoyards, from the nature of their country, are generally very poor; and great numbers of them seek a livelihood in France, England, and other countries, in quality of showmen, &c. The French subdued this country in 1792, and made it a department of France, by the name of Mont Blanc, which was confirmed to them by the treaty of Paris in 1814; but in 1815 it was restored to Sardinia, with the exception of a small district (the commune of St. Julian) ceded to the Swiss canton of Geneva. Chamberry is the capital.

Savoy, p.t. Berkshire Co. Mass. 120 N. W. Boston. Pop. 928.

Savu, an island in the Indian Ocean, to which the Dutch have a kind of exclusive trade, having entered into an agreement with the rajahs that their subjects shall trade with no other ships. It is 26 m. in length, and very fertile. Long. 122. 30. E., lat. 10. 35. S.

Sawapt, p.v. Westchester Co. N. Y.

Sax, a town of Spain, in Murcia, near which is an ancient citadel on the summit of a rock. It is seated on the Elda, on the borders of Valencia, 25 m. W. N. W. of Alicante and 42 N. N. E. of Murcia.

Sax, a town and district of Switzerland, in the canton of St Gall, with a castle, 14 m. S. of Rheineck.

Saxenburg, a town of the Austrian states, in Carinthia, near which are three forts and a strong pass. It is situate on the Drave, 38 m. W. of Clagenfurt. Long. 13. 12. E., lat. 46. 44. N.

Saxmundham, a town of Suffolk, Eng. seated on a hill, 20 m. N. E. of Ipswich and 89 of London.

Saxony, in its comprehensive sense, denotes a vast tract of country in the N. of Germany, extending from the Weser on the W. to the frontier of Poland on the E.; but in consequence of the territorial changes to which it has been subjected, the name has been used with great latitude of signification. The division of Germany into circles took place towards the close of the 15th century, and the large tract of country known vaguely by the name of Saxony was formed into three circles, Westphalia, Upper Saxony, and Lower Saxony. Upper Saxony comprised the electorates of Saxony and Brandenburg, the duchy of Pomerania, and a number of small principalities, forming an extent of about 43,000 sq. m. with nearly 4,000,000 of inhabitants. It was bounded E. by Poland, Silesia, and Lusatia, and S. by Bohemia and Franconia. Lower Saxony was bounded N. by the duchy of Sleswick and the Baltic, and W. by Westphalia and the Rhine. It comprised the electorate of Hanover, the duchies of Brunswick Mecklenburg, and Holstein, the free towns of Hamburg, Bremen, and Lubeck, with a number of small states, forming an extent of 26,000 sq. m. In 1806 the distinction of circles was finally abolished, and the names of Upper and Lower Saxony are now of use only for the elucidation of history.

Saxony, a modern kingdom of Europe, situated towards the N. E. of Germany, and bounded S. by Bohemia and N. by the Prussian states. It comprises an area of 7,188 square m. with 1,237,000 inhabitants; but, previously to 1814, it was of much greater extent, having been greatly reduced by the congress of Vienna. No part of Europe, in the same latitude, enjoys a milder climate. The mountainous districts in the S. contain extensive forests, which are kept up with care, as the chief supply of fuel for the mines. In the southern and mountainous parts of Saxony the valleys only are well cultivated; but in the level districts in the N., particularly the circles of Meissen and Leipzig, tillage is general: the products are wheat, barley, oats, and other grain; also some tobacco and hops. Hogs and sheep are very numerous, and the greatest care has been bestowed on the Merino rams, first imported about 1768. Few countries equal Saxony in mineral riches, and in none has this department of natural history been more fully described. The principal are silver, iron, copper, lead, limestone, coal, arsenic, cobalt, antimony, zinc, alum, &c. The principal rivers are the Elbe, the two Elsters, the two Muldas, and the Quiss. The manufactures are of considerable extent, and consist principally of linen, cotton, silk, and leather. The machinery used, though inferior to the English, has of late years been much improved. The position of Saxony is not favorable for commercial intercourse. The export consist of wool (which has long been considered the best in Germany), minerals, linen yarn, woollens, and lace. The imports are silk, flax, cotton, coffee, sugar, wine, and, in certain seasons, corn. A great majority of the inhabitants are Lutherans, but the reigning family have been Catholics since 1697. The institutions for education are numerous and well conducted, and the lower classes are generally taught to read and write. In no country of equal extent is the number of printing and book establishments so great. Of the universities, Halle now belongs to Prussia, but Leipzig remains to Saxony, and retains all its former reputation.

Saxony was for many centuries an electorate, but in consequence of the occupancy of Prussia by Bonaparte, in 1806, it was formed into a kingdom. This change of title was not, however accompanied by any extension of prerogative, the sovereign continuing to share the legislative functions with the states, and imposing no tax without their concurrence. The states are divided into two houses, viz. the prelates and noble in one, and the country gentry and deputies of the towns in the other. The higher offices of administration are entrusted to a cabinet council, a board of finance, a military board, a high court of appeal for judicial questions, and an upper consistory for ecclesiastical. The country is divided into the circles of Meissen, Leipzig, Erzgebirg, and Vogtland, with part of Merseburg, and Upper Lusatia. Each circle has a court of justice, and offices for the transaction of provincial business; and the peasantry are here in the enjoyment of complete personal freedom. The king, as a member of the Germanic confederation, has the fourth rank in the smaller, and four votes at the larger assembly. The army amounts to 12,000 men; the revenue exceeds £1,000,000 sterling; and the national debt is £3,700,000.

The Saxons are first mentioned in history by Ptolemy, who describes them about the year 160 as a rude tribe, inhabiting Holstein and part of Jutland. Soon after they appear to have advanced to the S. and W., acquiring an extension of territory. In the 5th century, on the migration of a part of the Franks into Gaul, the Saxons acquired a farther extension of territory, viz. the country now forming the grand duchy of Oldenburg, with part of Hanover and Prussian Westphalia. When the Britons were forsaken by their Roman defenders, they applied and obtained assistance from the Saxons, against the Scots and Picts. After maintaining, during many years a firm resistance to the arms of Charlemagne, the Saxons were at last obliged to submit to his conditions, which involved the payment of an annual tribute and their conversion to Christianity. The title of duke of Saxony was conferred on Wittikind, their chief, whose family, after ruling some time, was succeeded by that of Billung, and afterwards by a branch of that of Guelf, which ruled in Bavaria. The electoral dignity was subsequently conferred on the Witteburg line of the house of Ascania, and, on its extinction, on the margraves of Meissen, with the title of elector. The first elector, surnamed Frederick the Warlike, began his reign in 1422; he was the founder of the university of Leipzig.

The next memorable event in the history of Saxony was the reformation, in the beginning of the 16th century. The prince did not openly espouse the cause of Luther, but, by protecting him from persecution, he contributed much to the establishment of his doctrines. His successor John Frederick, styled 'the magnanimous,' being defeated by Charles V., was stripped of his states and dignity, which the emperor conferred on Maurice, margrave of Meissen, the cousin of the elector, and the ancestor of the present house of Saxony. Maurice, putting himself at the head of the Protestant interest, proved a full match for the artful Charles, who in 1552 had almost fallen into his hands, and was compelled to sign the convention of Passau, since considered the bulwark of the religious freedom of Germany. The Saxons took an active part in the thirty years' war, which terminated in the peace of Westphalia in 1648. In 1697 the temptation of the crown of Poland, vacant by the death of Sobieski, induced the reigning elector, Augustus I., to profess himself a Catholic, a change which, however, did not prosper. The Swedes under Charles XII. not only conquered Poland, but invaded Saxony, bringing great distress upon the country until 1708, when relief was obtained by the march of Charles into Russia, and its disastrous issue; after which the crown of Poland was resumed by Augustus.

In the war of 1740, between Prussia and Austria, Saxony remained neutral. In that of 1756 the elector was tempted to take a part by the flattering promises of Austria; but, instead of an accession of territory, his dominions were ravaged, and many of his subjects ruined in this dreadful contest. In the war against France no decided part was taken by Saxony until 1806, when the elector sent all his troops to the field, in support of the king of Prussia, whose subsequent overthrow enabled Bonaparte to attach the Saxons to his cause. The title of elector was changed to that of king. Prussian Poland was afterwards added to the Saxon dominions, and in 1809 was nearly doubled by cessions obtained from Austria.

But these acquisitions, disproportioned to the inherent strength of Saxony, led, as formerly, to disastrous results. The Russians re-occupied Poland in the beginning of 1813, and, joined by the Prussians, made Saxony the scene of the great continental struggle against Bonaparte. The battles of Lutzen and Bautzen, the attacks on Dresden, and the decisive engagements at Leipzig, were followed by the retreat of Bonaparte to the Rhine; and his too faithful ally, the king of Saxony, was deprived of the government of his territories. By the decision of the congress of Vienna the northern and eastern part, containing no fewer than 850,000 inhabitants, was separated from the kingdom, and transferred to Prussia. The king of Saxony protested against this dismemberment, but, dreading insurrection and bloodshed, he at length acquiesced. Dresden is the capital.

Saxony, a province of the Prussian states, comprising almost the whole of the cessions made by the king of Saxony at the congress of Vienna, and the principalities lying to the N. of the duchy of Anhalt, and to the W. of the rivers Elbe and Havel. It contains an area of 9,830 square miles, with more than 1,000,000 of inhabitants, and is divided into the governments of Magdeburg, Merseburg, and Erfurt. The surface is in general level, but the soil varies greatly, being in some places dry and sandy, and in others a heavy loam. The principal productions are corn, hemp, flax, and chicory. The inhabitants, except in the small district called Eichsfeld, are almost all Protestants, and are in general active and industrious. Magdeburg is the chief town.

Saxton's River, a river in the state of Vermont, which joins the Connecticut at Westminster.

Saybrook, p.t. Middlesex Co. Conn. at the mouth of Connecticut River. It is one of the oldest towns in the state and was settled in 1639 by Lord Brooks. It is 34 m. E. New Haven. 45 S. E. Hartford. Pop. 4,980.

Saycock, one of the islands of Japan, divided from Nippon by a narrow channel. The Dutch factors are permitted to reside in the little island of Disma, which is to the W. side of this. Long. 132. 28. E., lat. 34. 0. N.

Sayn, a town and castle of the Prussian states, in the duchy of Nassau, which gives name to a small county. 6 m. N. of Coblentz and 50 N. W. of Frankfort.

Schaffhausen, a canton of Switzerland, 15 m. long and 10 broad with 32,000 inhabitants. The reformation was introduced here in 1529 and the religion is Calvinism. The principal article of trade is wine, and the manufactures are inconsiderable.

Schaffhausen, a town of Switzerland, capital of the above canton, is seated on the Rhine, and owes its origin to the interruption of the navigation of that river by the cataract at Lauffen; huts being at first constructed for the convenience of unloading the merchandise from the boats, which by degrees increased to a large town. Though a frontier town, it has no garrison, and the fortifications are weak. The Rhine, which is here nearly 400 feet wide, is crossed by a kind of hanging bridge; the road not passing over the arch, but being suspended from it, and almost level. It was burnt by the French, when they evacuated the town, after being defeated by the Austrians, in 1799; but has since been rebuilt, nearly in the same state as before. 22 m. N. by E. of Zurich and 39 E. of Basel. Long. 3. 41. E., lat. 47. 39. N.

Scalholt, a town of Iceland, and a bishop's see, with a college. Long. 22. 20. W., lat. 64. 40. N. Scaghticoke, p.t. Rensselaer Co. N. Y. on the Hudson, 11 m. above Troy. Pop. 3,002.

Schenectady, a county of New York bordering on the Mohawk. Pop. 12,334. Schenectady is the capital.

Schenectady, city, capital of the above county, stands on the Mohawk, 15 m. N. W. Albany, and was formerly a flourishing place, but the opening of the great Erie Canal has diverted the trade in another direction. Here is a bridge across the Mohawk. Union College at this place was founded in 1795. It has 10 instructors and 205 students. The libraries have 13,600 volumes. It has 3 vacations in April, July and December of 13 weeks. Commencement is in July. The spot where this town stands was on the head quarters of the Mohawk tribe of Indians. Schenectady was settled at an early period, and in 1690 a body of French and Indians from Canada captured and burnt the town, and slaughtered most of the inhabitants. The Mohawk and Hudson Railroad is designed to extend from this place to Albany, it was begun in 1830. Pop. of Schenectady, 4,258

Schening, a town of Sweden, in E. Gothland, seated in a fertile country, 10 m. S. E. of Wastena.

Schwebach, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Anspach, with numerous manufactures. It stands on a river of the same name, which flows into the Rednitz, 12 m. E. by N. of Anspach.

Schwalbach, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau, frequented for its mineral waters; seated on the river Aa, 32 m. W. of Frankfort.

Schwabenburg, a town of Westphalia, in the county of Lippe, 18 m. N. E. of Paderborn.

Schwaan, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg on the river Warnow, 10 m. N. of Gustrow.

Schwandorf, a town of Bavaria, in the principality of Neuburg, on the river Nab, 21 m. N. of Ratisbon.

Schwanenstadt, a town of Austria, near which the French gained a decisive victory over the Austrians in 1800. It is seated on the Ager, 25 m. S. W. of Lintz.

Schwartzburg, an ancient castle of Germany, which gives name to a district belonging to the house of Saxony. The district is divided into two parts, the upper and lower, each bearing the name of county. Rudolstadt and Sondershausen are the chief towns. The castle is seated on the Schwartz, 7 m. S. W. of Rudolstadt.

Schwartzenberg, a town of Bavarian Franconia in a principality of the same name, with a castle seated on the Lec, 24 m. E. S. E. of Wurtzburg.

Schwartzenberg, a town of Saxony, with wire and lace manufactures. In the vicinity are iron forges, and mines of tin and lead. It is 10 m. W. S. W. of Annaberg.

Schwartzenberg, a town of Switzerland, capital of a bailiwick, in the canton of Bern. 10 m. S. E. of Freiburg, and 17 S. S. W. of Bern.

Schweibitz, a town of Austria, in Tyrol, with a silver and copper mine; seated on the river Inn, 14 m. N. E. of Inspruck.

Schwedt, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, with a magnificent castle, seated on the Oder, 24 m. S. E. of Prenzio.

Schweidnitz, a strong city of Prussia, in the government of Reichenbach, capital of a principality of the same name, with a castle. Half of the magistrates are Catholics, but most of the inhabitants are Protestants, who have a church without the town, as also a public school. All kinds of leather, particularly cordovan, are manufactured here. In 1716 the greatest part of this city was burnt down, but it was rebuilt in an elegant manner. The Austrians took it, in 1757, from the Prussians, who retook it the next year. In 1807 it surrendered to the French. It is seated on an eminence on the river Weistritz, 22 m. S. W. of Breslau. Long. 16. 32. E., lat. 50. 44. N.

Schweinfurt, a town of Bavarian Franconia, with a palace. The inhabitants carry on a large trade in wine, woollen and linen cloth, goose quills, and feathers. This town was taken by the French in 1796, and was given to Bavaria in 1802. It is seated on the Maine, 21 m. N. E. of Wurtzburg. Long. 10. 35. E., lat. 50. 6. N.

Schweinitz, a town of Saxony, on the river Elster, 14 m. S. E. of Wittenberg.

Schweinsberg, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Cassel, on the river Ohm, 7 m. S. E. of Marburg.

Schweitz, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the W. by the Waldstadter See, S. by the canton of Uri, E. by that of Glarus, and N. by those of Zurich and Zug. This canton, with that of Uri and Underwalden, threw off the yoke of Austria in 1308, and formed a perpetual alliance in 1315, which was the grand foundation of the Helvetic confederacy. The name of Schweitzerland, Switzerland, or Switzerland, originally comprehended only these three cantons, but was afterwards extended to all Helvetia. The whole country, being rugged and mountainous, consists chiefly of pasture, raises little corn, and has no wine; but this soil, naturally barren, has been improved by the natives to a great degree of fertility. The inhabitants made a spirited but unavailing resistance to the French in 1798, and they suffered severely in 1799, when Switzerland became the scene of military operations. The Roman Catholic is the established religion.

Schweitz, the capital of the above canton, is seated near the Waldstadter See, on the slope of a hill, at the bottom of two high and rugged rocks, called the Schweitzer Haaken. The church is a large magnificent building. 18 m. E. by S of Lucern. Long. 8. 31. E., lat. 46. 56. N.

Schweitz, Lake of. See Waldstadter See.

Schweim, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Mark, near which are some medicinal springs. 26 m. E. of Dusseldorf.

Schwerin, a town of Germany, capital of the grand duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. It is divided into four parts; namely, Schwerin, the New Town, the island of Schelf, and the Moor, which are all nearly encircled by a beautiful lake. The principal church is a fine Gothic pile, with a lofty spire. The ducal palace and gardens are on an island in the lake, and have a communication with the town by a drawbridge. This town was taken by the Prussians in 1759, and in 1806 it was occupied by the French. It is 35 m. W. S. W. of Gustrow. Long. 11. 33. E., lat. 53. 56. N.

Schwerte, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Mark, on the river Roer, 7 m. S. of Dortmund.

Schwetz, a town and castle of Prussia, on the Vistula, 7 m. N. of Culm.

Schweibussen, a town of Prussia, in the principality of Glogau. It has a castle, a Catholic parish church, a Protestant church, good cloth manufactures, and fertile gardens and vineyards. 13 m. N. of Zulichau. Long. 15.47. E. lat. 52. 21. N.

Schwinburg, a town of Denmark, on the S. coast of the island of Funen, with the best harbour in the island, and manufactures of woolen and linen. 23 m. S. S. E. of Odensee. Long. 10. 30. E., lat. 55. 10. N.

Sciati, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, 14 m. N. E. of Negropont, and almost at the entrance of the gulf of Salonichi. It is 10 m. long and 4 broad. Long. 23. 40. E., lat. 39. 24. N.

Scienceville, p.v. Greene Co. N. Y. 59 m. W. Albany.

Sciglio, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, on the side of a rocky promontory, called Seylla, or Cape Sciglio. In the terrible earthquake of 1783 the sea was thrown furiously 3 m. inland, and on its return swept off about 2,500 of the inhabitants, with the prince of Sciglio, who hoping to find security, were then on the Seylla Strand, or in boats near the shore. It is 10 m. N. by E. of Reggio.

Scilly, a cluster of numerous isles and rocks, at the entrance of the English and Bristol channels, lying almost 10 leagues W. of the Lands-end, in Cornwall. Of these only five or six are inhabited. They are a resort for sea-fowl, and feed many sheep and rabbits. The inhabitants principally subsist by fishing, burning kelp, and acting as pilots. The chief isle is that of St. Mary, nearly 3 m. long and 2 broad, which has a good port, is well fortified, and contains more inhabitants than all the rest put together. In this isle, and in two or three others, are various antiquities, particularly the remains of a temple of the Druids, and ancient sepulchres. On that of St. Agnes is a light-house, which, with the gallery, is 51 feet high, and is a very fine column. At the outermost extremity of the isle of St. Martin is a seamark, built with rock-stone, and as conspicuous by day as the light-house on St. Agnes, but not so high and large. The Scilly rocks have been fatal to numbers of ships entering the English channel. One of the most disastrous events of this kind happened in 1707, when three men of war perished, with admiral sir Cloudesley Shovel and all their crew. St. Agnes light-house is in Long. 6. 19. W., lat. 49.54. N.

Scilly, a group of isles or shoals, in the S. Pacific, discovered by captain Wallis in 1767, and described as extremely dangerous. Long. 155 30. W., lat. 16. 30. S.

Scio, anciently called Chios, an island of the Archipelago, near the coast of Nátolia, 36 m. long and 13 broad. It is a mountainous country; but fruits of various kinds grow in the fields, such as oranges, citrons, olives, mulberries, and pomegranates, interspersed with myrtles and jasmynes. The wine of Scio, so celebrated by the ancients, is still in great esteem; but the island is now principally distinguished by the profitable culture of mastich: it has also some trade in silk, cotton, and figs. Besides the town of the same name, it contains 68 villages, all inhabited by Greeks; and those which furnish mastich are the most rich and populous. In 1822 this island became the scene of unparalleled barbarity, in consequence of the Greek population having joined their countrymen in their struggle for liberty. The Turks landed several thousand men, and massacred all the men, and the male children above 12 years of age; the women and young children were sent into captivity, and the male children were circumcised in token of conversion to Mahomedism. From the 11th of April to the 10th of May the number of slain amounted to 25,000, and that of captives to 30,000. Scio is still held by the Turks.

Scio, the capital of the above island, and a bishop's see. It is the best built town in the Archipelago; the houses being commodious, some of them terraced, and others covered with tiles. The castle, an old citadel built by the Genoese, is now in ruins. The harbour is a rendezvous for ships that go to, or come from Constantinople: it will contain 80 vessels, is protected by a low mole and has two light-houses. It stands on the E. side of the island, 67 m. W. of Smyrna. Long. 26. 2. E., lat. 38. 28. N.

Scioto, a river of Ohio rising in the central part of the State and flowing southerly into the Ohio at Portsmouth. The Ohio canal passes along its banks.

Scioto, a county of Ohio lying on the above river. Pop. 8,730. Portsmouth is the capital.

Scioto, townships in Ross, Delaware, Pickaway, Jackson and Madison Cos. Ohio.

Scioto Salt Works, a tract of land reserved by the United States in Jackson Co. Ohio. 23 m. S. E. Chillicothe. Considerable salt is made here.

Scipio, p.t. Cayuga Co. N. Y. on Cayuga Lake. 174 m. W. Albany. Pop. 2,691. a township of Meigs Co. Ohio.

Sciro, or Sciros, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, to the W. of Metelin, 15 m. long and 8 broad. The country is mountainous, but has no mines. The vines make the beauty of the island, and the wine is excellent; nor do the natives want corn or wood. It contains only the village and convent of St. George, both built on a conical rock, 10 m. from the harbour of St. George. Long. 24. 38. E., lat. 38. 54. N.

Slavonia, a province of Austria, situate between the rivers Drave and Danube on the N. and the Save on the S.; bounded on the W. by Croatia, from which to the conflux of the Save with the Danube it is 150 m. in length, and from 45 to 25 in breadth. A chain of lofty mountains, covered with forests, extends from E. to W. nearly through its whole length; but the remainder is a fertile level country, producing wheat, barley, maize, flax, hemp, madder, and a variety of fruits. The eastern part is called Ratzia, and the inhabitants Rascians. These form a particular nation, and are of the Greek church. The ancient Sclavonia contained many large countries: some have extended it from the Adriatic to the Euxine Sea, and say that it had its name from the Sclavi, a Scythian nation, who conquered Greece and this country in the reign of emperor Justinian. The language of Sclavonia is the mother of four others; namely, those of Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, and Russia.

Scone, or Scoon, a village of Scotland, in Perthshire, noted for an ancient palace where the kings of Scotland used to be crowned. It is situate on the E. side of the river Tay, a mile N. of Perth.

Scopelo, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, 10 m. long and 5 broad. It is very fertile, produces plenty of good wine, and contains 12,000 inhabitants. 5 m. S. of Sciati. Long. 23. 50. E., lat. 39. 24. N.

Scopia, a town of Macedonia, and an archbishop's see; seated on the Vardar, over which is a bridge of 12 arches, 150 m. N. N. W. of Salonica. Long. 21. 45. E., lat. 42. 40. N.

Scotch Plains, p.v. Essex Co. N. Y. 42 m. N. E. Trenton.

Sconondoa, p.v. Oneida Co. N. Y. 112 m. W. Albany.

Scotland, the northern of the two kingdoms into which the island of Great Britain was formerly divided. It is bounded on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean, N. by the North Sea, E. by the German Ocean, S. E. by England, and S. by the Irish Sea. To Scotland also appertain the islands on its western coast called the Hebrides, or Western Islands, and those to the N. E. called the Orkney and Shetland Islands. From N. to S. it extends 270 miles, and its greatest breadth is 150, but in some places not above 30, and no part is distant above 40 miles from the coast. It contains about 18,000,000 of acres, and the number of inhabitants in 1821 was 2,093,456. Scotland is divided into two districts, the Highlands and the Lowlands; the former comprising the mounand of Mull, in a S. W. direction; the second, or middle division, is bounded on the S. by the friths of Forth and Clyde, and the great canal by which they are united; and on the S. side of this boundary is the third, or S. division. The N. division is chiefly an assemblage of vast dreary mountains; not, however, without some fertile valleys on the northern and eastern shores. The middle division is traversed in different directions, by several ranges of mountains; and though cultivation here is also found chiefly on the eastern shore, yet of this division, as well as of the former, the arable land bears a small proportion to the mountainous and barren tracts. The S. division has a great resemblance to England, and, with respect both to the general aspect of the country and to the progress of cultivation, exhibits every kind of rural variety. The civil division of the country is into 33 counties. The principal rivers are the Spey, Don, Tay, Tweed, Clyde, Forth, Northern Dee, Esk, Annan, Nith, and Southern Dee. The lochs, or lakes, are numerous, and some of them extensive. The climate is very various. The northern extremity, which is in the same latitude with some parts of Norway, is extremely cold; but, from its insular situation, the fronts are far from being so intense as in parts of the continent equally as far to the N. Its W. coast is subject to frequent rains in the summer, and to sudden changes of weather. In many places on the eastern shore, and in the whole S. division, the climate is not inferior to the N. part of England. The products of the country are grain, flax, woods of oak and fir, coal, lead, iron, freestone, limestone, slate, the most beautiful marble, fine rock-crystals, pearls, variegated pebbles, &c. It feeds vast herds of cattle and flocks of sheep, which are much valued for the delicacy of their flesh; and the fleece of the latter emulates the finest Spanish wool. On the high grounds the cattle are very diminutive; but in many parts of country the horses and cows are not excelled in size and beauty by those of the English breed. The stag, or red deer which has disappeared from about every other part of Europe is still found in this country. Among the other wild animals are the roe, fox, badger, otter, hedge-hog, rabbit, weasel, mole, and other small quadrupeds. Among the feathered race are the capercaillie, or the cock of the wood, the eagle, falcon, partridge, quail, snipe, plover, black game, &c. Scotland was governed by a king before the Romans visited England, and continued an independent kingdom till the death of the English queen Elizabeth, when James VI., of Scotland, the most immediate heir, was called to the throne of England, and constantly resided in the latter: he and his successors called themselves kings of England and Scotland, and each country having a separate parliament, till the year 1707, in the reign of queen Anne, when both kingdoms were united under the general name of Great Britain. The counties send one member each to parliament, except Bute and Caithness, Cromarty and Nairn, Kinross and Clackmannan, which send members in conjunction; so that the counties send 30 members, which, with 15 sent by the cities and boroughs, make the 45 commoners sent by Scotland; and 16 peers are elected to represent the nobility. The established religion is the presbyterian, which is modelled principally after the Calvinistical plan settled at Geneva, and on a general principle of an equality of ecclesiastical authority among its presbyters.

tainous part to the N. and N. W., and the latter the more level district on the E. and S. E. But nature seems to have pointed out three grand divisions in Scotland. The first, or N. division, is formed by a chain of lakes, which cross the country, from the frith of Murray to the isl-

There are few Roman Catholics, but the Protestant Dissenters are numerous. With respect to the trade and manufactures, they are noticed under the respective cities and towns. Edinburgh is the capital.

Scull Shoals, p.v. Greene Co. Geo.

Scutari, a strong town of Albania, and a bishop's see, seated on the lake Zeta, near its outlet, the river Boiana, 70 m. N. by W. of Durazzo. Long. 19. 16. E., lat. 42. 33. N.

Scutari, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, which may be considered as a suburb of Constantinople. It stands on the strait opposite that city; and presents itself in the form of an amphitheatre, affording a very picturesque view from the mixture of trees, houses, mosques, and minarets. This town serves as an emporium and a rendezvous to the caravans of Asia, and has some manufactures of silk and cotton stuffs. Here are extensive burying grounds, shaded with lofty cypresses. The rich Turks of Constantinople prefer being interred here; for they consider Asia as a land belonging to the true believers, and believe that the land of Europe will one day fall into the hands of Christians, and be trodden on by infidels. Scutari is 1 m. E. of Constantinople.

Scylla, a rock near the entrance of the strait of Messina, on the coast of Calabria, opposite the celebrated Charybdis. It forms a small promontory in the narrowest part of the strait, and is the famous Scylla of the ancient poets. It does not come up to the formidable description given by Homer, nor is the passage so narrow and difficult as he represents it; but it is probable that its breadth is greatly increased since his time. The rock is nearly 200 feet high; and on the side of it stands the town of Sciglio, whence the promontory is sometimes called Cape Sciglio.

Seabrook, p.t. Rockingham Co. N. H. on the coast, 7 m. N. Newburyport. Pop. 1,096.

Seaford, a borough in Sussex, Eng. and one of the Cinque Ports. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in fishing, but of late it has been much resorted to as a bathing place. It is seated near the English Channel, 10 m. S. S. E. of Lewis and 61 S. by E. of London.

Seaford, p.v. Sussex Co. N. J.

Seal, a township of Pike Co. Ohio. Pop. 1,173.

Searsmont, a township of Waldo, Co. Me. Pop. 1,151.

Searsville, p.v. Sullivan Co. N. Y. 103 m. S. W. Albany.

Seaton, a town of Scotland, in Haddingtonshire. Here is a ruinous palace, in which Mary queen of Scots occasionally kept her court, after her return from France. It has a considerable trade in salt and coal, and is situate on the frith of Forth, 9 m. E. of Edinburg.

Sebago Pond, in Cumberland Co. Me. 18 m. N. W. Portland. It is 12 m. long and is connected with the sea at Portland by a canal.

Sebastia, a town of Palestine, the remains of the ancient city of Samaria, 34 m. N. N. E. of Jerusalem.

Sebastian. St., a sea-port of Spain, in Biscay, seated at the foot of a mountain, on the top of which is a strong citadel. The harbour is secured by two moles, and a narrow entrance for the ships. The town is surrounded by a double wall, and fortified towards the sea. It carries on a great trade, particularly in iron, steel, and wool. St. Sebastian was taken by the French in 1719, in 1794, and again in 1808. On the 31st of August, 1813, it was taken by storm, by the allied forces, under general Graham, after a short siege, during which it sustained a most heavy bombardment, which laid nearly the whole town in ruins. It has since been rebuilt. 50 m. E. of Bilbao and 50 N. W. of Pamplona. Long. 1. 56. W., lat. 43. 24. N.

Sebastian. St., the capital of the province of Rio Janeiro, and of all Brazil, with a citadel on a hill, and numerous forts. The city stands 4 m. W. of the harbour, and behind it are high hills crowned with woods, convents, houses, and churches. It is 3 m. in circumference; the streets are straight and most of them narrow, intersecting each other at right angles; and the houses, in general, are of stone, and two stories high. The churches are very fine, and there is more religious parade in this city than in almost any other town in Europe. The harbour is very commodious, with a narrow entrance defended by two forts. Here are manufactures of sugar, rum, and cochineal. The different mechanics carry on their business in distinct parts of the town; particular streets being set apart for particular trades. On the S. side of a spacious square is a palace; and there are several other squares, in which are fountains, supplied with water by an aqueduct, of considerable length, brought over a valley by a double tier of arches. The mint is one of the finest buildings existing, and furnished with all the conveniences necessary for coining with the greatest expedition. A Benedictine convent and a fort are on the extreme point, jutting into the harbour, opposite which is Serpent Island, where there are a dock-yard, magazines and naval store-houses. In another part of the harbour, at a place called Val Longo, are warehouses, formerly appropriated for the reception, and preparation for sale, of slaves imported from Africa. St. Sebastian is a bishop's see, and seated near the mouth of the Rio Janeiro, in the Atlantic. Long. 42. 44 W., lat. 22. 54. S.

Sebastian. Cape St., a cape at the N. W. extremity of Madagascar. Long. 46. 25. E., lat. 12 30. S.

Sebasticook, a river of Maine, flowing into the Kennebec from the east.

Sebastopol, a sea-port of Russia, and the first maritime town of the Crimea. It has one of the finest and most secure harbours in the world, capable of containing all the Russian fleets; and it is the chief station of the Black Sea fleet. The city is built on the side of a hill, which divides two of its fine basins. The old Tartar houses are small and ill-built; but along the quay are some new buildings in a good taste. It stands on part of the site of the ancient Greek city of Cherson, where was the famous temple of Diana Taurica; and considerable ruins of them are yet discoverable. 40 m. S. S. W. of Sympheropol and 350 N. E. of Constantinople. Long. 33. 22. E., lat. 44. 25. N.

Sebec, a township of Penobscot Co. Me. Pop. 203.

Sebenico, a strong seaport of Austrian Dalmatia, and a bishop's see, with four citadels. The cathedral is a magnificent fabric, and its roof is composed of large flat pieces of marble. The Turks have often attempted in vain to take this town. It is seated near the mouth of the Cherca, in the gulf of Venice, 30 m. S. E. of Zara. Long. 16. 46. E., lat. 44. 17. N.

Schauburg, a town of France, department of Nord, 5 m. E. of Valenciennes.

Scha. See Zebu.

Sechura, a town of Peru, inhabited by Indians, who are chiefly employed in fishing or driving of mules. Here commences a sandy desert, which extends southward about 80 m. The town stands on a river of the same name, 3 m. from the ocean and 180 N. N. W. of Truxillo. Long. 81. 10. E., lat. 5. 55. S.

Seckau, a town of the Austrian states, in Styria, seated on the Gayle, 9 m. N. of Judenburg.

Seckingen, a town of Baden, the smallest of the Four Forest Towns. Here is a convent of Noble nuns, whose abbess was a princess of the empire. It is seated on an isle, formed by the Rhine, over which is a bridge, 11 m. W. of Basel.

Seckington, a village in Warwickshire, Eng. famous for a battle, in 757, between Cuthred, king of the W. Saxons, and Ethelbald, king of the Mercians. On the N. side of its church are the ruins of a fort, and near it an artificial hill, 45 feet high. 3 m. N. E. of Tamworth.

Second Moon, a township of Beaver Co. Pa.

Sedan, a strong town of France, capital of the department of Ardennes, and formerly the seat of a Protestant university. It is deemed one of the keys of the country and has a strong castle, an arsenal, a canal foundry, and a manufacture of fine cloth. The famous marshal Turenne was born in the castle. Sedan is seated on the Meuse, 30 m. S. E. of Charlemont. Long. 4. 58. E., lat. 49. 42. N.

Sedasinagar, a town of Hindoostan, the most northern on the coast of Canara. It is seated on the N. side of the estuary of a river, which enters into a deep bay, sheltered by three islands, one of them fortified, and the entrance defended by a fort on a lofty hill. 3 m. up the river, on the opposite bank, are the remains of Carwar, formerly a noted place of European commerce, but totally ruined during the reign of Tippo Sultan. 50 m. F. of Goa and 95 N. N. W. of Kundapura. Long. 74. 15. E. lat. 14. 51. N.

Seelberg, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. with a manufacture of cotton. 10 m. E. of Kendal, 269 N. W. of London.

Seelow, a town of Brandenburg, 10 m. S. W. of Custrin.

Seelysburgh, p.v. Cattaraugus Co. N. Y. 310. m. W. Albany.

Seer, a seaport of Arabia, capital of a principality in the province of Oman. It has a good harbour, and the navy of the prince is one of the most considerable in the gulf of Persia. 108 m. W. S. W. of Julfar. Long. 54. 58. E., lat. 25. 10. N.

Seesen, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Brunswick, 14 m. S. W. of Goslar.

Seez, a town of France, department of Orne, and a bishop's see. It is seated in a fine country, near the source of the Orne, 14 m. N. of Alençon and 120 W. by S. of Paris. Long. 0. 11. E., lat. 48. 36. N.

Segeberg, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Holstein, with a castle on a high mountain, consisting of Lime-stone, large quantities of which are carried to Hamburg and Lubec. It is seated on the Trave, 15 m. W. N. W. of Lubec.

Segedin, a strong town of Hungary, with a castle, taken from the Turks in 1686. It is seated near the Teisse, opposite the influx of the Maros, 105 m. S. S. E. of Pest. Long. 20. 35. E., lat. 46. 18. N.

Segeswar, a town of Transylvania, capital of a county of the same name. It is built in the form of an amphitheatre, on the side of a hill, near the river Kodel, 47 m. N. of Hermanstadt. Lon. 24. 55. E., lat. 47. 4. N.

Segna, a seaport of Morlachia, capital of Hungarian Dalmatia, with a fort. It was declared a free port, and erected into a bishopric, in 1785. It is seated on the gulf of Venice, 100 m. N. W. of Spoleto. Long. 15. 21. E., lat. 45. 22. N.

Segni, a town of the papal states, in Campagna di Roma, and a bishop's see. Organs are said to have been invented here. It is seated on a mountain, 30 m. S. E. of Rome.

Sego, a city of Negroland, the capital of Bambarra. It consists of four walled towns, two on each side the river Niger, which contain about 30,000 inhabitants; and, as the Moors form a considerable proportion, their mosques appear in every quarter. The houses are built of clay, of a square form, with flat roofs; some of them have two stories, and many of them are white-washed. The current money consists of cowries. 290 m. W. S. W. of Tombuctoo. Long. 2. 46. W., lat. 14. 15. N.

Segorbe, a town of Spain, in Valencia, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the side of a hill, by the river Morvedro, 35 m. N. by W. of Valencia.

Segovia, a city of Spain, in Old Castile, capital of a province of its name, and a bishop's see, with a castle. It stands on two hills, and the valley by which they are separated, on the S. W. side of the Erasma; and is surrounded by a strong wall, flanked with towers and ramparts. It is supplied with water by a Roman aqueduct, 3,000 paces in length, supported by 177 arches of a prodigious height, in two rows, one above the other. Here the best cloth in Spain is made. The other branches of industry are dyeing, and the manufacture of paper, pottery, and lead. The cathedral stands on one side of the great square, and is one of the handsomest Gothic structures in Spain, besides which there are 27 other churches. The castle is seated in the highest part of the town and has 16 rooms richly adorned with tapestry, and ornaments of marble and porphyry. The royal chapel is magnificently gilded, and embellished with very fine paintings. The mint, for some years the only one in Spain, is surrounded by the river, on which are mills, employed in coining. Segovia was occupied by the French in 1808, but was evacuated in 1813. 43 m. N. N. W. of Madrid. Lon. 4. 12. W., lat 41. 3. N.

Segovia, Avo, a town of Mexico, in Nicaragua, seated near the source of a river of its name, which flows into the Carribean Sea, 90 m. N. by E. of Leon. Long. 87. 5. W., lat. 13. 45. N.

Segovia, New, a town in the isle of Luconia and a bishop's see, with a fort. It is seated at the N. end of the island, near the mouth of the Cagayan, 245 m. N. of Manila. Long. 120. 56. E., lat. 18. 30. N.

Segura, a river of Spain, which rises in the Pyrenees, and runs S. W. through Catalonia, passing by Puicerda, Urgel, Belaguer, and Lerida, to Mequinenza, where it joins the Ebro.

Segre, a town of France, department of Maine-et-Loire, 20 m. N. W. of Angers.

Segura, a river of Spain, which rises in the mountains of Segura, in Murcia, crosses that province and the S. part of Valencia, and enters the Mediterranean at Guardaman.

Segura, a town of Spain, in Arragon, 35 m. S. E. of Calatajuz and 38 N. of Teruel.

Segura, a town of Portugal, in Beira, with a fort on a mountain. It stands on the frontiers of Spain, 15 m. W. N. W. of Alcantara and 35 E. S. E. of Castel Branco.

Schauranpouur, a town of Hindoostan, in Dehli, capital of a district of the same name, between the Jumna and the Ganges. 86 m. N. by W. of Dehli. Long. 77. 15. E., lat. 30. 4. N.

Seidenberg, a town of the Prussian States, in Upper Lusatia, with manufactures of cloth and stockings 8 m. S. S. E. of Gorlitz.

Seiks, a powerful nation in the N. W. part of Hindoostan, consisting of several small independent states, that have formed a kind of federal union. The founder of their sect was Nanock, who lived in the beginning of the 16th century; and they are the descendants of his disciples; the word seiks, in the Sanscrit language, signifying disciples. They are in general strong and well made, accustomed from their infancy to the most laborious life, and hardest fare. A pair of long blue drawers, and a kind of chequered plad, a part of which is fastened round the waist, and the other thrown over the shoulder, form their clothing and equipage. The chiefs are distinguished by wearing some heavy gold bracelets on their wrists, and sometimes a chain of the same metal round their turbans; and by being mounted on better horses; otherwise no distinction appears among them. The government of the Seiks is a military aristocracy. Their army consists almost entirely of horse, of which a Seik will boast they can bring 300,000 into the field; and it is supposed they might bring 200,000. They have commonly two, some of them three horses each. They indeed consider this animal as necessary to their existence; and while it is customary with them to make merry on the demise of one of the brethren, they mourn for the death of a horse. The Seiks are tolerant in matters of faith, and require only a conformity in certain signs and ceremonies; but, unlike the Hindoos, they admit proselytes, although those from among the Mahometans are not much esteemed. Their capital is Lahore.

Seil, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, 3 m. long and 2 broad, separated from the mainland by a narrow strait, over which is a bridge.

Seine, a river of France, which rises in the department of Cote d'Or, flows by Troyes, Melun Paris, and Rouen, and enters the English Channel at Havre de Grace.

Seine, a department of France, the smallest, but by no means the least important, in the kingdom. It has an area of about 260 sq. m. with 780,000 inhabitants. The surface is level, and the soil fertile in corn and wine; also fruits and vegetables for the supply of Paris, which is the capital.

Seine-Infere, a department of France, including the N. E. part of Normandy. It has an area of 2,500 sq. m. with 660,000 inhabitants. Rouen is the capital.

Seine-et-Marne, a department of France, including the western part of Champagne. It has an area of 2,360 sq. m., with 310,000 inhabitants. Melun is the capital.

Seine-et-Oise, a department of France, comprising the district of Paris, under the name of department of the Seine. Exclusive of that district it contains 2,200 sq. m., with 440,000 inhabitants Versailles is the capital.

Seinsheim, a town of Bavarian Franconia, in a lordship of the same name, with a castle, 18 m. S. E. of Wurtzburg.

Seissen, a town of France, department of Gers, 9 m. S. of Auch.

Seistan, an extensive and independent province of Persia, bounded on the N. by Korasan, and Balck, E. by Candahar, and Sablestan, S. by Mackeran, S. W. by Kerhan, and W. by Covhestan and Farsistan. The country is in general mountainous. The valleys are the only habitable parts; for the plains are barren, and covered with fine sand, which is sometimes raised by whirlwinds to such a degree as to overwhelm whole caravans. Dooshak is the capital.

Selam, a town of Mexico, in Yucatan, near the sea-coast, 45 m. N. W. of Merida.

Selbosoe, a town of Norway, in the province of Drontheim, 18 m. S. E. of Drontheim.

Selby, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. It is the birth-place of Henry I., whose father, William the Conqueror built an abbey here: a canal passes from this place to Leeds, and large ships are built here. It is seated on the Ouse, over which is one of the completest timber bridges in the kingdom. 14 m. S. of York and 177 N. by W. of London.

Selenginsk, a fortified town of Russia, in the government of Irkutsk, with a fort and 3,000 inhabitants. The adjacent country is mountainous, but yields a great quantity of rhubarb. It stands on the Selenga, at the influx of the Chilok, 160 m. S. E. of Irkutsk. Long. 107. 28. E., lat. 51. 16. N.

Selenti, a town of Asia Minor, in Caramania, at the mouth of a river of the same name, 50 m. W. S. W. of Selesk.

Selesk, anciently Seleucia, a town of Caramania, seated on a river, 5 m. from the sea and 80 S. S. E. of Cogni. Long. 34. 36. E., lat. 36. 40 N.

Seligenstadt, a town of Germany, in Hesse Darmstadt, with a Benedictine abbey, seated at the conflux of the Gerspentsz with the Maine, 14 m. E. of Frankfort.

Selbria, a town of Romania, and an archbishop's see, formerly a large place, but now much decayed. It is seated on the sea of Marmora, 35 m. W. of Constantinople.

Selinsgrove, p. v. Northumberland Co. Va.

Selkirk, a borough of Scotland, the capital of Selkirkshire. It is seated on the Ettrick, 30 m. S. S. E. of Edinburgh.

Selkirkshire, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. E. by Edinburghshire. Pop. 6,637.

Sellersville, p. v. Bucks Co. Va.

Selles, a town of France, in the department of Loire-et-Cher, on the river Cher, 10 m. S. W. of Romorentin.

Selma, p. v. Dallas Co. Alab.

Seltz, a town in the department of Lower Rhine, seated on the Rhine, 25 m. N. N. E. of Strasburg.

Seltzer, or Lower Seltzer, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau celebrated for a spring of mineral water, which is exported in great quantities. It is situate on the Emsbach, 30 m. E. of Coblentz.

Semawat, a town of Asiatic Turkey, Irac Arabi, seated on the Euphrates, where a toll is collected. 120 m. N. W. of Bassora. Long. 46. 15. E., lat. 32. 2. N.

Sembow-gheon, a town of Birman, from which is the principal road through the western hills into Arracan. To this place all Bengal articles of merchandise imported by way of Arracan are brought, and here embarked on the Irrawaddi. It stands 3 m. W. of that river, and 30 S. by W. of Pagahm.

Semegonda, a town of Negroland, in the country of Wangara, seated on a lake formed by a branch of the Nile, 330 m. S. S. W. of Bornou. Long. 21. 30. E., lat. 14. 58. N.

Semendria, a town of European Turkey, in Servia, with a citadel, seated on the Danube, 20 m. S. E. of Belgrade.

Semennud, a town of Egypt, on the E. branch of the Nile, 8 m. S. S. W. of Mansoura and 53 N. of Cairo.

Semigalia, a duchy of European Russia, about 100 m. long and 20 broad, forming the E. part of the government of Courland. Mittau is the capital.

Seminari, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, with an abbey belonging to the united Greek church. It suffered severely from an earthquake in 1783, but now contains 2,000 inhabitants. 22 m. N. E. of Reggio.

Seminoles, a tribe of Indians in Florida, about 5,000 in number. They were formerly much more numerous, but having committed hostilities upon the American settlements in their neighbourhood in 1818, they were attacked by the United States troops, and completely subdued: since which they have never been formidable.

Senlen, a town of Slavonia, on the S. side of the Danube, the principal place for carrying on the transit trade between Turkey and Slavonia. 4 m. W. of Belgrade.

Sempach, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucerne, celebrated for the battle in 1386, which established the liberty of the Swiss, and in which Leopold, duke of Austria, was defeated and slain. It is seated on a small lake of the same name, 7 m. N. W. Lucerne.

Sempronius, p. t. Cayuga Co. N. Y. 159 m. W. Albany. Pop. 5,705.

Semur en Auxois, a town of France, department of Cote d'or, with a castle on a rock. It has a manufacture of cloth, and is seated on the Armancon, 34 m. W. by N. of Dijon and 135 S. E. of Paris.

Semur-en-Briennois, a town in the department of Saone-et-Loire, 33 m. W. by S. of Macon and 45 S. of Autun.

Seni, or Marzali, a town of Mocaranga, on the river Zambeze, where the Portuguese have a factory. Long 35. 3. E., lat. 7. 40. S.

Seneca, a lake and river of N. Y., in Onondaga county. The lake is 30 m. long and 2 broad, and lies N. and S. between those of Canandaigua and Cayuga. At the N. end is the town of Geneva, and on the E. side, between it and Cayuga Lake, are the military townships of Romulus, Ovid, Hector, and Ulysses. The river rises to the W. of Geneva, passes by that town, and receives the waters of the lake. It afterwards receives the waters of Cayuga Lake, Canandaigua Creek, and Salt Lake, and then flows into Onondago River.

Seneca, a county of N. Y. bounded by Lakes Ontario, Seneca and Cayuga. Pop. 21,031. Ovid is the capital; a county of Ohio. Pop. 5,148 Tiffin is the capital.

Seneca, a township of Ontario Co. N. Y. Pop. 6,161; townships in Morgan and Monroe Cos Ohio.

Senecaville, p. v. Guernsey Co. Ohio.

Seneff, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Hainault, noted for a battle gained by the French over the prince of Orange in 1674. 4 m. S. Nivelles.

Senegal, a large river which rises in the mountains of Kong, in Negroland, and flows W. on the Southern confines of Zahara, into the Atlantic Ocean, 120 m. N. E. of Cape Verd. Its course is flexuous, till it arrives within 6 m. of the sea, when it takes a sudden turn to the S., and for 75 m. is separated from the sea only by a ridge of sand. Its mouth, not more than half a league over, is incommoded by a shifting bar, which renders the passage difficult and dangerous. Wild animals are numerous along its banks, particularly leopards who lie in wait near the river to surprise the smaller animals resorting to the banks to drink.

Senegal, a country on the W. coast of Africa, lying on a river of the same name. See Fauli. The French have a fort and a factory in an island at the mouth of the river, and are masters of the gum trade. It is called Fort Louis, was taken by the English in 1758, confirmed to them by the peace of 1763, but restored in 1653 Long 16. 31. W., lat. 15. 53. N.

Senez, a town of France, department of Lower Alps, seated in a rough barren country, 15 m. S. S. E. of Digne.

Senftenberg, a town of Prussia, in Lower Lusatia, with a castle, 35 m. N. N. E. of Meissen.

Sentlis, a town of France, department of Oise, seated on the river Donette, and almost surrounded by a forest, 20 m. N. W. of Meaux and 27 N. E. of Paris.

Sennaar, a kingdom of Eastern Africa, bounded E. and S. by Abyssinia, W. by Darfur, and N. by Dongola and the independent districts of Nubia. The Nile flows through this immense plain above a mile broad, full to the very brim, but never overflowing. For several miles from the banks of this river, the soil is of very remarkable fertility; and at the time of the rains, about the end of August and beginning of September, the country assumes a most delightful appearance, resembling the pleasantest parts of Holland. Soon after the rains cease, the dhourra ripens, the leaves turn yellow and rot, the lakes putrefy, smell, and are full of vermin; all the beauty disappears, and bare scorched Nubia returns, with all its terrors of poisonous winds and moving sands, glowing and ventilated with sultry blasts. The trade consists chiefly in exchanging the various productions of interior Africa with those of Egypt and Arabia. The kingdom of Sennaar was founded by a body of Shilluk negroes in 1504. The government is despotic, but the king may lawfully be put to death whenever the chief officers decide that his reign is no longer a public benefit.

Sennaar, a city of Nubia, and capital of the above kingdom, is 5 m. in circumference, and very populous. The houses are chiefly of one story, with flat roofs; but the suburbs contain only cottages covered with reeds. The palace is surrounded by high walls, and is a confused heap of buildings. The heats are almost insupportable in the day-time, except in the rainy season, at which time the air is unwholesome. The commodities are elephants' teeth, tamarinds, civet, tobacco, and gold dust. There is a market near the palace, where slaves are sold; the females sit on one side, and the males on another; the Egyptians buy great numbers of them every year. The merchandise required here consists of spices, paper, brass, hardware, glass beads, and a black drug which is used to colour the eyebrows. The women of quality have slight garments of silk, and wear rings of various metals on their hair, arms, legs, ears, and fingers. Women of a low rank, and girls, have cloths wrapped round them from the waist to the knees. The men go almost naked. Sennaar is seated on an eminence, near the river Nile. Long. 33. 0. E., lat. 13. 4. N.

Sens, a town of France, department of Yonne, and an archbishop's see, with a handsome Gothic cathedral. Several ecclesiastical councils have been held here; in that of 1140 the well known Abelard was condemned. Sens was taken by the allies in 1814, but soon after evacuated. It is seated in a fertile country, at the conflux of the Vanne with the Yonne, 25 m. N. of Auxerre and 80 S. E. of Pais. Long. 3. 17. E., lat. 48. 12 N.

Sepulveda, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 30 m. N. E. of Segovia.

Sera, or Sira, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, with a stone fort of a good size. It is the principal place in the central division of the rajah's dominions N. of the Cavery and carries on a considerable inland commerce. The whole of the cloth made here is used in the neighbourhood. Since the restoration of the rajah, in 1793, the fort has been garrisoned by British troops 48 m. S. E. of Chittledroog, 48 N. of Serringapatam. Long. 76. 53. E., lat. 13. 36. N.

Serai, a town of European Turkey, capital of Bosnia, and the see of a Catholic bishop, appointed by the king of Hungary. It is a large commercial place, and is seated on the river Bosnia 130 m. W. S. W. of Belgrade. Long. 19. 15. E., lat. 44. 14. N.

Serampore, a town of Bengal, belonging to the Danes. The houses are of brick, plastered with mortar, and have flat roofs, with balconies and Venetian windows. The inhabitants carry on some trade with Europe, China, &c. But the town is principally distinguished as the early seat of the Baptist mission in India, and as the residence of British subjects who take refuge here from their creditors. It is seated on the W. bank of the Hooghly. 12 m. N. of Calcutta.

Serobol, a town of Russia, in the government of Wiburg, on the lake Ladoga, 60 m. N. N. E. of Wiburg.

Sered, or Szsered, a town of Hungary, on the river Waag, 30 m. E. N. E. of Presburg.

Serfo, or Serfante, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, 8 m. long and 5 broad, and full of mountains and rocks, in which are mines of iron and loadstone. The inhabitants are all Greeks, and have but one town, called St. Nicholo, which is a poor place. 50 m. N. W. of Naxaia. Long. 25. 10. E., lat. 37. 19. N.

Sergag, a town of Russia, in the government of Niznei Novogorod, 48 m. S. E. of Niznei Novogorod.

Sergippe, a province on the coast of Brazil to the S. of Pernambuco. It produces sugar and tobacco in considerable quantities and has some silver mines.

Sergippe, a sea-port of Brazil, capital of the above province, seated at the mouth of the Sergippe, 120 m. N. E. of St. Salvador. Long. 37. 44. W., lat. 12. 10. S.

Seriguan, a town of France, department of Herault, at the mouth of the Ombre, in the gulf of Lions, 8 m. S. E. of Beziers.

Serinagur, or Gawal, a province of Hindoostan, situated chiefly between 30. and 32. of N. lat. and between 77 and 79. of E. long. It is estimated at 140 m. in length by 60 in breadth; and is governed by a rajah, under the protection of the British.

Serinagur, the capital of the above province, is about three quarters of a mile long, the houses built of rough stone and mud, and covered with slate, but seldom more than two stories high. The streets are narrow and dirty, but there are some good shops. It is situated in a valley on the river Alcananda, which is crossed by a bridge of ropes. On the opposite side of the river, at the village of Ranihut, is a temple sacred to Raja Ishwara, principally inhabited by dancing women, whose lives are devoted to prostitution as a religious service! Serinagur is 38 m. from Hardwar. Long. 79. 18. E., lat. 30. 11. N.

Seringapatam, a city of Hindoostan, the modern capital of Mysore, is situated in an island, 3 m. long, and 1 broad, formed by the Cavery, which is here a large and rapid river, with a wide and rocky channel. The streets are narrow and confused, and the generality of the houses mean. The city is strongly fortified; notwithstanding which, lord Cornwallis, in 1792, here compelled Tippoo to sign a treaty, by which he ceded half of his dominions, and agreed to pay a vast sum of money to the English and their allies; and, a new war taking place in 1799, the British troops carried the fort by an assault, in which Tippoo was killed. The city and the island have since been retained by the English, towards the support of the late sultan's family. The palace is very large, and surrounded by a massy wall of stone and mud; it is now the residence of a surgeon. The seraglio of Hyder has been converted into an European hospital, that of Tippoo into a barrack for artillery; the private apartments of the latter are occupied by the resident, and the public ones by European troops. Without the walls of the city are two gardens and palaces; and near to one of them is the mausoleum of Hyder, where rests all that was mortal of this Mahometan dynasty, consisting of Hyder and his wife, and Tippoo, who lie under tombs covered with rich cloths, and at the expense of the British government; and the establishment of priests to offer up prayers, and of musicians to perform the nobut, is retained as formerly. In the space between the city and the two gardens is the suburb called Shahar Ganjam, which is rapidly increasing on a regular plan. Seringapatam is 10 m. N. of Mysore, and 290 W. by S. Madras. Long. 76. 50. E., lat. 12. 24. N.

Seringham, an island in the S. of India, in the district of Trichinopoly, celebrated for its Hindoo temple, to which pilgrims from all parts of Hindoostan, resort for absolution; and here, as in all great pagodas, the Brahmans live in a subordination that knows no resistance, and slumber in voluptuousness that feels no want. At present the allowance made by the British government for the support of the temple and its establishment, amounts to about £6,240 sterling.

Serong, a town of Hindoostan, in Malwa, celebrated for its manufacture of painted cottons and chintzes. It is situate in the river Cavery, half a mile N. of the fortress of Trichinopoly and 140 m. E. N. E. of Ougein. Long. 78. 4. E., lat. 24. 5. N.

Serpa, a town of Portugal, in Alemtejo, with a castle; seated on a rugged eminence, near the Guadiana, 38 m. S. by E. of Evora.

Serravalle, a town of Austrian Italy, in the government of Venice with a castle. It has cloth, woolen, and silk manufactures, and a trade in corn, wine, and honey. The cathedral contains some fine paintings, and the church of St. Augusta is a noble edifice. It is situate between two mountains, and at the source of the Maschio 22 m. N. of Treviso.

Serres, a town of France, department of Upper Alps, 23 m. S. W. of Gap.

Screan, St., a town of France, department of Ille-et-Vilaine, with considerable manufactures of linen, sail-cloth, soap, and tobacco, and 9,000 inhabitants. It is seated at the mouth of the river Rance, about a mile S. of St. Malo, from which it is separated by a narrow arm of the sea, dry at low water.

Serria, a province of European Turkey, 190 m. long and 95 broad; bounded N. by the Danube and Save, which separate it from Hungary, E. by Bulgaria, S. by Macedonia and Albania, and W. by Bosnia. The climate is less mild than might be expected in 43. and 44. of N. lat., the winter being of considerable length, and spring not beginning till April. This is owing partly to the height of the great ridge of the Argentaro or Glubotin Mountains, extending along its southern boundary; partly to the number of forests, and the general neglect of cultivation in its interior. The soil is in general fertile, but a small proportion of the country is as yet under tillage. The products are wheat, barley, oats, rice, hemp, flax, and tobacco; also vines, and fruit of various kinds; and in the valleys and other warm spots cotton is raised. Mines of iron have been discovered in several parts; but they are almost entirely neglected. The only manufactures are of woolen, cotton, and hardware, for home consumption. Servia was formerly an independent kingdom, but yielded to the Turks in 1365. In 1801 an insurrection took place against their authority, under the standard of Czerni Georges, previously known as the head of a band of robbers, but now honored with the name of avenger of his country. In 1814 he judged proper to withdraw into Russia; and by a convention concluded between his country and the Porte, in 1815, the Servians acknowledged the sovereignty of the sultan, but preserved the free exercise of their religion, as well as their civil rights. Belgrade is the capital.

Sesslach, a town and castle of Bavarian Franconia, 16 m. N. of Bamberg.

Sesto, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Milanese, seated on the Ticino, where it issues from the lake Maggiore, 25 m. W. N. W. of Milan.

Sestre, Grand, or Great Paris, a town of Guinea, on the Grain Coast; near which is Petit Sestre. It is one of the largest and most commercial towns in the country. Long. 7. 0. W., lat. 4. 50. N.

Sestri di Lerante, a town of the Sardinian states, in the territory of Genoa, 30 m. E. S. E. of Genoa.

Se-tcheou, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Koei-tcheou. It is situate among mountains, which yield cinnabar and quicksilver, 980 m. S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 103. 25. E., lat. 27. 10. N.

Se-tchuen, a province of China, bounded on the N. by Chen-si, E. by Houquang, S. by Koei-tcheou, and W. by Tibet. It is watered by the Kian-ku; and is rich, not only on account of the great quantity of silk it produces, but also in iron, tin, lead, amber, sugar-canes, lapis lazuli, musk, rhubarb, &c. Tching-tou is the capital.

Setcef, a town of Algiers, in the province of Constantina. It was the ancient Stipha, capital of a part of Mauritania; but scarcely a fragment is left of its former greatness, except the fountains. 50 m. S. W. of Constantina. Long. 5. 36. E., lat. 35. 58. N.

Setimo, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, seated on the Po, 8 m. N. of Turin.

Setlege, a river of Hindoostan, the most easterly of the five eastern branches of the Indus. About midway from its source, it receives the Beyah, at Firosepour, and joins the Indus at Veh.

Sette, a town of W. Africa, in a district of its name, lying between Loango and Benin. It has a great trade in logwood, sent in vessels to Mayamba; and stands on a river of the same name, 60 m. from its mouth, and 110 N. N. E. of Mayamba. Long. 10. 20. E., lat. 2. 0. S.

Settenil, a town of Spain, in Granada, 8 m. N. of Ronda and 38 N. W. of Malaga.

Settia, a town of the island of Candia, and a Greek bishop's see, 48 m. E. S. E. of Candia. Long. 26. 2. E., lat. 35. 3. N.

Settle, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. About 2 m. to the E. is Attermire Cave, containing numberless chinks and recesses, fluted pillars and hanging petrifications. At the like distance to the N. is Giggleswick Well, a reciprocating spring, which will sometimes rise and fall nearly a foot, in a stone trough about a yard square, every 10 or 15 minutes. Settle is seated on the Ribble, 38 m. N. N. W. of Halifax and 235 of London.

Setucket, p. v. Suffolk Co. N. Y.

Setucal. See Ubes, St.

Seven Islands, a cluster of islands in the Frozen Ocean, lying in long. 18. 48. E., lat. 80. 31. N. Here captain Phipps, with two ships, was surrounded by the ice, from the 1st to the 10th of August, 1773, when a brisk wind at N. N. E. effected their deliverance.

Seven Islands, islands near the coast of Canada, on the N. side of the mouth of the St. Lawrence, at the entrance of a small bay. Long. 66. 5 W., at. 50. 10. N.

Sevenbergen, a town of the Netherlands in Brabant, 8 m. W. N. W. of Breda.

Sevenoaks, a town in Kent, Eng. In 1450 Jack Cade defeated the royal army near this town. 6 m. N. W. of Maidstone and 23 S. S. E. of London.

Sever, St., a town of France, department of Landes, seated on the Adour, 20 m. E. of Dax and 63 S. by E. of Bordeaux.

Severac, a town in the department of Aveyron, on the river Aveyron, 23 m. E. of Rodez.

Severin, a town of European Turkey, in Wallachia, on the Danube, 6 m. W. of Czernetz.

Severina, St., a fortified town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, and an archbishop's see. It is seated on a craggy rock, on the river Neto, 8 m. from the sea and 45. S. E. of Rossano. Long. 17. 14. E., lat. 39. 15. N.

Severina, St., a town of Italy, in the papal states, 13 m. W. S. W. of Macerata.

Severino, St., a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, on the river Sarno, 10 m. W. S. W. of Policastro.

Severn, a river of England, which has its rise in the mountain of Plynlimon, in Wales, its mouth is called the Bristol Channel. This river has a communication with the Thames, the Trent, the Dee, and the Mersey, by different canals.

Severn, a river of Md. which waters Annapolis, and enters by a broad estuary into Chesapeake Bay.

Severndroog, a small island of Hindoostan, on the coast of Concan. Here was a strong fort, belonging to Angria the pirate, which was taken by commodore James in 1756. 68 m. S. by E. of Bombay.

Severna, St., a town of Naples, in Capitanata, seated in a plain, 26 m. W. by N. of Manfredonia and 75 N. E. of Naples.

Severus's Wall, commonly called Graham's Dike, in the W. of Scotland. It is a work of the Romans, supposed to be done by the emperor, whose name it bears, to prevent the incursions of the Picts and Scots. It began at Abercorn, on the frith of Forth, 4 m. N. E. of Linlithgow, and ran W. to the frith of Clyde, ending at Kirkpatrick, near Dumbarton.

Sevier, a county of E. Tennessee. Pop. 5,117. Sevierville, the capital is 5 m. S. E. Knoxville.

Sevigny, a town of France, department of Ardennes, 12 m. N. W. of Bethel.

Seville, a province of Spain, forming the western half of Andalusia, and still retaining the title of kingdom. It has an area of 9,500 sq. m. with 750,000 inhabitants. The surface is diversified with beautiful plains and hills, covered with vines and fruit trees. Agriculture is in a very backward state, and the manufactures are all on a small scale. The chief towns are Seville (the capital). Cadiz, Ecija, Xeres, Ossuna, and St. Mary's, near Cadiz.

Seville, a city of Spain, capital of the above province, and an archbishop's see, seated on the Guadalquivir. It is fortified by strong walls flanked with high towers, and takes up more ground than Madrid, although it now has not above 100,000 inhabitants. The Phenicians called it Hispalis, and it is the Julia of the Romans, who embellished it with many magnificent buildings. The Moors built an aqueduct, still to be seen, 6 m. in length. The cathedral is by some supposed to be the largest church in the world next to St. Peter's at Rome; the steeple is of enrious workmanship, and extremely high, consisting of three towers, one above another, with galleries and balconies. The churches and convents are opulent and beautiful; of the latter, that of St. Francis is adorned with a handsome public square, in the midst of which is a fine fountain. The university consists of many colleges; and the professors enjoy rich pensions. The royal palace, called Alcazar, was partly built after the antique by the Moors, and partly in the modern taste by king Pedro: it is a mile in extent, and flanked by large square towers, built with stones taken from the ancient temple of Hercules. Here is a foundery, and one of the largest depots for artillery in the kingdom.

The principal manufactures are silk; and behind the Alcazar is a royal snuff manufacture, which is strictly examined and guarded. The exchange is a square building of the Tuscan order, each front 100 feet in length, and three stories high. The town house is adorned with a great number of statues, and there is a large square before it, with a fine fountain in the middle. There are 120 hospitals richly endowed. The suburb of Triano stands on the other side of the river, over which is a long bridge of boats. In this suburb stood the house of the Inquisition; and there are public walks, where most of the inhabitants go to take the air. The situation of Seville renders it one of the most commercial towns of Spain. All the trade of that kingdom with the New World, centered originally, in its port; but, that of Cadiz being found more commodious, the galleons sailed from that place after the year 1720. Such vast employment did the American trade give, at one period, that in Seville alone there were no fewer than 16,000 looms in silk or woolen work; but, before the end of the reign of Philip III., they were reduced to 400. The country around is extremely fertile in corn, wine, &c. and there is abundance of oil; to the W. of the river is a grove of olive-trees, 30 m. in length. Seville was taken by the French in 1810, but they evacuated it after the battle of Salamanca in 1812. 45 m. from the Atlantic and 212 S. S. W. of Madrid. Lon. 5. 59. W., lat. 37. 14. N.

Sevres, Deux, a department of France, including part of the ancient province of Poitou. It is so named from two rivers that rise here; one, called Sevre Niortois, flowing W. by St. Maixent, Niort and Marans, into the Bay of Biscay, opposite the Isle of Re; and the other named Sevre Nantais, which takes a N. W. direction, passes by Clisson, and enters the river Loire, opposite Nantes. The department comprises an area of 2,500 sq. m., with 260,000 inhabitants, about one eighth of whom are Protestants. Niort is the capital.

Sevalick, a chain of mountains in Hindcoast bordering on the country of Serinagur and the province of Dehli.

Sewickly, North and New, two townships in Beaver Co. Pa. on the Ohio.

Seysse, a town of France, department of Ain, divided into two parts by the Rhone, which here begins to be navigable. 14 m. N. by E. of Belley.

Sezanne, a town in the department of Marne, 27 m. N. W. of Troyes and 63 S. E. of Paris.

Sezzu, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, 14 m. N. W. of Capua.

Shabur, a town of Egypt, on the W. branch of the Nile, 45 m. S. E. of Alexandria and 50 N. N. W. of Cairo.

Shannonsville, p.v. Montgomery Pa.

Shap, a village in Westmoreland, Eng. at the source of the Loder, between Orton and Penrith. It had once a famous abbey, which stood about a mile W. from the church, of which little remains, except the tower of its church, and the ruins of a bridge. In the vicinity are some great stones, like pyramids, from 10 to 12 yards apart, placed almost in a direct line for a mile together, of such immense weight that carriages now in use could not support them.

Shapinska, one of the Orkney Islands, lying 3 m. from the N. E. part of Pomona. It is 7 m. long and 5 broad. The coasts are level and produce grass and corn, but the middle part is high and fit only for sheep pasture.

Sheepscoot, a river of Maine flowing into the sea near the mouth of the Kennebec.

Sheerness, a maritime town in Kent, Eng. on the point of the Isle of Sheppey, at the mouth of the Medway, 3 m. N. of Queenborough. A fort was built here by Charles II., after the insult of the Dutch, who burnt the men of war at Chatham in 1667; and it has since been considerably augmented and strengthened. There are also an ordnance office, a dock-yard, and a chapel.

Sheffield, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng., situated on an eminence surrounded by a beautiful valley, with a range of romantic hills in the perspective. The houses are well built, and many of them elegant; and few places can boast of more handsome or regular streets. This town has long been celebrated for its various hardware manufactures which consist particularly of cutlery ware, plated goods, buttons, &c., immense quantities of which are now exported to all parts of the habitable globe. In the town and neighbourhood are foundries for iron, brass, and white metal; and numerous works are established on the banks of the rivers for the purpose of preparing the iron and steel for the manufactures. Here are also lead works, a considerable carpet manufacture and a cotton mill; and the neighbourhood abounds in coal. Sheffield is seated at the conflux of the Sheaf with the Don, which is now rendered navigable up to the town. 53 m. S. S. W. of York and 163 N. N. W. of London. Long. 1. 29. W., lat. 53. 20. N.

Sheppey, an island in Kent, Eng. at the mouth of the Thames, separated from the mainland by a branch of the Medway, called the E. Swale. It yields plenty of corn, and feeds numerous flocks of sheep. It contains the borough of Queenborough, and the fort of Sheerness.

Shepton Mallet, a town in Somersetshire, Eng. with a considerable manufacture of woolen cloth. The town is seated under the Mendip Hills, 17 m. S. W. of Bath and 116 W. of London.

Sherborn, a town in Dorsetshire, Eng. with manufactures of lincn and silk. It was formerly a bishop's see, and the parish church, which was the cathedral, and in which are interred the Saxon kings Ethelbald and Ethelbert, is a magnificent pile of building. Formerly here were two other churches, a castle, and an abbey, of which scarcely a vestige remains. 116 m. W. by S. of London.

Sherbro, a fort of Guinea, seated at the mouth of Sherbro River, which separates the country of Sierra Leone from the Grain Coast. It belongs to the English, and is 100 m. S. E. of the mouth of the river Sierra Leone. Long. 11. 0. W., lat. 7. 0. N.

Sherenzur, a town of European Turkey in Kurdistan, the residence of a nasha. 160 m. N. by E. of Bagdad.

Sheriff-muir, a heath of Scotland, in Perthshire near Dunblane; famous for a bloody, and indecisive battle in 1715, between the royal army under the duke of Argyle, and the rebel forces under the duke of Mar.

Sherman, a township of Fairfield Co. Conn. Pop. 947.

Sherse, a town of Algiers, in the province of Mascara, formerly of great importance. It has said to have been anciently destroyed by an earthquake, when the arsenal and many other buildings were precipitated into the harbour, the ruins being still visible at low water. It is built after the Moorish manner; and is famous for its pottery, and steel and iron manufactures. 60 m. W. by S. of Algiers. Long. 2. 48. E., lat. 32. 42. N.

Sheshequin, p.v. Bradford Co. Pa.

Shetland, the several names of about 40 islands besides a number of small holms or rocky islets used only for pasturage, lying 100 m. N. N. E. of Caithness-shire, in Scotland, between 59. 56. and 61. 11. N. lat. The names of the principal are Mainland, Yell, Unst, Bressay, and Fula. The description given of the largest, or Mainland will give an idea of the others; and the particulars of the climate, inhabitants, &c., are much the same as in the Orkneys. Shetland unites with Orkney in forming one of the counties of Scotland.

Sheraqunga, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, 25 m. N. W. of Brangalore.

Shibam, a city of Arabia, capital of the province of Hadramaut, and the residence of a powerful sheik. 300 m. E. of Sana. Long. 49. 40. E., lat. 15. 25. N.

Shields, North, a sea-port of Northumberland, Eng. with considerable trade in coal and salt. The town extends to Tynemouth on the E., and many elegant detached mansions are erected in the neighbourhood. It has wide and airy streets in every direction, well paved, and lighted with gas. This town, together with S. Shields, may be deemed the port of Newcastle; for the largest vessels are stationed here to take in their lading, which is brought down in barges and lighters. It is seated on the N. bank of the Tyne, near its mouth, 6 m. E. by N. of Newcastle and 279 N. by W. of London. Long. 1. 4. W., lat. 54. 58. N.

Shields, South, a town in the county of Durham, seated on the river Tyne, opposite N. Shields, with which place it enjoys all the advantages of trade and commerce in common with Newcastle. It consists principally of one narrow street, two m. in length, with an open square in the middle. Many trading vessels are built here, and it has several salt-works and glass-works. 22 m. N. N. W. of Durham and 251 N. by W. of London.

Shipston, a town in a detached part of Worcestershire, Eng. surrounded by Warwickshire. 83 N. W. of London.

Shiras, or Shirauz, a city of Persia, capital of Faristan, seated at the end of a spacious plain, bounded on all sides by lofty mountains. It is surrounded by a wall, 5 m. in circuit, with round towers at the distance of 80 paces. The city is built of brick, and adorned with many fine mosques and noble edifices. Here are many good bazaars and caravanseras; also a manufacture of swords. This city was the seat of government under Kerim Khan, who erected many of the fine buildings in and near this place. In its vicinity are numerous summer-houses, with gardens; and the rich wines of Shiras are deemed the best in all Persia. The tomb of the celebrated poet Hafiz is in a large garden on the N. E. side of the city, about 2 m. from the wall; and at the foot of the mountains, in the same direction, is the tomb of Sadi. 175 m. S. by E. of Ispahan. Long. 52. 40 E., lat. 29. 37. N.

Shirley, p.t. Middlesex Co. Mass. 38 m. N. W. Boston. Pop. 991.

Shirvan, a province of Persia, forming the largest and most important division of the southern Caucasus, bounded N. and E. by Georgia and Daghestan, and S. by the Kur, which separates it from Ghilan and Aderbijan. The soil in general is fertile, producing corn, saffron, cotton, &c. Schamachi and Baku are the chief towns.

Shoals, Isles of. See Isles of Shoals.

Shogle, a town of Syria, with an excellent caravansera, seated on the Asi, 18 m. S. by E. of Antioch and 45 S. W. of Aleppo.

Shoomska, one of the Kurile islands, three leagues S. of Cape Lopatka, in Kamtschatka. Its inhabitants consist of a mixture of natives and Kamtschadales.

Shooter's Hill, a village in Kent, Eng. situate on a hill so called, which affords a very extensive and delightful prospect. On the W. part of the hill is a triangular tower, erected to commemorate the reduction, in 1756, of Severndroog, a strong fort in Hindoostan: it is called Severndroog Castle, and contains some of the arms, ornaments, &c., taken from the enemy. 8 m. E. S. E. of London.

Shoreham, a borough in Sussex, Eng. It is commonly called New Shoreham, to distinguish it from the Old, which lies near it, and is now of little account. It stands on an arm of the sea, into which vessels can enter with the tide; and many small vessels are built here. 19 m. W. N. W. of Newhaven and 56 S. by W. of London.

Shoreham, p.t. Addison Co. Vt. Pop. 2,317.

Short Creek, a township of Harrison Co. Ohio. Pop. 2,185.

Shrewsbury, a borough and the capital of Shropshire, Eng. It is seated on a peninsula formed by the Severn, over which are two bridges; and is surrounded by a wall, in which are three gates. Here were formerly a castle and abbey, both now in ruins. Shrewsbury is the chief mart for a coarse kind of woolen cloth, made in Montgomeryshire, called Welsh Webs; and for all sorts of Welsh commodities, which are generally bought in a rough state at Welshpool, and finished here. 154 N. W. of London.

Shropshire, a county of England, 48 m. long and forty broad; bounded N. by Cheshire and a detached part of Flintshire, E. by Staffordshire, S. E. by Worcestershire, S. by Herefordshire, S. W. by Radnorshire, and W. by the countries of Montgomery and Denbigh. It contains 850,000 acres, is divided into 15 hundreds and 230 parishes, has 17 market towns, and sends 12 members to parliament. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 206,153. The soil is generally fruitful, especially in the N. and E. parts, which produce plenty of wheat and barley; the S. and W., being mountainous, are less fertile, but yield sufficient pasture for sheep and cattle. This county abounds with lead, copper, iron, limestone, free-stone, pipe-clay, bitumen, and coal; it has also some salt-springs, numerous iron-works, and manufactures of porcelain and flannel. The principal rivers are the Severn and the Teme. The capital is Shrewsbury.

Shumla, a strong town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria. It commands the pass over the mountains, and is 120 m. N. N. W. of Constantinople.

Shusa, a town of European Russia, capital of the province of Karabegh, with 2,000 inhabitants, 500 of whom are Armenians, and the remainder Tartars. 225 m. S. E. of Tiflis.

Shuster, a city of Persia, capital of Kusistan, with a considerable manufacture of woolen stuffs which are exported to Bassorah in return for Indian commodities. The streets are narrow and dirty, but the houses are good, and it contains ruins which testify it to have been formerly of great extent and magnificence. Its present population is estimated at 15,000, Persians and Arabs. It is situate at the foot of a range of mountains, on an eminence which overlooks the rapid source of the Karoon. Long. 49, 2. E., lat. 32. 5. N.

Shutesbury, p.t. Franklin Co. Mass. 82 m. W. Boston. Pop. 987.

Siam, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N. E. by that of Laos, E. by Cochinchina and Cambodia, S. by a gulf of its name, and W. by the bay of Bengal. It is 550 miles in length and 250 in breadth, though in some places not above 50, and is divided into the Higher and Lower. The country is level, and in the rainy season is overflowed; for which reason most of the houses are built on pillars, and they have no communication for some months but by boats. The soil produces plenty of rice, cotton, and a variety of fruits different from those of Europe. Many authors have extolled it as the finest and richest country in the world. There are mines of gold, silver, tin, and copper; and plenty of pepper, aloes, benzoin, and musk. Wild animals roam in the woods, as elephants, rhinoceroses, leopards, and tygers.—The inhabitants have large foreheads, little noses, plump lips, and black sparkling eyes. The men are of an olive complexion, with little beards, but the women are of a straw complexion, and some have their cheeks a little red. Both sexes go bare headed, and almost naked, except the wealthy, who wear rich garments for ostentation. The king shows himself but once a year to the people. He is the proprietor of all the lands ir the country, and no one can buy any merchandize till he has first had the choice of them. He generally keeps a numerous army, besides 3,000 elephants, and can take 25,000 men into the field. The mandarins, that is, the principal men who daily attend the palace, are 3,000 in number, and are whipped very severely with split rattans for the least fault. The temples and priests are very numerous; the latter are distinguished from the laity by an orange-coloured garment, and by keeping their heads, beards, and eye-brows close shaved. They have schools for the education of their children, and scarcely any are found among them who cannot read and write. This country has been much oppressed by the Birmanes, to whom the king of Siam, after a long and destructive war, ceded the W. maritime towns on the Bay of Bengal, in 1793.

The Cassowary, one of the largest birds in the world, is found here. Their tame cattle are oxen, buffaloes, and hogs, of which they have plenty about their farms. There are large and dangerous crocodiles, and serpents 20 feet long.

Siam, or Juthia, a city, the capital of the above kingdom. It contains a great number of temples, convents, chapels, columns and other decorations. The king's palace, and some others, differ from the common habitations by occupying a more extensive space, being better constructed, and of a greater height, but they never exceed one floor. The Dutch have a factory here, and merchants from different countries come here to trade. In 1766 this city was taken by the Birmanes. It is situate on an island in the river Menan, 50 m. N. of its mouth in the gulph of Siam and 360 S. E. of Pegu. Long 100. 50. E., lat. 14. 18. N.

Siang-yang, a city of China, of the first class, in the province of Hou-quang, on the river Han, 530 m. S. S. W. of Pekin. Long. 111. 40. E., lat. 32. 5. N.

Siara, a province of Brazil, lying between those of Maragon and Petaguel. The capital, of the same name, has a fort on a mountain, near the mouth of the river Siara. Long. 39. 35. W., lat. 3. 30. S.

Shashoi, a town of Russia, in the government of Petersburg, near the lake Ladoga, 24 m. N. E. of New Ladoga. Long. 30. 47. E., lat. 60. 16. N.

Siberia, a large country, comprehending the northern part of the Russian empire in Asia. It is bounded on the E. by the Pacific Ocean, S. by Great Tartary, W. by European Russia, and N. by the Frozen Ocean. It extends 3,500 m. in length from E. to W. and 1,200 in breadth from N. to S. The S. part, produces all the necessities of life, but the N. is extremely cold, almost uncultivated, and thin of people. The principal riches of this country consist of fine skins and furs. Here is found the Sable a small animal furnishing one of the most valuable furs in the world. There are also rich mines of iron and copper, and several kinds of precious stones, particularly topazes of a beautiful lustre, magnets of an extraordinary size, and even whole mountains of loadstone. The inhabitants are of three sorts Pagans, or the natives of the country, Mahometans, and Russians. The former dwell in forests in the winter, and in the summer on the banks, of rivers. Their garments are the skins of wild beasts. All their riches are comprised in their bows, arrows, a knife, and a kettle. They make use of reindeer and dogs, instead of horses, to draw their sledges; and live in huts, which they remove from place to place. Those in the southern parts are somewhat more civilized. They have horses with which they go a hunting, and their houses, though poor, are not shifted from place to place. The Russians settled here are much the same as in their native country. It is through this vast tract of land that the Russian caravans travel every year, when they carry their merchandize to China. The principal rivers are the Oby, Lena, Irtysh, Yenisei, and Okota. The western part of Siberia is comprised in the Russian government of Tobolsk, and is divided into the circles of Tobolsk Proper, Tomsk, Yeniceysk, and Kolyvan; all the eastern part is contained in the government of Irkutsk, and divided into the circles of Irkutsk Proper, Nertschink, Yakoutsk, and Okhotsk, which last includes Kamtschatka and the islands. Siberia is the place to which criminals, as well as persons under the displeasure of the court, are commonly banished from Russia. Christianity has at present made little progress in this country, though considerable efforts have of late years been made by the Russian government as well as by the British Missionary Societies. Tobolsk is the capital and the residence of the viceroy.

Sical, a town of Mexico, on the N coast of Yucatan, 70 m. N. W. of Merida. Long. 90. 30. W., lat. 39. 30. N.

Sichem, a town of the Netherlands, in S. Brabant, to the S. of which is a celebrated monastery. It is seated on the Demer, 18 m. E. of Mechlin.

Sicily, an island of the Mediterranean Sea, about 165 m. long and 112 broad. Its form is that of a triangle, terminating in three capes. Sicily is separated from the kingdom of Naples by a narrow strait, called the Faro; but, as Messina is situated on it, it is called the Faro of Messina. The two kingdoms of Naples and Sicily have nearly the same climate, and the productions are much the same, but Sicily abounds much more in corn, particularly in the valleys of Noto and Mazara. The valley of Demona has more forests and fruit trees than the two others. The three great divisions of Sicily are named from those valleys; but since 1815 it has been divided into seven intendancies; viz., Palermo, Messina, Catania, Girgenti, Syracuse, Trapani, and Calatanissetta. The chief towns in the Val di Mazara are, Palermo, Marsala, Trapani, Termini, and Mazara; in the Val di Noto, Modica, Ragusa, Noto, Syracuse, and Castro Giovanni; in the Val di Demona, Messina, Catania, and Nicosia. This country produces corn, wine, oil, silk, excellent fruits, and almost every necessary of life in wonderful abundance. The only manufacturing establishments of extent are Palermo, Messina, and Catania; they consist of silk, cotton, and linen, and some woollens, though the wool of the island is of indifferent quality: to which we may add a few articles, such as hats, cutlery, harness, carriages, and household furniture, made at the principal towns. The commerce of Sicily is comparatively trifling, though from the variety of its products, the excellence of several of its harbours, and the general safety of its coast for navigation, it might, under an enlightened government, become very extensive. In the darkness of their complexion, and the indolence of their habits, the Sicilians resemble the Italians and Spaniards; and education is in a very backward state, but the new plan of teaching (of Bell and Lancaster) is beginning to be employed with some success. The religion is the Catholic; and the number of ecclesiastics is said to amount to 70,000, exclusive of the monks and nuns. The assembly long dignified with the name of parliament was, until 1810, merely a feudal institution, possessing hardly any marks of the elective franchise.

Sicily was successively occupied by the Phenicians, the Carthaginians, and Romans. In the 8th and 9th centuries it was conquered by the Saracens, who retained possession of the island about 200 years. They gave way to the Normans who, attracted to Sicily on their progress to the crusades, made the conquest of the island in the 11th century. It passed successively into the possession of France, Germany, and Spain. By the peace of Utrecht, in 1713, it was given to the duke of Savoy, with the title of king; but in 1720 the Austrians prevailed on the new possessor of Sicily to exchange it for Sardinia, and added the former to the kingdom of Naples. The war carried on by France and Spain against Austria, in 1734, transferred other crowns of Naples to a branch of the royal family of Spain, in whose hands it remained until the progress of the French revolutionists, in 1799, led to the expulsion of the royal family from Naples. They took refuge in Sicily, where they remained till 1815, when the overthrow of Murat, by the Austrians, led to the restoration of the former family to the throne of Naples, which they continue to possess. In 1820 the Sicilians made an attempt to establish a free government, but the country was invaded by the Austrians, and the king re-established in all his former absolute authority. Palermo is the capital.

Sielos, a town of Hungary, with a castle on a mountain, in which the emperor Sigismund was imprisoned. 12 m. S. of Funfkirchen.

Sidaye, a strong town on the N. coast of the island of Java with a harbour. Long. 113. 15. E. lat. 6. 40. S

Siddonsburg p.v. York Co. Pa. 32. m. from Harrisburg.

Sideling Hills, a range of eminences in Bedford Co. Pa. extending from N. W. to S. E.

Siderocapsa, a town of Macedonia, famous for a gold mine in its neighbourhood. 5 m. from the gulf of Contessa, and 40. E. S. E. of Salonichi.

Sidmouth, a town in Devonshire. Eng. It is much frequented in the bathing season, and was formerly a sea-port, but its harbour is now choked up. It is seated on the English Channel, 158 W. by S. of London.

Sidney, p.t. Kennebec Co. Me. on the Kennebec, 8 m. above Augusta. Pop. 2,191; p.t. Delaware Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,410; p.t. Shelby Co. Ohio. 80 m. N. W. Columbus. Pop. 248.

Sidra, a spacious gulf of the Mediterranean, on the coast of Tripoli, anciently called Syrtis.

Siedenbergl, a town of Hanover, in the county of Hoya, 9 m. S. W. of Hoya.

Siegberg, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the duchy of Berg, on the river Seig. 15 m. S. E. of Cologne.

Siegen, a town and castle of Prussian Westphalia, formerly the capital of a principality belonging to the house of Nassau. In the neighbourhood are iron mines, forges and founderies. It is seated on the Sieg, 24 m. N. W. of Wetzlar. Long. 8. 12. E., lat. 50. 47. N.

Sienna, or Sicmese, a province of the grand duchy of Tuscany, bounded by the Florentine and the territory of Pisa. The soil is pretty fertile, especially in mulberry trees, which feed a great number of silk worms, and there are several mineral springs. It is 62 m. long and nearly the same broad, and has an area of 3,000 square m. with 190,000 inhabitants.

Sienna, a city of Tuscany, capital of the foregoing province, and an archbishop's see, with a university and a citadel. It is surrounded by a wall, above 4 m. in circumference. The Gothic metropolitan church is built with black and white marble, and the pavement is of Mosaic work. Sienna is not very populous; but is adorned with a great number of palaces, fountains, and superb churches. The great area is round, and the houses about it are of the same height, supported by piazzas, under which people may walk in all weathers. The Italian language is spoken in Sienna in its greatest purity. It is seated on three eminences, 26 m. S. of Florence and 120 N. N. W. of Rome. Long. 11. 11. E., lat. 43. 24. N.

Sierk, a town of France, department of Moselle, near the river Moselle, 10 m. N. N. E. of Thionville.

Sierra Leone, a country of Africa, in the W. part of Guinea, so named from being mountainous, and the mountains abounding in lions. It is situated on the Atlantic, and is distinguished for the colony formed there by the British nation, from motives of generosity and philanthropy. This country is traversed by a considerable river, derived from an unknown source in the interior, called the Mitomba or Sierra Leone. Its limits are from the Grain coast on the S. E., to Cape Verga on the N. W.; that is. between 7. and 10. N. lat. In the open and plain districts, on the banks of the river, the heat of the sun, before any breeze arises, is almost intolerable; but a refreshing gale constantly springs up about noon, which renders the country supportable. The wet season, from May to October, is ushered in and terminated by stormy weather. The whole tract, on each side the river, is rich in rice and millet, which is the chief sustenance of the inhabitants; and, upon the whole, it is one of the best countries on the coast. The natives are in general of mild external manners, and noted for their hospitality; but they possess a great share of pride, and are easily affected by an insult. Of all the tribes, those who have embraced Mahomedism are the most civilized and respectable; and those on the coast, from their intercourse with the European slave-factors, are much inferior in every thing, except the art of making a bargain, to those who reside higher up the country. In 1791 an act of parliament was obtained, incorporating a company, called the Sierra Leone Company, for the purpose of cultivating W. India and other tropical productions on the banks of the river. The first settlers amounted to 200 white persons, besides a number of free blacks from Nova Scotia. In 1793 the colonists were all put into possession of small lots of land, and a new town, on a regular and extended scale, was begun to be built. The next year a French squadron destroyed the settlement, and captured several of the company's ships: from this disaster they recovered; and a factory was established in the Rio Pongos, in 1795. The colony, however, still continued to languish, and, in 1808, it was transferred from the company to his majesty. It was soon after placed under the management of the African Institution, and, notwithstanding all its disadvantages, the colony has been rapidly advancing in prosperity, and the population is continually augmenting by the capture of negroes, on their way to the W. Indies, by vessels employed to put a stop to the slave trade. The number landed in 1824 was 1,530, in 1825, 2,337, in 1826 2,727, and in 1827, 2,857. The whole population of the liberated Africans in the villages in 1828 (exclusive of 2,562 persons resident in Freetown, or employed at the timber factories) was 15,004. Independently of Freetown but including the Isles de Los and Freetown, the number of settlements now amounts to 14, of which Regent and Wellington are the richest and most populous. The inhabitants are by no means wanting in industry. The markets of Freetown are supplied with fruits and vegetables, almost exclusively by the mountain villages, and from 80 to 100 persons are to be seen daily on the hill leading to Gloucester Town with the produce of their own farms and gardens. The Church and Wesleyan Missionary Societies are aiding by their efforts in promoting the happiness and prosperity of the colony; education is rapidly extending, and numbers of degraded negroes are rising into respectability and even wealth. Freetown is the capital.

Sierra Morena, mountains of Spain, diving Andalusia from Estremadura and New Castile, rendered famous by the wars of the Christians and Mahometans, and for being the scene where Cervantes has placed the most entertaining adventures of his hero.

had its name from a mine of lead and silver, the working of which has been discontinued, 11 m. N. N. E. of Glatz.

Silchester, a village in Hampshire, Eng. once a celebrated city. There are considerable remains of its walls and ditches, enclosing an area of 80 acres; and two military roads from the S. gate, one to Winchester, and the other to Old Sarum 6 m. N. of Basingstoke.

Silesia, a province of the Prussian states, formerly belonging to the kingdom of Bohemia. It is 200 m. long and 170 broad; bounded on the N. by Brandenburg, E. by Poland, S. by Moravia, and W. by Bohemia, from which it is separated by a long chain of mountains: the highest, called Zotenburg, is in the principality of Schweidnitz. There are mines of coal, lead, copper, and iron, and quarries of various stones, besides antimony, saltpetre, sulphur, alum, vitriol, quicksilver, agate, jasper, and even some gems. The principal rivers are the Oder, Bober, Neisse, Queis, and Oppa. The chief manufacture is linen cloth, the annual value of which has been estimated at upwards of £1,500,000 sterling; there are also some woollen manufactures, potteries, iron foundries, and glass-houses. In this country are a great number of cattle, large studs of horses, and plenty of game in the woods; also a few lynxes, bears, foxes, otters, and beavers. There are many lakes, full of pike, carp, and other good fish; also plenty of bees, which produce much honey and wax. Wheat, maize, barley, oats, millet, and in some places saffron, are cultivated; but its wine is bad, and chiefly used for vinegar. Silesia was formerly divided into Upper and Lower. The former comprising the S. part, where the inhabitants are generally Roman Catholics, and speak the Polish language: in the latter, they are almost all Protestants, and speak their mother tongue. The county of Glatz, and a portion of Lusatia, are now annexed to this province, which forms a military division along with Posen, and is divided into the governments of Breslau, Liegnitz, Oppeln, and Reichenbach. This country was ceded to the king of Prussia, in 1742, by the treaty of Breslau. In 1807 it was overrun by the French, but was restored to Prussia at the peace of Tilsit. Breslau is the capital.

Silhet, a town of Bengal, capital of a district of the same name, seated on the Soorna, 120 m. N. E. of Dacca.

Sitistria, or Dristra, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, and an archbishop's see, with a citadel. It is seated on the Danube, at the influx of the Missovo, 155 m. N. N. E. of Adrianople. Long. 27. 6. E., lat. 44. 15. N.

The Mahometans hold it in great veneration; and here the Greek Christians have a monastery, surrounded by a high wall, and those who go in and out are drawn up and let down in baskets. Long. 34. 15. E., lat. 29. 2. N.

Sinca pour, an island at the southern extremity of the peninsula of Malaya, from which it is separated by a narrow channel, and to the S. it gives name to the narrow sea, called the strait of Sinca pour. It has a town of the same name. Long. 103. 15. E., lat. 1. 10. N.

Sinde, a river of Asia. See Indus.

Sindelfingen, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, 10 m. S. S. W. of Stuttgart.

Sindy, or Sinde, a province of Hindoostan bounded on the W. by Persia, N. by the territories of the king of Kandahar, N. E. by those of the Seiks, E. by a sandy desert, and S. E. by Cutch. It extends along the course of the Indus, from its mouth to the frontiers of Moultan, 300 m.; and its breadth, in the widest part, is 160. In soil, and climate, and the general appearance of the surface, it resembles Egypt—the country being an extended valley, confined on one side by a ridge of mountains, and on the other by a desert; and the Indus, equal at east to the Nile, winding through the midst of this level valley, and enriching it by its annual inundations. During great part of the S. W. monsoon, or at least in July, August, and part of September (the rainy season in most other parts of India) the atmosphere is here generally clouded; but no rain falls, except near the sea. Owing to this, and the neighbourhood of the sandy deserts on the E. and on the N. W., the heats are so violent, and the winds from those quarters so pernicious, that the houses are contrived so as to be occasionally ventilated by apertures on the top, resembling the funnels of small chimneys. When the hot winds prevail, the windows are closely shut, excluding the hottest current of air, and a cooler part descends into the house through the funnels. By this means are also excluded vast clouds of dust, the entrance of which would alone be sufficient to render the houses uninhabitable. The roofs are composed of thick layer of earth instead of terraces. Few countries are more unwholesome to European constitutions, particularly the lower part called the Delta. The Hindoos, who were the original inhabitants of Sindy, have been treated with great rigor by the Mahometan governors, and vast numbers have in consequence retired into other countries. The inland parts of Sindy produce saltpetre, sal-ammoniac, borax, bezoar, lapis-lazuli, and raw silk. Here are manufactures of cotton and silk of various kinds; and also of fine cabinets, inlaid with ivory, and finely lacquered. Great quantities of butter are exported, which is clarified and wrapt up in duppas, made of the hides of cattle. Here are large beeves, fine sheep, and small hardy horses. The wild game are deer, hares, antelopes, and foxes, which are hunted with dogs; also leopards, and a small fierce creature called a sialgosh. This province is now governed by three chiefs, called ameeris, tributary to the sultan of Kandahar. The Bombay government sent an embassy to the chiefs in 1808; and the E. India Company have now a native agent, or chargé d'affaires, residing at the fort of Hydrabad.

Sines, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, on a cape to which it gives name, 74 m. S. W. of Evora. Long. 8. 46. W., lat. 37. 58. N.

Sing, a strong town of Austrian Dalmatia, built by the Turks in opposition to Clissa, and taken by the Venetians in 1686. 8 m. N. of Clissa, and 14 of Spalatro.

Sin-gan, a city of China, in the province of Chen-si, and one the largest and most beautiful in the empire. The walls are 12 m. in circuit, nearly a square, and surrounded by a deep ditch; they are well fortified with towers and some of the gates are very lofty and magnificent. It has a great trade, especially in mules, which are bred up in great numbers and sent to Pekin. Here is a strong garrison of Tartars in a separate quarter of the city, from which it is parted by a strong wall 540 m. S. W. of Pekin. Long. 108. 4. E., lat. 35. 16. N.

Singilief, a town of Russia, in the government of Simbirsk, situate on the Volga, 24 m. S. of Simbirsk.

Singor, a town in the peninsula of Malacca, seated at the mouth of a small river, in the bay of Pataani. Long. 101. 25. E., lat. 6. 40. N.

Sing Sing, p.v. Westchester Co. N. Y. on the Hudson, 33 m. above New York. Here is the new State Prison, a large edifice built of hewn granite.

Sinigaglia, a strong seaport of Italy, in the duchy of Urbino, with a castle and two harbours. It is the see of a bishop, and contains several fine churches and convents, and a mint. An annual fair is held here from the middle to the end of July, frequented by merchants from distant parts. It stands at the mouth of Nigola, in the gulf of Venice, 17 m. S. E. of Pesaro. Long. 13. 15. E., lat. 43. 43. N.

Sin-ning, a city of China, of the second rank, in the western extremity of the province of Chen-si. It has a considerable trade with the Tibetans, particularly in tea. 450 m. W. N. W. of Sing-an. Long. 101. 35. E., lat. 36. 45. N.

Sinking Spring, p.v. Highland Co. Ohio.

Sinob, or Sinope, a sea-port of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, surrounded by walls and double ramparts; but the castle is much neglected. Diogenes the cynic philosopher was born here. It is seated on the isthmus of a peninsula, in the Black Sea, 280 m. E. of Constantinople. Long. 33. 55. E., lat. 41. 5. N.

Sioux, Indians, the most powerful tribe in N. America. They consist of seven independent bands, each under its own chief; but they are united in a confederacy for the protection of their territories, and send deputies to a general council of chiefs and warriors, whenever the concerns of the nation require it. They inhabit with trifling exceptions all the country between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, south of N. lat. 46. Their country includes also large tracts south of the Missouri and east of the Mississippi. They are brave, spirited, and generous, with proud notions of their origin as a tribe, and their superiority as hunters and warriors, and with a predominant passion for war. Their number is stated by Pike at 21, 675, of whom 3,800 were warriors.

Sintzheim, a town of Baden, seated in a morass, 12 m. S. S. E. of Hiedelberg.

Sion, a mountain of Palestine, on the S. side of Jerusalem, of great celebrity in sacred history.

Sion, or Sitten, a town of Switzerland, capital of Valais, and an episcopal see. It is situate on the river Sitten, near the Rhone, at the foot of three insulated rocks, which rise immediately from the plain. On the highest, called Tourbillon, is the old deserted episcopal palace; on the second, denominated Valeria, are the remains of the cathedral, and a few houses belonging to the canons; on Majoria, the third rock, stands the present episcopal palace. Sion was formerly the capital of the Seduni, and some Roman inscriptions still remain. 50 m. E. of Geneva. Long. 7. 22. E., lat. 46. 9. N.

Siout or Osiot, a town of Egypt, which has several mosques, and is the see of a Coptic bishop. It is surrounded by fine gardens, and palm-trees that bear the best dates in Egypt. Here are the ruins of an amphitheatre and some sepulchres of the Romans. This place is the rendezvous of those who go in the caravan to Sennaar, in Nubia. It stands on an artificial mount, 2 m. from the Nile, and one 85 S. of Cairo. Long. 31. 24 E., lat. 27. 25. N.

Siphanto, the ancient Siphnos, one the best cultivated islands of the Grecian Archipelago, situate W. of Paros. It is 36 m. in circumference and, though covered with marble and granite, produces corn sufficient for its inhabitants, also olives, vines, figs, cotton, and excellent silk, but not in any considerable quantity. The chief articles of commerce are calicoes, straw hats, figs, onions, honey, wax, oil, and capers. Long. 25. 15. E., lat. 37. 9. N.

Sir Charles Hardy's Island, an island in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Carteret in 1767. It is low, level, and covered with wood. Long. 154. 20. E., lat. 4. 41. S.

Sir Charles Saunders's Island, an island in the S. Pacific, about 6 m. in extent from E. to W., discovered by captain Wallis in 1767. The natives then appeared to live in a wretched manner, but the introduction of Christianity has since produced the most surprising improvements. See Society Isles. Long. 151. 4. W., lat. 17. 28. S.

Siradia, a town of Prussian Poland, with a strong castle. It is surrounded by a wall, and seated in a plain, on the river Wafta, 62 m. N. E. of Breslau, and 105 N. W. of Cracow. Long. 18. 55. E., lat. 51. 32. N.

Siraf, a town of Persia, in the province of Laristan, situate on the Persian gulf, 30 m. S. W. of Lar. Long. 43. 23. E., lat. 35. 20. N.

Siracem, a town of Persia, in Kusistan, 48 m. N. N. E. of Suster.

Sire, a town of Abyssinia, in Tigre, famous for a manufacture of coarse cotton cloths. 40 m. W. of Axum and 100 W. N. W. of Auzen.

Sirhind, a city of Hindoostan, capital of a country of the same name, in the province of Delhi. Procopius takes notice that in the time of Justinian (the sixth century) silk was brought from Serinda, a country in India. 175 m. N. W. of Delhi. Long. 75. 35. E., lat. 30. 15. N.

Sirian, a sea-port of Pegu, frequented by the French, English, and Dutch. It is seated on Pegu River, 30 m. from its mouth, and 80 S. of Pegu. Long. 96. 12. E., lat. 16. 32. N.

Sirius, an island in the S. Pacific, about 18 m. in circuit, discovered by lieutenant Ball in 1790. Long. 162. 30. E., lat. 10. 52. S.

Sirmich, or Sirmianum, a town of Sclavonia, and a bishop's see; seated on the Bosworth, near the Save, 42 m. S. E. of Essek. Long. 20. 19. E., lat. 45. 13. N.

Sirovey, a town of Hindoostan, in a district of the same name, in Agimere; seated near the Puddar, 70 m. S. W. of Agimere. Long. 74. 27. E., lat. 26. 1. N.

Sirpu, a town and fort of Hindoostan, in Mysore, 14 m. N. of Sera and 37 S. E. of Chittel-droog.

Sirr, or Sihon, a river of Independent Tartary (the ancient Jaxartes), which issues from the mountains of Imaus, or Belur, on the confines of Cashgur, and, taking a N. W. course of about 550 m. enters the N. E. part of the lake Aral. It formerly flowed to the Caspian Sea, but the Tartars, to free themselves from pirates turned its course.

Sisizon, a sea-port on the E. coast of Luconia, one of the Philippine islands. It is situate almost opposite Manilla and in the vicinity of very high mountains, which render the air extremely moist. Long. 123. 45. E., lat. 14. 20. N.

Sissac, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Basel, 17 m. S. E. of Basel.

Sissek, or Siszeg, a strong town of the Austrian states, in Croatia, situate on the Save, at the influx of the Kulpa, 40 m. E. of Carlstadt. Long. 16. 56. E., lat. 45. 33. N.

Sittiracca, a village of Ceylon, the chief place of intercourse between the Candians and their European neighbours, 23 m. E. of Colombo.

Sivas, a city of Asia Minor, and the see of a bishop, with a castle. It is noted as the theatre of the great contest between Timur and Bajazet, in which the latter was finally defeated and taken prisoner, 180 m. W. S. W. of Erzerum and 210 m. E. N. E. of Cogni. Long. 33. 40. E., lat. 38. 55. N.

Sirray, or Cirray, a town of France, department of Vienne, seated on the Charente, 27 m. S. of Poitiers.

Siry, a town of Belgium, in Hainault, with 2,500 inhabitants, 13 m. S. W. of Charleroi.

Sivah, a territory of Africa, on the confines of Egypt and Barca, mentioned by the ancients under the name of the Oasis of Ammon. The fertile part is about 20 m. in circumference, containing several villages, besides the capital. It affords abundance of vegetable productions, with corn and oil; and is well supplied with water from small streams, but none of them flow beyond its territory, being either evaporated before they reach the surrounding desert or lost in the sterile sand. The capital, of the same name, contains the ruins of the celebrated temple of Jupiter Ammon; and in the neighbourhood are many catacombs, which were the burying places of the ancient inhabitants. It is the theatre of considerable trade, being situate on the great caravan route, 220 m. E. of Angila and 250 W. by S. of Cairo. Long. 27. 10. E., lat. 29. 12. N.

Skara, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland, a bishop's see, and formerly the capital of the kingdom of Gothland. It was totally destroyed by fire in 1719. The ruins of several churches and convents are still to be seen, and it has a college, a botanical garden, a medical school, and a large cathedral. It is seated on the Lida, on a morass, 77 m. N. E. of Gotheburg. Long. 14. 0. E., lat. 58. 16. N.

Skeen, a town of Norway, in the government of Agerhuys, noted for its mines of iron and copper; seated near a lake, 26 m. S. W. of Rongsburg.

Skaneateles, a lake of Newyork in Onondaga,

Cayuga and Cortland Cos. It is 15 m. long and 1 1-2 wide: it discharges its waters into L. Ontario. Skaneateles, p.v. Onondaga Co. N. Y. on the above lake. 152 m. W. Albany.

Skeensborough. See Whitehall.

Skiddaw, a mountain in Cumberland, Eng. near Keswick, above 3,000 feet in perpendicular height from the surface of the lake Derwentwater, to the N. of which it is situate. It is not difficult of access, and is almost covered with grass, which gradually grows coarser in the ascent. The whole top is covered with a loose brown slaty stone.

Skilskuer a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, situate on a bay of the Great Belt, 52 m. S. W. of Copenhagen. Long. 11. 27. E., lat. 55. 16. N.

Skippack, p.t. Montgomery Co. Pa.

Skipton, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. The river Aire and the Leeds and Liverpool canal pass through the town, and near it are some cotton works. It is seated in the midst of a rough mountainous district, called Craven, well adapted to the grazing and feeding of cattle. 211 m. N. N. W. of London.

Skye, an islsnd of Scotland, one of the largest of the Hebrides, being 54 m. long and from 3 to 30 broad. The S. E. end is separated from Inverness-shire (to which it belongs) by a channel called the Inner Sound; in the narrowest part of which, named the Kyle, cattle are made to swim across. This side of the island swells gradually from the shore, in a verdant slope, over which are seen the naked hills of Strath; and above these rises the rugged top of Cullin or Cuchullin. Towards the S. W. are rude mountains, black and red, as if discolored by fire; and on the E. a long extent of lofty hills. There is, notwithstanding, a great portion of level ground, with excellent pasturage; and it has numbers of deer and different kinds of game. It abounds with limestone, marble, &c., but the basaltic columns, resembling the Giants's Causeway in Ireland, are its greatest curiosity. A cave in this island afforded an asylum, in 1746, to the disappointed Pretender and his faithful guide, for two nights. Many thousands of beeves and sheep are annually exported hence. Some small horses are bred, and a great quantity of kelp is manufactured here. Portree is the principal town. The S. extremity is a peninsula, terminating in a rugged promontory called the Point of Slate. Long. 6. 12. W., lat. 57. 12. N.

Slagelse, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, 45. m. W. S. W. of Copenhagen.

Slaguen, a town of Prussian Pomerania, seated on the Wipper, 10 m. E. by S. of Rugenwald.

Slitwaite a village in W. Yorkshire, Eng. on the Huddersfield canal, with manufactures of the various Manchester goods. 5 m. S. W. of Huddersfield.

Slatersville, p.v. Providence Co. R. I. 12 m. N. W. Providence. Here are large manufactures of cotton.

Slaterville, p.v. Tompkins Co. N. Y.

Slatina, a town of European Turkey, in Wallachia, on the river Alaut, 50 m. W. of Bucharest.

Slave coast, a name given to a maritime tract of Guinea, between the Gold coast and Benin, comprehending the kingdoms of Ardra, Popo, and Whidah.

Slave lake, a lake of N. America, 250, m. In length from E. to W., and 60 to 100 in width. It is full of wooded islands, and its outlet at the W. extremity, in long. 119. 30. W., lat. 61. 30. N., flows N. W. into the Arctic Ocean.

Sleaford, New, a town in Lincolnshire, Eng. with a market on Monday. It is a well built and flourishing town, and contains a handsome Gothic church, 113 m. N. of London. The hamlet of Old Sleaford is about a mile distant.

Sleswick, a duchy of the Danish dominions, bounded N. by Jutland, S. by Holstein, and E. and W. by the sea. It is about 72 m. long and from 30 to 56 broad. Having no mountains, and few elevations entitled to the name of hills, most parts of it are fit for tillage. The products are wheat, barley, oats, rye, hemp, flax, &c. It has good pasture, on which are bred horses and horned cattle. Woolen and linen are the chief manufactures, which are carried on, not in collective establishments, but in the cottages of the manufacturers. Fishing forms a considerable occupation on the coast, as well as in the arms of the sea.

Sleswick, the capital of the foregoing duchy, is a long irregular town. The houses are chiefly of wood, and few are more than one story high, but very neat. The inhabitants dress like the Dutch; and many of them speak their tongue, though the usual languages are the German and Danish. The buildings most worthy of notice are the cathedral, with its altar and the monuments of the princes, the five churches, the town-house, the orphan-house, and the nunnery of St. John. Near the city is the old ducal palace of Gottorp. Sleswick has manufactures of refined sugar, earthenware, leather, and sail-cloth, and is situate on the N. side of an arm of the Baltic, called the Sley, 60 m. N. W. of Lubeck, and 125 S. W. of Copenhagen. Long. 9. 40. E., lat. 54. 35. N.

Sigo, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, 39 miles long and nearly as broad; bounded on the E. by Leitrim, S. E. by Roscommon, S. W. and W. by Mayo, and N. by the Atlantic. It is divided into 39 parishes, contains about 269 square miles with 146,29 inhabitants, and sends three members to parliament. The soil is in general fertile, but rather boggy towards the coast.

Sigo, a borough of Ireland, capital of the preceding county, and a place of considerable trade, seated near the mouth of a river which flows from Lough Gill into the bay of Shigo, 42 miles N. by W. of Roscommon and 100 N. W. of Dublin. Long. 9. 18. W., lat. 54. 15. N.

Sipperry Rock, a township of Butler Co. Pa. A township of Mercer Co. Pa. both on a creek of the same name.

Souville, p.v. Schoharie Co. N. Y. 48 m. W. Albany.

Slonim, a town of Russian Lithuania, in the government of Grodno, with a castle, seated on the Sezraa, 40 miles S. W. of Novogrodeck and 60 S. E. of Grodno. Long. 24. 57. E., lat. 53. 0. N.

Sloten, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in Friesland, seated on the rivulet Ee, which flows into the Zuider Zee, 3 miles E. of Staveren, and 20 S. S. W. of Lewarden.

Sluck, a town of Russian Lithuania, in the government of Minsk, with three Greek churches; seated on the river Sluck, 52 miles S. of Minsk. Long. 27. 54. E., lat. 52. 30. N.

Sluys, a town of Belgium in Flanders, opposite the island of Cadsand, with a good harbour. It has its name from its fine sluices, by which the whole country may be laid under water. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1587, retaken by the Dutch in 1604, and taken by the French in 1794. 10 miles N. of Bruges. Long. 3. 25. E., lat. 51. 19. N.

Smaland, a province of Sweden, in Gothland, lying between the Baltic and the province of Halland. Its area, is 7,750 square miles: its population 315,000. It is well watered, both by rivers and lakes, but great part of it consists of marshes, heaths, and barren rocks. In some parts are immense forests of pine and fir; and the approach to the villages is announced by groves of oak, beech, and birch, and numerous plots of arable. Calmar is the capital.

Smalkalden, a town of Germany, in a district of its name, belonging to Hesse-Cassel. It is famous for the league entered into by the Lutherans, against the emperor, in 1531, to defend their religion and liberties. It has a fine castle on a mountain, and in the vicinity are salt-pits and mines of iron. It stands on a river of the same name, which flows into the Werra, 25 miles S. W. of Erfurt and 56 of Hesse-Cassel. Long. 10. 47. E., lat. 50. 45. N.

Smithport, p.v. McKean Co. Pa. 204 m. N. W. Harrisburg.

Smith, a county of W. Tennessee. Pop. 21,492. Carthage is the capital. A township of Washington Co. Pa. and Belmont Co. Ohio.

Smithfield, p.t. Providence Co. R. I. 9 m. N. W. Providence. Pop. 3,994. Here are manufactures of cotton, paper, muskets, sithes, &c. Within the limits of the town are quarries of limestone and whetstone; p.t. Madison Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,636. Towns and villages in Bradford Somerset, Fayette, Northampton and Pike Cos. Pa. Isle of Wight Co. Va. Johnson Co. N. C. Jefferson Co. Ohio and Hopkins and Livingston Co. Ken.

Smith Grove, p.v. Warren Co. Ken.

Smithborough, p.v. Tioga Co. N. Y.

Smithtown, p.t. Suffolk Co. N. Y. on Long Island. Pop. 1,686.

Smithville, a township of Chenango Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,829; p.v. Jefferson Co. N. Y. 10. m. from Sacketts Harbour; p.v. Brunswick Co. N. C. near the mouth of Cape Fear River.

Smockville, p.v. Jefferson Co. Indiana.

Smolensk, a government of Russia, on the frontiers of Lithuania. After having been an object of contention, and reciprocally possessed by Poland and Russia, it was conquered by Alexay Michalovitch in 1654, and ceded to Russia by the peace of Moscow in 1666. It contains an area of 21,409 square miles with 1,050,000 inhabitants; and is fertile in corn, hemp, and flax. Horses, black cattle, and sheep, are numerous. The principal rivers are the Duna, Dnieper, Desna, Sosha, Kasplia, and Viasma.

Smolensk, a city of Russia, capital of the foregoing government, is situate on the Dnieper, and extends over two mountains and the valley between them. It is surrounded by walls 30 feet high and 15 thick; the lower part of stone, the upper of brick, and their circumference 4 m. and three quarters. The houses are mostly of wood and only one story high, except a few, scattered here and there, which are dignified with the title of palaces. The city is divided, through its whole length, by one straight paved street; the others are circular, and floored with planks. The cathedral stands on an eminence, where there is a view of the whole city. Notwithstanding its extent, it contains only about 13,000 inhabitants, and has no considerable manufactures, but carries on with Dantzic, Riga, and the Ukraine, a traffic in linen hemp, honey, wax, leather, furs, &c. In 1812 several severe engagements were fought in the neighbourhood of this city between the French and Russian armies, in one of which it sustained a bombardment, which destroyed most of the buildings, 197 m. N. E. of Novo-gorodeck and 235 W. S. W. of Moscow. Long. 32. 14. E., lat. 54. 50.

Smyghusen, a town of Denmark, in the duchy of Holstein, 16 m. W. of Rendsburg.

Smyrna, a sea-port of Asia Minor, and one of the largest and richest cities of the Levant. The goodness of the harbour has caused it to be rebuilt several times after having been destroyed by earthquakes. It is the rendezvous of merchants from almost all parts of the world, and the magazine of their merchandize. The population is computed at 120,000 persons. The streets are more open, better paved, and the houses better built than in any other towns on the continent. The street of the Franks is the finest in Smyrna, and lies all along the harbour. The imports from England consist of woolen cloths, camlets, lead, tin, and hardware; these are exchanged for cotton, coffee, mohair, drugs, gall, raisins, figs, &c. The English and Dutch factors have protestant chapels, and taverns are as open here as in Europe. The fortifications consist of a fort, a castle, a mountain, and an old citadel. Smyrna is eight days' journey from Constantinople by land, 25 days from Aleppo by the caravans, six from Cogni, seven from Cataya, and six from Satalia; and is seated at the head of a large bay, 190 m. S. S. W. of Constantinople. Long. 27. 7. E., lat. 38. 23. N.

Smyrna, p.t. Chenango Co. N. Y. 105 m. W. Albany. Pop. 1,897; p.v. Kent. Co. Del. 12 m. S. Dover.

Smythfield, p.v. Somerset Co. Pa.

Snaitz, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. 175 m N. by W. of London.

Snapsville, p.v. Chesterfield Co. Va.

Snack or Snitz, a fortified town of Holland, in Friesland, seated on a lake of the same name, in marshy land, 12 m. S. S. W. of Lewardun.

Sneedsborough, p.t. Anson Co. N. C. 100 m. S. W. Raleigh.

Snoirne, a town of Prussia in the province of Irac, 57 m. W. N. W. of Amadan.

Sniatin, a town of Austrian Galicia, on the river Pruth, 23 m. W. of Czernowitz. Long. 22. 59. E., lat. 48. 33. N.

Snowden, a mountain of Wales, in the centre of Caernarvonshire, and the most noted in the whole region of the Welsh hills. It has several craggy summits, deep dells, moors, and chasms; also two lakes that abound with fish, particularly the char and the guinard. The height of this mountain, from the quay of Caernarvon, to its highest peak, is 3,658 feet. It was held sacred by the ancient Britons as Parnassus was by the Greeks. Pieces of lava, and groups of columnar stones of vast size, have been found lying in all directions on the summit of this mountain, which commands a delightful and extensive view. In a clear day, and when the mountain is free from clouds, a part of Ireland, and of Scotland, the Isle of Man, the mountains of Westmoreland and Cumberland, parts of Lancashire and Cheshire, and all N. Wales, the Irish and British seas, and a vast number of lakes, may be seen from its summits.

Snow Hill, p.t. Worcester Co. Maryland. on Potomac River. 120 m. S. Philad. It is a port of entry and has considerable commerce; p.v. Green Co. N. C. 96 m. S. E. Raleigh; p.v. Clinton Co. Ohio.

Soane, a river of Hindoostan, which issues from a lake, on the S. confines of Allahabad, the same that is the source of the Nerbudda, and, flowing in an opposite direction to that river, enters the Ganges, above Patna.

Sobernheim, a town of Prussia, in the province of Lower Rhine; seated on the Nahe, 11 m. W. by S. of Creutznach.

Sibiulan, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Bechin, with good cloth manufacture, 12 m. E. S. E. of Bechin.

Subotka, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Buntzlau, 8 m. E. by N. of Jung Buntzlau.

Society Isles, islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Cook in 1769, and situated between 150. 57. and 152. 0. W. long., and 16. 10. and 16. 55. S. lat. They are seven in number; namely Huaine, Raiatea, Tahaa, Borabora, Maurua, Tubai, and Sir C. Saunder's Island. The soil, productions, &c., are nearly the same as at Otaheite. Nature has been equally bountiful in uncultivated plenty, and the inhabitants are as luxurious and as indolent. They are generally above the middle stature; but their limbs are less muscular and firm than those of the Sandwich islanders, whom in many respects they resemble. Though more robust than the Marquesans, they are inferior in size and physical power to the New Zealanders. In person they resemble the Friendly islanders as much as any others in the Pacific. Their limbs are well formed, and they are generally active in their movements, graceful and stately in their gait, and perfectly unembarrassed in their address. They are remarkably curious and inquisitive, and compared with other Polynesian nations, may be said to possess considerable ingenuity and mechanical skill. Totally unacquainted, till recently, with the use of letters, their minds could not be improved by any regular or continued culture; yet the distinguishing features of their civil polity—the imposing nature, numerous observances, and diversified ramifications of their mythology—the legends of their gods—the historical songs of their bards—the beautiful, figurative, and impassioned eloquence sometimes displayed in their national assemblies—and, above all, the copiousness, variety, precision, and purity of their language, together with their extensive use of numbers—warranted the conclusion that they possessed no contemptible mental capacities. This conclusion has been abundantly confirmed since the establishment of schools and the introduction of letters. Multitudes, who were upwards of 30 or 40 years of age when they commenced with the alphabet, have in 12 months learned to read distinctly in the New Testament, large portions of which, some of them have in a short period committed to memory. The missionaries, who for a long time laboured in these islands amidst discouragement and disappointment, have at length witnessed the complete abandonment of idolatry. Christianity is now universally professed, and the moral character of the people has been raised by it to a high degree of excellence. It is stated that in 1829 not fewer than 10,000 persons had learned to read the Scriptures.

Society Land, a township of Hillsborough Co. N. H. 25 m. S. W. Concord. Pop. 164.

Soconey, p.v. Pendleton Dis. S. C.

Soconusco, a province of Guatemala, 88 m. long and nearly as many broad; bounded on the N by Chiapa, E. by Guatemala, S. by the Pacific Ocean, and W. by Guaxaca. The soil is not very fertile, and, being sheltered from the N. winds by high mountains, the air is exceedingly hot and unhealthy.

Socunusco, or Gucrellan, the capital of the foregoing province, is seated on a small river, near the Pacific Ocean, 460 m. S. E. of Mexico.

Socotara, or Socotra, an island in the Indian Ocean, lying about 45 leagues from cape Gardafan on the coast of Africa. It is 80 m. long and 22 broad, abounds in fruit and cattle, and is particularly noted for its fine aloes, known by the name of Socotrine aloes. The natives are chiefly Mahometans, and are governed by a king who depends on Arabia. Tamara is the capital.

Sodbury, or Chipping Sodbury, a town in Gloucestershire, Eng. 110 m. W. of London.

Sodor, a village in the celebrated island of Icolmkill, one of the Hebrides of Scotland. It was formerly a bishop's see, which comprehended all the islands, together with the Isle of Man: the bishop of Man is still called bishop of Sodor and Man.

Sodus, p.t. in Ontario Co. N. Y. situate on the S. side of Lake Ontario, on a bay 7 m. long and 3 broad, which forms an excellent harbour when the rest of the lake is agitated by a storm. It is 80 m. E. of Niagara. Long. 77.5. W., lat. 43. 10. N.

Sueborg, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, situate on an island in a fresh-water lake, 15 m. W. N. W. of Elsinore.

Suest, a large town of Prussian Westphalia, in the government of Arensburg, with a good trade in corn, 12 m. W. S. W. of Lipstadt, and 30 S. E. of Munster.

Sofala, a kingdom on the E. coast of Africa, bounded on the W. and N. by the states of Mocaranga, E. by the Mozambique Channel, and S. by Sabia. It is about 150 m. along the coast, and 250 up the country. The country is wild and thinly inhabited, but contains rich mines of fine gold.

Sofala, the capital of the above kingdom, with a fort built by the Portuguese, which is of great importance for their trade to the E. Indies. It is seated on a small island, near the mouth of the Cuama. Long. 35. 40. E., lat. 20. 22. S.

Sofia, or Sophia, a city of European Turkey, capital of Bulgaria, and an archbishop's see. The trade is considerable, and the inhabitants are computed at 70,000, but the houses are meanly built. It is seated at the foot of the mountains of Argentario, on the river Bogana, 160 m. W. N. W. of Adrianople. Long. 23. 52. E., lat. 43. 0. N.

Sofroy, a town of the kingdom of Fez, noted for a very handsome mosque. It is seated on a hill, at the foot of a mountain of the same name, part of Mount Atlas, and between two rivers, 12 m. E. of Fez.

Sogno, a town of Africa, capital of a province of the same name, in the kingdom of Congo. The inhabitants are said to be Christians, converted by the Portuguese, and the Capuchins have a church here. It is seated on the Zaire, near its mouth, 160 m. W. S. W. of St. Salvador. Long. 11. 55. E., lat. 6. 0. S.

Sohagepour, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district in the province of Allahabad. 130 m. S. of Allahabad. Long. 81. 52. E., lat. 23. 30. N.

Soham, a town in Cambridgeshire, Eng. seated on a fen of the same name, near Soham-mere, which takes up 1,000 acres of land. 5 m. S. E. of Ely and 70 N. by E. of London.

Soho, a village in Staffordshire, Eng. 2 m. N. W. of Birmingham. It was founded by Mr. Boulton, for the manufacture of every article common to the Birmingham trade, the plated ware usually made at Sheffield, and of elegant pieces of silver: both light and massive. Here also are made the improved steam engines now adopted in numerous concerns throughout the kingdom. In 1797 an apparatus for the coinage of copper was employed here by government; and the Bank of England dollars were also stamped at this mint.

Soignies, a town of Belgium in Hainault, near a forest of its name, on the river Senne, 8 m. N. N. E. of Mons.

Soissonnois, a territory of France, in the Isle of France, which, with that of Vermandois, now forms the department of Aisne. It abounds in corn, wood, and pastures.

Soissons, a city of France, in the department of Aisne, anciently the capital of a kingdom of its name. It is a bishop's see; and the cathedral has one of the most considerable chapters in the kingdom. Here St. Louis, Philip the bold, and Louis XIV., were crowned. The castle, though ancient, is not that in which the kings of the first race resided. The inhabitants carry on manufactures of coarse linen, stockings, thread, leather, ropes, &c., and some trade in corn. Soissons was repeatedly taken and retaken by the allied and French armies in 1814, when the town sustained considerable injury. It is seated in a fertile valley, on the river Aisne, 30 m. W. by N. of Rheims and 60 N. E. of Paris. Long. 3. 19. E., lat. 49. 23. N.

Solanto, a town of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, which gives name to a cape and bay on the N. coast, 10 m. E. of Palermo.

Soldin, a town of Prussia, in the New Mark of Brandenburg, of which it was formerly the capital. It has cloth and woolen manufactures, and a trade in hops; and stands on a lake of the same name, 26 m. N. by E. of Custrin. Long. 15. 7. E., lat. 53. 2. N.

Solenaf, a salt-water lake of Independent Tartary, 80 m. long and 20 broad, lying midway between the Caspian Sea and Lake Aral.

Solesbury, a township of Bucks Co. Pa.

Soleure, or Solothurn, a canton of Switzerland, which stretches partly through the plain and partly along the chains of the Jura, 36 m. in length and 25 in breadth, and is very populous. The soil, for the most part, is fertile in corn; and the districts within the Jura abound in excellent pastures. In the mountainous parts are iron, lead, alabaster, marble, and coal. The inhabitants are nearly all Roman Catholics.

Soleure, the capital of the above canton, is surrounded by regular fortifications. The church of St. Urs is a noble edifice of a whitish-gray stone, drawn from the neighbouring quarries, which is a species of rude marble. The arsenal, and the town house (which has two towers) make a good appearance. Soleure stands in a delightful plain, on the river Aar, 18 m. N. of Bern and 30 S. S. W. of Basel. Long. 7. 30. E., lat. 47. 9. N.

Solfataras, or Lago di Bagni, a lake of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, near Tivoli, formerly called Lacus Albulus. In this lake are several floating islands, formed of matted sedge and herbage, with a soil of dust and sand blown from the adjacent ground, and glued together by the bitumen and sulphur with which its waters are impregnated. Some of these islands are 15 yards long, and will bear five or six people, who, by means of a pole may move to different parts of the lake. From this lake issues a whitish stream, which emits vapor of a sulphureous smell, till it reaches the Teverone. The water of this rivulet has a petrifying quality, which increases in strength the further it has flowed from the lake. Fish are found in the Teverone, both above and below Tivoli, till it receives this lake; after which, during the rest of its course to the Tiber, there are none.

Solfatara, a mountain of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, surrounded by other mountains, in the form of an amphitheatre. It has a kind of cavity, above a m. in diameter, which was no doubt the crater of a volcano now extinct. The earth here is warm and white; and if opened to some depth is insupportable from the heat and exhalations. The ground is almost every where hollow, and is supposed to have a subterraneous communication with Mount Vesuvius. Here are manufactures, of sulphur, vitriol, and alum.

Solimian, a sea-port of Africa, in Tunis, 20 m. E. S. E. of Tunis.

Solingen, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Berg, with manufactures of cutlery and all kinds of iron work; seated near the Wipper, 15 m. E. S. E. of Dusseldorf.

Solkamsk, a town of Russia, in the government of Perin, famous for its salt-pits and good horses; seated on the Ussolka, which flows into the Kama, 430 m. N. E. of Kasan. Long. 57. 26. E., lat. 59. 16. N.

Sollapour, a town of Hindoostan, in Visiapour, capital of a district celebrated for mines of diamonds. It is seated near the Kistna, 130 m. S. E. of Visiapour. Long. 77. 10. E., lat. 16. 23. N.

Solms, or Salms, a county of Germany, in Wetteravia, formerly a principality, but deprived of that rank in 1815. It is subject in part to Hesse-Darmstadt and in part to Prussia. The decayed castle of Solms, the seat of the ancient counts, is seated on a hill, 1 m. E. of Braunfels, the present capital.

Solomon Islands. See Danger, Isles of.

Solomon Town, an Indian settlement in Ohio, near the head of the Great Miami, 17 m. S. Fort Mc Arthur.

Solon, p.t. Somerset Co. Me. on the Kennebec, 18 m. above Norridgewock. Pop. 768; p.t. Cortland Co. N. Y. 132 m. W. Albany. Pop. 2,033; a township in Cuyahoga Co. Ohio.

Solor, an island of the E. Indies, 70 m. in circuit, to the S. of Celebes and W. of Flores. Long. 123. 53. E., lat. 9. 0. S.

Solre le Chateau, a town of France, department of Nord, 7. m. S. E. of Maubeuge.

Solserina, a town of Italy, in the province of Mantua, 17 m. N. W. of Mantua.

Solsona, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, and a bishop's see; seated at the foot of a mountain, 51 m. N. N. W. of Barcelona.

Soltaw, a town of Hanover, on the river Bohme, 28 m. N. N. W. of Zell.

Soltcamp, a town of the Netherlands, in Groningen, with a large fort, at the mouth of the river Hanse which is called Groningen Deep, 17 m. N. W. of Groningen.

Solway Frith, an arm of the sea, between Cumberland in England and Dumfriesshire and Kirkcubrightshire in Scotland. It is navigable for vessels of 100 tons within 6 m. of its extremity; and the fisheries, especially of salmon, are very considerable. At its head on the Cumberland side, near the river Esk, is Solway Moss. This was a level tract, above 2 m. long and 1 broad, but, in 1771, being swoln by rains, it burst out at the eastern extremity, and spread over a neighbouring valley; by this means the surface of the moss was reduced 24 feet, and sunk into its present hollow form.

Sombrere, one of the Nicobar Islands, in the Indian Ocean, 30 m. N. of Nicobar. It gives name to a channel nearly in the middle of those islands.

Sombrero, a cluster of uninhabited islands in the W. Indies, belonging to the English. The most remarkable of them is a league long, and consists of an eminence, to which the Spanish discoverers, finding some resemblance to a hat, gave the name of Sombrero. It is 80 m. N. W. of St. Christopher. Lon. 63. 37. W., lat. 18. 38. N.

Somers, p.t. Tolland Co. Conn. 25 m. N. E. Hartford. Pop. 1,439; p.t. Westchester Co. N. Y. Pop. 1997. A township of Buckingham Co. L. C.

Somerset, a county of Maine. Pop. 35,778. Norridgewock is the capital. A county of New Jersey. Pop. 17,689. Somersville is the capital.

A county of the W. District of Pennsylvania. Pop. 17,441. A county of Maryland. Pop. 29,155. Princess Anne is the capital.

Somerset, a township of Windham Co. Vt. Pop. 245; p.t. Bristol Co. Mass. 42 m. S. Boston. Pop. 1,024; p.v. Somerset and Washington Cos. Pa. Perry, Belmont and Franklin Cos. Ohio and Pulaski Co. Ken.

Somersetshire, a county of England, 65 m. long and 45 broad; bounded on the N. W. by the Bristol Channel. The chief manufactures are those of woolen, coarse linen, stockings, &c. Ilchester is usually considered the county town.

Somerton, a town in Somersetshire, Eng. 13 m. S. of Wells and 123 W. by S. of London.

Somersworth, p.t. Strafford Co. N. H. on the Piscataqua 12 m. above Portsmouth. Pop. 3,090. Here are large manufactures of cotton and woolen cloth and carpeting, employing a capital of above 1,000,000 dollars.

Somerton, p.v. Nansemond Co. Va. 124 m. S. E. Richmond.

Somerille, p.v. Somerset Co. N. J. on the Raritan, 16 m. above N. Brunswick; p.v. Fauquier Co. Va. 13 m. N. Richmond; p.v. Fayette Co. Pa; p.v. Morgan Co. Alab. 50 m. S. Huntsville.

Somma, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, with a castle. The vicinity annually produces above 7,000 pounds of silk of the best quality. It is seated at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, 10 m. E. of Naples.

Somme, a department of France, including part of the ancient province of Picardy. Its extent is about 2,400 square miles; its population 500,000 nearly all Catholics. It takes its name from a river which rises in the department of Aisne flows by St. Quentin, Peronne, Amiens, Abbeville, and St. Valery, and enters the English Channel. Amiens is the capital.

Sommelsdyck, a town of the Netherlands, in S. Holland, chief place of the island of Overflaeken, 5 m. E. S. E. of Helvoetsluys.

Sommerfeld, a town of Prussia, in Lusatia, with manufactures of fine cloths; seated on the Lupa, 15 m. S. S. W. of Crossen.

Sommieres, a town of France, department of Gard, with a manufacture of thick serges; seated on the Vidourle, 14 m. W. by S. of Nismes.

Somorrostro, a town of Spain, on the coast of Biscay, with a famous iron mine. 14 m. N. W. Bilbao.

Soncino, a town of Austrian Italy, in the Cremona.

Sonderborg, a sea-port of Denmark, in the island of Alsens, with one of the best harbours in Denmark, and a royal palace, in which Christian II. was confined as a prisoner for 13 years. It is 16 m. E. N. E. of Flendsburg. Long. 9. 49. E., lat. 54. 57. N.

Sondershausen, a town of Germany, capital of the lower county of Schwartzburg, with a fine castle on a mountain. It is situate on the Wipper, 24 m. N. of Erfurt.

Sondrio, a town of Switzerland, capital of a district in the Valteline. It stands in a romantic situation, at the extremity of a narrow valley, and occupies both sides of the Malenco, a furious torrent, which runs, into the Adda. 10 m. N. E. of Morbegno and 14 S. W. of Tirano

Sonepour, a town of Hindoostan, in Orissa, seated on the Mahanudda, 45 m. S. of Sunbulpour.

Song-kiang, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-nan. It has a large trade in cotton cloth, which is sent to different parts of the empire, and is situate amid several canals, near the sea, 560 m. S. of Pekin. Long. 120. 45. E., lat. 31. 0. N.

Sonneberg, a town of Germany, in Saxe-Meiningen, with a great trade in looking-glasses, nails, whet-stones, &c. 11 m. N. N. E. of Coburg.

Sonneberg, or Sonnenburg, a town of Prussia, in the New Mark of Brandenburg, with a castle. It stands on the Lenze, 9 m. E. of Castrin.

Sonnenwald, a town of Prussia, in Lusatia, on the river Dober, 12 m. S. W. of Luckau.

Sonora, a province of Mexico, on the E. side of the gulf of California. It comprises an area of 19,143 square leagues, with about 123,000 inhabitants, and is divided into the district of Sonora, Cinloa, and Ostimury. Rich mines of gold were discovered by the Spaniards, in 1771, in an expedition against some tribes of Indians. Arispe is the capital.

Sooloo, a chain of islands in the Eastern Indian Ocean, lying S. W. of Mindanao, almost midway between that island and Borneo. They are said to be 60 in number, and are named from the principal island, which is 36 m. long, and 12 broad, and contains about 60,000 inhabitants, who are Mahometans. It is governed by a sultan, but the legislative power resides in an assembly composed of the sultan and 15 nobles, the former having two votes. The situation of Sooloo renders it a great mart, particularly for pearls, sago, and edible birds'-nests. The chief town is Bewar, on the N. W. part of the island, where the English E. India Company have a resident. Long. 121. 15. E., lat. 5. 57. N.

Sonda, or Sudha, a town of Hindoostan, in Canara, capital of a district of its name. It was formerly an extensive and populous place. The space within the inner wall was 3 m. sq. and fully occupied by houses. When Hyder took possession, there still remained 10,000 houses; but the subsequent wars have reduced them under 100. It is seated above the Ghauts, on the Gangawali, 60 m. N. by W. of Nagara and 75 N. by S. of Kundapura.

Sophia, See Tafra.

Sophiania, a town of Persia, in Aderbeitzan, seated in a valley, 25 m. N. W. of Tauris.

Sophienberg, a town of Denmark, in Zealand with a royal palace, near the coast of the Sound, 13 m. N. of Copenhagen.

Sora, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, with a castle, seated on the Garigliano, 46 m. E by S. of Rome. Long. 14. 4. E., lat. 41. 54. N.

Soran, a town of Prussian Silesia, 21 m. E. of Ratibor.

Sorau, a town of Prussia, in Lusatia, with manufactures of cloth, and a trade in yarn and linen, 8 m. W. of Sagan.

Sorbon, or Sorbonne, a village of France, in the department of Ardennes, 6 m. N. of Rethel; famous for being the birth-place of Robert Sorbon, confessor to St. Louis, who founded the celebrated college at Paris, called after his name.

Sorel, a river of Lower Canada, which issues from Lake Champlain, and flows N. to the St. Lawrence, which it enters at the town of William Henry.

Sorvento, a sea-port of Naples, in Principato Citra, and an archbishop's see. It is the birth-place of Torquato Tasso, and stands on a peninsula, in the bay of Naples, at the foot of a mountain of its name, 17 m. S. by E. of Naples, Long. 14. 24. E., lat. 40. 36. N.

Soria, a province of Spain, in Old Castile, bounded on the E. by Navarre and Arragon. Its extent is about 4,300 sq. m.; its population 200,000. The breeding of sheep forms the principal object of attention, and there are a few manufactures of linen, woolen, paper, and leather.

Soria, the capital of the foregoing province, stands on the site of the ancient Numantia, near the source of the Duero, 74 m. E. S. E. of Burgos. Long. 2. 18. W. lat. 41. 50. N.

Soriano, a town of Naples, in Calabria, Ultra, 17 m. E. N. E. of Nicotera.

Saroo, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, with a royal college, endowed with the revenues of a once rich convent. 37 m. W. S. W. of Copenhagen.

Sosila, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, with a large fort, 25 m. S. E. of Seringapatam.

Sospetto, a town of the Sardinian states, in the county of Nice, with a trade in dried fruits, particularly figs; seated at the foot of three high mountains, on the river Bevera, 13 m. N. E. of Nice.

Soubise, a town of France, department of Lower Charente, 23 m. W. N. W. of Saintes.

Soudak, a town of the Crimea, with the remains of an old fort on a mountain close by the shore. It was formerly a considerable sea-port, and stands at the end of a valley, which produces the best grapes and wine in the whole peninsula, 26 m. S. W. of Caffa.

Soudan. See Negroland.

Souillac, a town of France, department of Lot, seated on the Borese, 32 m. N. of Cahors.

Sound, a strait between Sweden and Denmark, through which ships usually sail from the Categat into the Baltic. It is about 4 m. broad, and the Danes take a toll of all merchant ships that pass through the channel. See Elsinore.

Sour, a river of the Netherlands, which flows from N. to S., through Luxemburg, and enters the Moselle a little above Treves.

Sourabaya, a town of Java, capital of a district of the same name, on the N. E. coast. It is situate within the narrow strait formed by the islands of Java and Madura, and is defended by batteries. The houses are good, and some are elegant, particularly the country seats of private individuals. There is a fine arsenal with other extensive works, calculated for equipments on a very large scale. Vessels also, with their various appointments, are built and equipped at Sourabaya. A mint is likewise at work here, on a new silver and copper coinage. The French, when in possession of the island of Java, intended to have erected Sourabaya into a port of consequence; large sums were expended in the construction of works for the defence of the harbour, and General Daendols was proceeding in his plans when the island was taken by the British. It is seated on a river which separates the European part of the town from the Chinese and the native quarter. Long. 112. 55. E., lat. 7. 14. S.

Souri, a town of Persia, in Laristan, situate on the Persian gulf, 115 m. S. W. of Ormus. Long. 55. 30. E., lat. 26. 18. N.

Sou-tcheou, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiang-nan. It is so intersected by canals of fresh water that Europeans compare it to Venice. The country round it is almost unequalled in point of fertility, in consequence of which the Chinese call this city the paradise of the world. The brocades and embroideries made here are esteemed throughout the whole empire. The population is prodigious, and the commercial intercourse with strangers so great that the trade of all the provinces might be supposed to centre here. It is seated on the grand canal, and on a river which communicates with the lake Tai, 560 m. S. by E. of Peking. Long. 120. 0. E., lat. 31. 22. N.

Souterraine, a town of France, department of Creuse, 24 m. N. of Limoges.

South Sea. See Pacific Ocean.

Southam, a town in Warwickshire, Eng. 82 m. N. W. of London.

Southampton, a borough and county of itself, and the county-town of Hampshire, Eng. It stands between the Itchen and Test, which here flow into an inlet of the sea, called Trissanton Bay, or Southampton Water. The inlet is navigable almost to the head for vessels of considerable burden, and the two rivers admit small craft some way up the country. It was formerly a port of great commerce, and still possesses considerable trade, particularly with Guernsey and Jersey. 74 m. W. S. W. of London.

Southend, a village in Essex, Eng. at the mouth of the Thames, nearly opposite Sheerness, much resorted to for sea-bathing, and containing handsome accommodation for the company. 44 m. E. of London.

Southfleet, a village in Kent, Eng. 3 m. S. W. of Gravesend. Some stone coffins, urns, &c., have been dug up here, since the commencement of the present century, which evince it to have been a Roman station; probably the Vagniacca of Antoninus.

Southwark, a borough in Surrey, Eng. which may be considered as part of the metropolis, being seated on the opposite side of the Thames, and under the jurisdiction of the corporation of London. It is called the Borough, by way of distinction.

Southwell, a town in Nottinghamshire, Eng. It is an ancient place, enjoying several privileges different from the county, and has a collegiate church. Here are the ruins of a grand palace, demolished in the civil wars of the 17th century. The principal trade is in malt and hops. 132 m. N. N. W. of London.

Southwold, a sea-port in Suffolk, Eng. Here a much esteemed salt is made, and it has also a trade in corn, beer, and herrings. It is sometimes called Sowle or Sole, and its bay is named Sole bay. In this bay was the great sea-fight, in 1672, between the Dutch admiral, De Ruyter, and James, duke of York, in which the victory was undecided. 305 m. S. E. of London.

South Amboy, a township of Middlesex Co. N. J.

South America, p.t. Dutchess Co. N. Y. 85 m. S. Albany.

South Carolina, one of the United States. bounded N. by N. Carolina, E. by the Atlantic S. and W. by Georgia, extending from 32. to 35. N. lat and from 78. 24. to 83. 30. W. long. 201 m. in length and 125 in breadth and containing 30,080 sq. m. It has no mountains except in the northwestern extremity. It is traversed by the great Pedee, Santee and Edisto rivers with their numerous branches; the Savannah washes the Southwestern limit of the State. The coast for 100 m. from the ocean, is covered with forests of pitch pine, with swampy tracts here and there. Beyond this, is a parallel belt of territory, called the Middle Country, consisting of low sand hills, resembling the waves of an agitated sea. This tract occasionally presents an oasis of verdure, or a few straggling pine trees, and sometimes a field of maize or potatoes. The middle country is bounded by another belt of land called the Ridge, where the country rises by a steep and sudden elevation, and afterwards continues gradually to ascend. Beyond, the surface exhibits a beautiful alternation of hill and dale interspersed with extensive forests, and watered by pleasant streams.

The whole seacoast is low and level, and affords hardly any good harbours. Towards the south it is skirted by a range of islands, separated from the main land by narrow channels, which afford a steambot navigation. These islands, like the neighbouring continent are low and flat, but are covered with forests of live oak, pine and palmet toes. Before the cultivation of cotton, many of them were the haunts of alligators, and their thick woods and rank weeds rendered them impenetrable to man. At present, they are under cultivation, and well inhabited and as the voyager glides by their shores in a steambot, he is enchanted with the prospect of their lively verdure interspersed with thick clumps of palmettoes, and flowering groves of orange trees. The live oak which is so called on account of its being an evergreen, is a noble tree with a trunk sometimes 12 feet girth; its long branches are spread horizontally, and festoons of moss hang from them almost sweeping the ground. The laurel is here seen covered with large white blossoms, shaped like a lily, and a foot in circumference. The long sandy beaches, which border these islands toward the sea, are covered with thousands of water fowl. Among the various tribes of birds which abound in this state may be mentioned the turtle dove, or Carolina pigeon which in the summer is also found in all parts of the United States. Its notes are remarkably plaintive.

The climate is hot, moist and unhealthy. In summer the heat of the day continues with little abatement through the night, and a comfortable sleep is a blessing not always to be enjoyed. Fevers, generated by the influence of a hot air upon a moist soil, are common. The summer continues from 7 to 8 months, or from March to November. In winter there are often frosts which kill the tender plants, and even the orange trees; but they seldom continue longer than three or four days, nor penetrate the earth deeper than two inches. In the lower parts of the state there is seldom any snow. In the northwestern part, the land is mountainous, and the climate generally salubrious, with a drier air, and a colder winter. The soil along the banks of the rivers is fertile, and in the northwestern parts the land is generally productive. In the neighbourhood of the sea are extensive swamps. The only mineral which the state affords is gold, which exists probably in large quantities, but there are not many mines.

This state is divided into 29 Districts. The population is 581,458, of whom 315,665 are slaves. Columbia is the seat of government, and Charleston is the only large town in the state. There is one large canal called the Santee canal, connecting the Santee and Cooper rivers, 22 m. in length 35 feet wide, and 4 feet deep, completed in 1802; and several smaller canals upon the Wateree Broad and Saluda rivers. A railroad has been commenced to extend from Charleston to Hamburg, on the Savannah, opposite Augusta.

Cotton and rice occupy the chief attention of the planters. Some tobacco is raised, and indigo was once an important article of cultivation. Wheat, maize and other grains thrive well, but are so much neglected that supplies are sought in the neighbouring states. The exports of cotton from this state form an important item in the national commerce, and amount to 200,000 or 250,000 bales yearly. The export of rice is also great. The commerce is carried on to a great extent by northern vessels. The shipping of South Carolina amounted in 1828 to 33,688 tons. The imports for 1829 were 1,139,618 dollars; the exports of domestic produce were 8,134,616 dollars, total exports 8,175,586.

The legislature is called the General Assembly, and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The senators are chosen for four years, according to the population and wealth of the districts. The representatives are chosen for two years, according to population. The Governor is chosen by the legislature for two years. The qualifications for voting amount nearly to universal suffrage. The clergy are ineligible to any civil office. The expenses of the state for 1829, were 315,370 dollars. The public debt was 1,670,000 dollars.

The Baptists have 131 ministers; the Methodists 54; the Presbyterians 46; the Episcopalians 34. There are colleges at Charleston and Columbia.

South Carolina was first settled at Port Royal in 1670, and was originally connected with North Carolina. The two states were separated in 1729. The colonial form of government was preserved after the revolution. The present constitution was formed in 1790 but has been twice amended since that period.

Sourigny, a town of France, department of Allier seated on the Quesne, 10 m. W. by S. Moulins.

Sorano, a town of Italy, in the grand duchy of Tuscany, 45 m. N. N. W. of Rome.

Spa, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Liege, famous for its mineral waters. That called the Old Spa consists of miserable cottages.

and is properly nothing but the suburb to the other. The houses of the New Spa are mostly of wood and plaster; but the more modern ones are of brick and stone. The church of the Capuchins, and the parish church, are both seated upon eminences. The names of the 5 principal wells are Pohon, Geronfler, Saviniere, Watpotz, and Tunelet. The inhabitants are employed in making toys for strangers. Spa was taken by the French in 1794, and afterwards annexed to France; but in 1814 they delivered it up to the allies. It is seated in a valley, surrounded by mountains, 17 m. S. E. of Liege.

Spain, a kingdom of Europe, 640 m. long and 500 broad; bounded on the N. by the Bay of Biscay, N. E. by the Pyrenees, which separate it from France, E. and S. by the Mediterranean. S. W. by the Atlantic, and W. by Portugal and the Atlantic. It contains the provinces of Old and New Castile, Andalusia, Arragon, Estremadura, Galicia, Leon, Catalonia, Granada, Valencia, Biscay, Asturias, Murcia, and Navarre, some of which have been separate kingdoms and still retain the title. The air is dry and serene, except during the equinoctial rains, but excessively hot in the southern provinces in June, July, and August. The vast mountains, however, that run through Spain are beneficial to the inhabitants by the refreshing breezes that come from them in the S. parts; though those in the N. and N. E. are in the winter very cold. The soil is very fertile; but there are large tracts of uncultivated ground: and the superior attention paid to the large flocks of sheep greatly impedes the progress of agriculture. The produce of the country consists in wheat, barley, saffron, honey, silk, salt, salt-petre, hemp, barilla, and even sugar-canes, with the richest and most delicious fruits that are to be found in France and Italy; and its wines are in high esteem. Wolves are the chief beasts of prey that infest Spain. The wild bulls have so much ferocity that bull fights were the most magnificent spectacle, the court of Spain could exhibit. The genet, an animal producing a perfume similar to that of the civet, is found in this country. The domestic animals are horses (which are remarkably swift), mules, asses, beeves, and sheep. Spain abounds in minerals and metals. Cornelian, agate, jacinth, loadstone, turquois stones, quicksilver, iron, copper, lead, sulphur, gypsum, calamine, crystal, marbles of several kinds, porphyry, the finest jasper, and even diamonds, emeralds, and amethysts are found here. Anciently it was celebrated for gold and silver mines; but since the discovery of America no attention has been paid to them. The principal rivers are the Duero, Tagus, Guadiana Guadalquivir, and Ebro. Spain, formerly the most populous kingdom in Europe, is now very thinly inhabited; to which various causes have contributed, as the expulsion of the Moors, the emigration to the colonies, the vast numbers and celibacy of the clergy, the indolence of the natives, and the late desolating war. Here are some considerable manufactures, especially of silk and woolen, but these are far short of that flourishing condition which they might attain, being checked by the royal monopolies, which extend to broad cloth, china, glass, pottery, paper, salt-petre, salt, sulphur, tobacco, and some others.

The Spaniards in general are tall, their complexions swarthy, their countenances expressive. The beauty of the ladies reigns chiefly in their novels and romances: in their persons they are small and slender. Jealousy is no longer the characteristic of a Spanish husband: the married ladies leave here their cortejo, or male attendant, in the same manner as the Italians have their cicisbeo. The established religion is popery. There are eight archbishoprics, 46 episcopal sees, and 24 universities, or rather academies. The Spanish language springs from the Roman, but many of the words are derived from the Arabic used by the Moors, who for seven centuries held dominion in the country: the speech is grave, sonorous, and very melodious. The government of Spain, once the most free, is now one of the most despotic monarchies in Europe. It had formerly its cortes or parliaments, which had great privileges; but now, though not absolutely abolished, they have no part in the government. They are assembled, indeed, occasionally, as at the accession of the monarch, but merely as an appendage to the royal state, without power, or any other consequence than what results from their individual rank.

The present population of Spain is estimated at 13,650,172, and its territorial extent at 183,000 sq. m. The revenue of the kingdom is 26,520,000 dollars; the debt 230,443,062 dollars. The army consists of 46,000 men: the navy is insignificant.

The colonies of Spain are the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico with the city of St. Domingo in the W. Indies; the Philippine, Caroline, and Ladron Islands in the E. Indies; the Canary Islands in the Atlantic and a few settlements on the coast of Africa. The Population of the colonies is estimated at 4,088,000. The capital of the kingdom is Madrid.

Spain was conquered by the Carthaginians and Romans. The Visigoths founded their empire here in 419. The Saracens and Moors invaded and conquered the Southern part of the kingdom in the 8th century. The Moors established a kingdom in the Mediterranean provinces of Spain, and their sovereigns reigned in great splendor at Granada. The Spaniards were roused to resistance by Don Pelayo, and maintained a struggle against the Moors, which the Spanish historians dignify with the name of a continual war of 700 years. The territories gained from the enemy were formed into several distinct kingdoms. These were gradually amalgamated, and in 1469 the marriage of Ferdinand, king of Arragon with Isabella, queen of Castile, united the whole of Christian Spain into one kingdom. These sovereigns conquered Granada, and completed the total subjugation of the Moorish power in the peninsula, at the same time that Columbus under their auspices discovered America and gave them a new world in the west.

In the 16th century, under Charles V., who was king of this country and Emperor of Germany, Spain, was the most powerful monarchy in Europe. Philip II. the successor of this monarch expelled all the Moriscoes, or descendants of the Moors who remained in the country, which caused an immense loss to the kingdom in wealth and population. The war of the Succession in the early part of the 18th century, completed the impoverishment of the country, and Spain has been only a second rate power since that time.

In 1808, Napoleon seized the kingdom and placed his brother Joseph upon the throne, but the resistance of the people who were assisted by the armies of Britain, and his reverses in Russia frustrated the design. This event caused the revolt of nearly all Spanish America. In 1820, an insurrection of the troops and the people against the tyrant Ferdinand produced a liberal constitution which was sworn to by the king in the ancient assembly of the Cortes. But the Holy Alliance expressed their disapprobation. France interfered; the constitution was put down by the bayonet and despotism restored.

Spain, New. See Mexico.

Spaitla, a town of Barbary, in the kingdom of Tunis, near which are extensive and magnificent ruins. It is situate on a rising ground, shaded all over with juniper-trees, 90 m. S. W. of Tunis and 100 S. S. E. of Bona. Long. 9. 15. E., lat. 35. 40. N.

Spalatro, or Spalatto, a strong sea-port of Austrian Dalmatia, and an archbishop's see. The harbour is large and deep, and well frequented. Without the walls is a sulphureous spring, of great benefit in chronic diseases. Here are the ruins of the palace of Dioclesian, and of a magnificent aqueduct. In 1784 Spalatro was nearly depopulated by the plague. It is seated on a peninsula in the gulf of Venice, 70 m. S. E. of Zara and 102 N. W. of Ragusa. Long. 17. 31. E., lat. 44. 4. N.

Spalding, a town in Lincolnshire, Eng. It is seated on the Welland, and from its neatness, and the canals in its streets, resembles a Dutch town. The inhabitants are not employed in manufactures, but derive their chief support from agriculture, and the extensive grazing carried on in the neighbourhood. Much hemp and flax is grown in the vicinity and there is a good carrying trade in corn and coal. 14 m. S. by W. of Boston and 103 N. of London.

Spalt, a town and castle of Bavarian Franconia, in the district of Anspach. The vicinity produces excellent hops. It is seated on the Retzat, 16 m. E. S. E. of Anspach.

Spandau, a town of Prussia, in the Middle Mark of Brandenburg, with a fine fortress. The arsenal is in subterranean vaults, and there is a prison for state criminals. Bayonets, ramrods, sword-blades, and sabres, are made here: also musket barrels, which are sent hence to Potsdam to be finished. It is seated on the Havel, opposite the influx of the Spree, 8 m. W. N. W. of Berlin and 12 N. E. of Potsdam.

Spanzenberg, a town and castle of Germany in Hesse-Cassel, seated on a mountain 28 m. S. E. of Cassel.

Spanishtown, or Jago de la Vega, a town of Jamaica, where the Legislative assembly and the grand courts of justice are held. It is seated in a pleasant valley, on the river Cobre, 16 m. W. N. W. of Kingston.

Spinulonga, a seaport of the island of Candia, with a good harbour and a citadel. It is situate near a cape of the same name, 30 m. E. of Candia. Long. 25. 48. E., lat. 35. 20. N.

Spire, a city of Bavaria, capital of the province of Rhine, and formerly of a bishopric of its name. In ancient times the emperors held many diets at Spire, and it was the seat of the imperial chamber till 1689, when the city was burnt by the French, and it was not rebuilt till after the peace of Ryswick in 1697. Most of the citizens are Lutherans; but there are 15 Catholic churches and convents, among which the college formerly belonging to the Jesuits claims the first place. Spire was taken by the French in 1734; and in 1792 it surrendered to the republican troops of France, who evacuated it the next year, but reentered it in 1794. In 1814 it was ceded to Bavaria. It is seated on the W. side of the Rhine at the influx of the Spirebach, 54 m. S. by E. of Mentz. Lon. 8. 29. E., lat. 49. 19. N.

Spiritu Santo, a province of Brazil, between that of Porto Seguro and Rio Janeiro. The soil is fertile and watered by a river of the same name, which flows into a large bay of the Atlantic. The capital, of the same name, has a castle, and its port is a small bay about 10 m. from the ocean. Long. 41. 10. W., lat. 20. 10. S.

Spiritu Santo, a town of Cuba, near the middle of the island. 155 m. E. S. E. of Havana. Long. 79. 37. E., lat. 22. 15. N.

Spital, a town of Austrian Illyria, in Carinthia, seated on the Liser, near the Drave, 15 m. W. N. W. of Villach.

Spital, a village in Lincolnshire, Eng. 12 m. N. of Lincoln, on the Roman causeway, leading to the Humber. Here are two springs, one called Julian's Well and the other Castleton Well. Great number of Roman coins have been dug up in this village.

Spithead, a famous road in the English Channel, between Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight, where the royal navy frequently rendezvous.

Spitzbergen, a group of dreary islands, lying between 9. and 20. E. long., and 76. 46. and 80. 30. N. lat., having Greenland to the W. and Nova Zembla to the E. The Mainland, or principal island, is 300 m. in length. It was discovered in 1533 by Sir Hugh Willoughby, who called it Greenland, supposing it to be a part of the western continent. In 1595 it was visited by Barentz and Cornelius, two Dutchmen, who pretended to be the original discoverers, and called it Spitzbergen, or sharp mountains, from the many sharp-pointed and rocky mountains with which it abounds. The glaciers on the N. E. present a singular appearance, being high cliffs of an emerald color, impendent over the sea, with cataracts of melted snow, and a black-ground of black conic hills, streaked with white. In the winter it is continual night for four months. The animals are deer, bears, and foxes. The Russians from Archangel maintain a kind of colony here. To the N. E. of this group are small isles called the Seven Sisters, the most arctic land yet discovered.

Spit Rock, p.v. Essex Co. N. Y. 80 m. N. Albany.

Spoleto, a duchy of Italy, in the Ecclesiastical states, 55 m. long and 40 broad; bounded on the N. by Ancona and Urbino, E. by Naples, S. by Sabina, and W. by Orvieto and Perugia. It comprises the greatest part of the ancient Umbria, and contains 105,000 inhabitants.

Spoleto, the capital of the foregoing duchy, and a bishop's see. The houses are in general well built, but the only edifices that have any claim to distinction are the castle, which stands on a hill and is connected with the town by a bridge, and the cathedral, which is certainly a fine structure. Spoleto suffered greatly from earthquakes in 1703 and 1767. Here are the ruins of an amphitheatre, a triumphal arch, and an aqueduct. It is seated in a country noted for good wine, near the river Tessino, 40 m. E. of Orvieto and 60 N. by E. of Rome. Long. 13. 6. E., lat. 42. 45. N.

Sponheim, a town of Germany, and the capital of a county of its name. It is seated among hills covered with vineyards, 27 m. W. by S. of Mentz. Long. 7. 38. E., lat. 49. 54. N.

Squam, a village in Gloucester, Essex Co. Mass. on the N. side of Cape Ann, with a good harbour.

Squam Lake, a beautiful lake of N. Hampshire near L. Winipissigoe. It is 10 m. long and 6 broad; surrounded by mountains and sprinkled with islands.

Squankum, p.v. Monmouth Co. N. J. 55. m. N. E. Philadelphia.

Squantum, a rocky promontory extending into Boston Bay, on the south side of Neponset river, 5 m. from Boston. It was named from an Indian female who was the last of the aborigines that resided in this neighbourhood. The Feast of Squantum is annually held at this spot, and is usually accompanied with a travestie of the Indian customs and language.

Squillace, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, which was much injured by the earthquake of 1783. It is seated on the Favelone, near a gulf of its name, 35 m. S. W. of St. Severino. Long. 16. 40. E., lat. 39. 3. N.

Statsburg, a village of Dutchess Co. N. Y. on the Hudson, 12 m. above Poughkeepsic.

Stablo, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Liege, with a celebrated Benedictine abbey. Here is a manufacture of leather, and a trade in cloths and stuffs. It is seated on the Rect, 12 m. S. of Limbourg.

Stabroock, or Georgetown, a sea-port of Demerara in S. America, and the capital of the province. It is seated on the river Demerara, and has considerable trade. Pop. 8,000.

Stade, a town of Hanover, in the duchy of Bremen, with a fortress, a college and three churches. It is the seat of the regency, and chief courts of justice of the dutches of Bremen and Verden, and has manufactures of lace, flannels, stockings, hats, and spirituous liquors. The foreign trade is now chiefly confined to the transit business, and a vessel sails daily from this place to Hamburg. It stands on the Swingeel, near its confluence with the Elbe, 43 m. N. E. of Bremen. Long. 9. 28. E., lat. 55. 36. N.

Stadt am Hof, a town of Bavaria, on the N. side of the Danube, connected by a bridge with the city of Ratisbon.

Stadtberg, a town of Prussia, in the province of Westphalia, on the frontiers of the county of Waldeck. Part of it, called Marsberg, stands on the site of the famous Saxon fort of Elmesburg, which was taken by Charlemagne, who built a church here in honor of St. Peter and St. Paul. Stadtberg is situate on the Dumel, 16 m. S. of Paderborn.

Stadthagen, a strong town of Prussian Westphalia, in the principality of Schauenberg, with a palace, belonging to the prince of Schauenberg-Lippe, in the garden of which is a mineral spring. It is 8 m. E. of Minden.

Stafarda, a town of Sardinia, in Piedmont, with a rich abbey. In 1690 a victory was gained near this place by the French over the duke of Savoy. It is seated on the Po, 3 m. N. of Saluzzo.

Staffa, a small island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, on the W. side of that of Mull. It is the greatest natural curiosity in Europe, if not in the world. The whole S. W. end is supported by ranges of basaltic pillars, mostly above 50 feet high, and four feet in thickness. Here is also a magnificent cavern called Fin-ma-coul, or Fingal's Cave, which extends 250 feet in length. Its entrance is a natural arch, 53 feet wide and 117 high, from which the cavern is lighted, so that its farthest extremity may be seen; it is supported on each side by ranges of columns, and roofed by the fragments of others that have been broken off in forming it. The bottom of the cave is filled by the sea, reaching to the extremity, and in very calm weather a boat may sail into it. This singular island is every where supported by basaltic rocks and pillars, and so much hollowed by various caves that its whole surface is shaken in stormy weather.

Staffelstein, a town of Bavaria, situate on the Lauter, 16 m. N. N. E. of Bamberg.

Stafford, a borough and the county town of Staffordshire, Eng. The principal trade consists in the manufacture of boots and shoes, which at one time was very considerable, but has greatly declined. Hats and cutlery are also manufactured here, and a considerable tanning business is carried on. It is seated on the river Sow, 144 m. N. W. of London.

Staffordshire, a county of England, 55 m. long and 35 broad; bounded on the W. by Shropshire, N. W. by Cheshire, N. E. and E. by Derbyshire, S. E. by Warwickshire, and S. by Worcestershire. It contains 780,800 acres, is divided into five hundreds and 181 parishes, has one city and 19 market towns, and sends 10 members to parliament. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 341,040. The soil in the S. part is good and rich, though not without heaths, which take up a large tract of ground: it abounds in coal and iron. The middle is level and plain, the N. hilly and barren, being full of heaths and moors. There are good stone quarries, plenty of alabaster, and limestone. Tin and brass are among the productions in Staffordshire, and there are several smelting and brass works near the copper mines. Within the last half century material improvements have been introduced into the agriculture of this county; whilst on the rich lands bordering the Trent the dairy has become a source of considerable profit. The trade and manufactures have been greatly extended by the inland navigation, which connects this county, not only with the metropolis, but with the Severn, the Mersey, and the Humber, and the three corresponding ports of Bristol, Liverpool, and Hull. The iron foundries, blast furnaces, slitting mills, and other branches of the iron trade, employ great numbers of people. The cotton manufactures are very considerable, and the silk trade is carried on to some extent. The southern parts of the county are distinguished for the manufactures of locks, buckles, steel toys (particularly watch chains), and a variety of plated, lacquered, japanned, and enamelled goods. In the vicinity of Stourbridge the manufacture of glass is considerable. There are also manufactures of tobacco and snuff boxes, shoes, hats, &c. But the chief manufacture of the county is that of earthenware, for which it has been long and deservedly celebrated, and which may now be ranked among the most important manufactures of the kingdom.

Stafford, p.t. Tolland Co. Conn. 26 m. N. E. Hartford. Pop. 2,514. Here is a mineral spring and several manufactures; p.t. Genesee Co. N. Y. 30 m. S. W. Rochester. Pop. 2,367; a township of Monmouth Co. N. J.; p.v. Stafford Co. Va. 47 m. S. W. Washington.

Stirling, a borough of Scotland, capital of Stirlingshire, seated on the river Forth, on a hill, which terminates abruptly in a steep basaltic rock. On this rock is an ancient castle, once a place of great strength, and often the scene of bloody contention. The palace, erected by James V., is a stately building; the outside curiously ornamented with grotesque figures. Here are two churches and a famous grammar school. In the town and its neighbourhood are manufactures of carpets, shalloons, and other woollen stuffs; and the cotton trade is flourishing. A salmon fishery, belonging to the town, is let to a company, who send the fish chiefly to the London and Edinburgh markets. Stirling has undergone considerable improvement within the last 30 years; several new streets have been built on a modern and improved plan on the N. side of the town, and, in the old part of the town, numbers of houses have been rebuilt. From its commodious situation, Stirling commands the pass between the N. and S. part of Scotland. It is 30 m. N. W. of Edinburgh. Long. 3. 45. W., lat. 56. 6. N.

Stirlingshire, a county of Scotland, 35 m. long and 10 broad; bounded on the N. by Perthshire, N. E. by Clackmannanshire, and the frith of Forth, S. E. by Linlithgowshire, S. by Lanarkshire and Dumbartonshire, and W. by Dumbartonshire. It is divided into 24 parishes, and contains 65,376 inhabitants. The principal rivers are the Forth, Carron, and Avon; and the great canal crosses it from the mouth of the Carron. The S. part of the county is mountainous, but the part near the Forth is fertile. It abounds in coal, ironstone, limestone.

Stockholm, a province of Sweden, comprising the eastern parts of Upland and Sudermania, or the districts of Roslagen and Soderborn. It has an area of 2,736 square miles, with 100,000 inhabitants.

Stockholm, the capital of Sweden lies in a situation remarkable for its romantic scenery. It is very long, irregular, and occupies, besides two peninsulas, three rocky islands, situate in the Maelar, in the streams which issue from that lake, and in a bay of the Baltic. There are four smaller islands, or rather islets, on which are situate forts or buildings for naval purposes. A variety of contrasted and beautiful views are formed by numerous rocks of granite, rising boldly from the surface of the water, partly bare and craggy, and partly dotted with houses, or feathered with wood. The harbour is an inlet of the Baltic; the water is of such depth that ships of the largest burden can approach the quay. At the extremity of the harbour, several streets rise one above another in the form of an amphitheatre, and the palace, a magnificent building, crowns the summit. Except in the suburbs, where several houses are of wood, painted red, the generality of the buildings are of stone or of brick whitened with stucco. There is a royal academy of science, instituted by the celebrated Linnæus, and a few other learned men, in 1741; and also a royal academy of arts. The arsenal contains an immense number of trophies and standards taken from different nations. Stockholm, with a small territory surrounding it, forms a separate government, has its own magistrates, and contains nearly 100,000 inhabitants, who manufacture glass, china, silk, woolen, &c. It is 320 m. N. E. of Copenhagen, 1,000 N. E. of Paris, and 900 N. E. of London. Long. 18. 9 E., lat. 59. 20. N.

Stonehaven, or Stonehive, a sea-port of Scotland, and the country town of Kincardineshire. The harbour is secured by a high rock and stone pier. Near it are the ruins of the castle of Donnotyre, on a lofty perpendicular rock, almost surrounded by the sea. The town has a manufacture of brown linen, and some trade in dried fish and oil. 20 m. N. N. E. of Montrose. Long. 2. 6. W., lat. 56. 55. N.

Stonehenge, a remarkable monument of antiquity in Wiltshire, on Salisbury Plain, consisting of several very large stones, some placed upright and others horizontally across them. Most antiquaries suppose this work to have been a temple of the Druids, because it is in a circular form, and seems to have been much more regular than it appears to be at present. It has puzzled many diligent enquirers to account for the bringing and placing of those enormous stones; for it is thought no method now known is sufficient to have raised those that lie across to that height. 6 m. N. of Salisbury.

Stonehouse, a town in Devonshire, Eng. It contains a national school, very extensive barracks, a royal naval hospital, &c.; and is situate about half way between Plymouth and Devonport.

Strakonitz, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Prachin, with a castle; seated on the Wotawa, 11 m. S. W. of Piseck.

Stralsund, a government of the Prussian states, comprising the part of Pomerania formerly belonging to Sweden, along with Rugen and other islands on the N. coast. It has an area of 1,400 square m. with 115,000 inhabitants.

Stralsund, a sea-port of Prussia, formerly the capital of Swedish Pomerania. It contains about 11,000 inhabitants; and its trade and commerce are considerable. The churches and other public buildings are handsome; and the library belonging to the college has a capital collection of coins. Charles XII., in 1714, came hither after his return from Turkey, and ennobled the magistracy. Stralsund was forced to submit to the allies in 1715, was restored in 1720, surrendered to the French in 1807, and was finally ceded to Prussia in 1813. It is almost surrounded by the Baltic and the lake Franzen, and has a harbour separated from the isle of Rugen by a narrow channel. The manufactures are various, but most of them on a small scale, and the trade is considerable, particularly in corn. 40 m. E. N. E. of Rostock, and 85 N. W. of Stettin. Long. 13. 16. E., lat. 54. 20. N.

Strammell, a town of the Prussian states, in Pomerania, on the river Rega, 21 m. N. E. of New Stargard.

Strangford, a small town of Ireland, in the county of Down, seated on a bay of its name, at the narrow part which connects Strangford Lough with the Irish Sea, 7 m. E. of Down. Long. 5. 30. W., lat. 54. 31. N.

Strangford Lough, a large bay, or inlet of the sea, in the county of Down, on the E. coast of Ireland, about 17 m. long and 5 broad, abounding with excellent fish, particularly smelts; and off the bar, about August, is a periodical herring fishery. It contains a great many small islands; and the burning of kelp profitably employs a great number of hands in them. The bar or entrance into it from the Irish Sea is 3 m. below Strangford and not a m. in breadth.

Stranraer, a borough and sea-port of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, with considerable manufactures of cotton and linen. Vessels employed in the coasting trade and herring fishery frequent this place; and some ships sail hence to the Baltic and Ireland with corn. It is situate at the head of Loch Ryan, 26 m. W. by N. of Wigton. Long. 4. 57. W., lat. 55. 0. N.

Strasburg, a city of France, capital of the department of Lower Rhine, and a bishop's see. It is situate near the Rhine; and the River Ill runs through it, and forms many canals, over which there are several bridges to connect the different quarters of the city. It is a place of considerable commerce, and has manufactures of tobacco, porcelain, steel, lace, carpets, cloth, leather, &c. The inhabitants are computed at 60,000. The principal structures are built of a red stone, dug from the quarries which are along the Rhine. This town, formerly imperial, was taken by Louis XIV. in 1681. The citadel and fortifications, which he constructed, have been so much augmented that Strasburg may be considered one of the strongest places in Europe. It was confirmed to France by the peace of Ryswick in 1697. The university, which had been curtailed of its classes during the French revolution, was replaced on its former footing in 1803. The town is entered by six gates. In the cathedral is a clock, which shows the motions of the constellations, the revolutions of the sun and moon, the days of the week, the hours, &c. Another remarkable circumstance in this cathedral is its pyramidical tower, which is 549 feet high. In the church of St. Thomas is the magnificent tomb of the famous marshal Saxe. 65 m. N. C. Stroma, a small island of Scotland, on the coast of Caithness-shire, in Pentland Frith. Its caverns were once used by the inhabitants of the neighbouring island as places of interment. Near its N. end is a dangerous whirlpool.

Stromberg, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the government of Munster, 20 m. E. N. E. of Munster and 20 N. W. of Paderborn.

Stromboli, the most northern of the Lipari Islands. It is a volcano, which rises in a conical form to the height of 3,000 feet; and on the E. side are three or four little craters ranged near each other, nearly at two-thirds of its height. Notwithstanding its fires, it is inhabited, and produces a great deal of cotton. Of all the volcanoes recorded in history, Stromboli seems to be the only one that burns without ceasing; and it has long been looked upon as the great lighthouse of the Mediterranean, the flames being seen by night at a great distance. Long. 15. 40. E., lat. 38. 40. N.

Stromness, a town of Scotland, on the S. W. side of the island of Pomona, with a good harbour, 9 m. W. of Kirkwall.

Stromoe, the principal of the Feroe Islands, in the Northern Ocean, 30 m. in length and 10 in breadth. It has a town called Thorshaven, which is the capital of all the islands and the common market. Long. 7. 0. W., lat. 62. 10. N.

Stromsøe, a town of Norway, in the province of Aggerhuys, 18 m. S. W. of Christiania. See Drammen.

Strong, p.t. Somerset Co. Me. Pop. 985.

Strongsville, p.t. Cuyahoga Co. Ohio. 125 m. N. E. Columbus. Pop. 6,311.

Strongoli, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, seated on a high rock, 3 m. from the sea, and 7 N. of St. Severino.

Stronsa, one of the Orkney Islands, situate N. E. of that called Pomona. It is 7 m. from N. to S. and nearly the same in breadth, but so indented by bays that no part of it is above a mile and a half from the sea. It produces much kelp, and feeds many sheep and cattle.

Strontian, a village of Scotland, in Argyleshire and in the district of Ardnamrehan, noted for its lead mines, in which a new kind of mineral was discovered in 1790, and named Strontites.

Stroud, a town in Gloucestershire, Eng. It is seated on a brook, the waters of which are peculiarly adapted to the dyeing of scarlet, and its banks are consequently crowded with the houses of clothiers: a navigable canal accompanies its progress to the Severn, and is now extended to join the Thames at Lechlade. Stroud is 11 m. S. by E. of Gloucester and 100 W. by N. of London.

Stroud, a considerable village in Kent, Eng

Stroulsburg, p.v. Northampton Co. Pa.

Stuartsburg, p.v. Westmoreland Co. Pa.

Studdland, a village in Dorsetshire, Eng. in the neighbourhood of which are several curious barrows.

Suhlgingen, a town of Baden, in a lordship, of the same name, with a castle on a mountain, 9 m. S. of Furstenburg.

Stuhlweissenburg, a town of Hungary, capital of a county of its name, and the see of a bishop, situate in marshy ground, occasioned by the river Sarwitz. It was formerly the place for the coronation of the kings, and generally also of their interment; but it is much decayed, since its works were dismantled in 1702. The number of inhabitants is estimated at 13,000. 36 m. S. W. of Buda, and 80 S. E. of Presburg. Long. 18. 28. E. lat. 47. 18. N.

Sturbridge, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 70 m. S. W. Boston, with manufactures of woollen and cotton. Pop. 1,688.

Stuttgart, a city of Germany, capital of the kingdom of Wurtemberg. It is surrounded by walls and ditches, and has an ancient castle, with a rich cabinet of curiosities, a magnificent palace, an orphan house, a college, a ducal academy, and observatory, a military academy one of the largest libraries in Germany. It has manufactures of silks, stockings, ribands, &c. and around it are innumerable vineyards and gardens. The streets are narrow in the city, and the houses generally of wood; but there are fine houses, and straight streets, in one of the suburbs. Stuttgart was repeatedly entered by the armies on both sides between 1796, and 1815. It is seated in a plain among mountains, near the river Neckar, 36 m. E. of Baden and 52 N. E. of Strasburg. Long. 9. 21. E., lat. 48. 44. N.

Styria, a province of Austria, 125 m. long and 17 broad; bounded on the E. by Hungary, S. by Carniola, and W. by Carinthia and Salzburg. It is divided into Upper and Lower Styria; the former containing the circles of Judenburg and Bruck, and the latter those of Gratz, Marchburg, and Cilly. Though a mountainous country there is much land fit for tillage, and the soil is fertile. The mountains are clothed with oak, beech, and pine; every kind of grain is well cultivated, and the white wine is very pleasant. It contains mines of excellent iron, whence the arms made here are in great esteem; also mines of lead and coal. The principal rivers are the Enns, Muhr, Drave, and Save. The inhabitants are for the most part Catholics, but Protestants are tolerated, and Jews in a limited degree. Gratz and Judenburg are the chief towns.

Suabia, the former name of one of the ten circles of Germany, bounded on the N. by Franconia and the circle of Lower Rhine, W. by that circle and Alsace, S. by Switzerland, and E. by Bavaria. It comprised the greater part of the kingdom of Wurtemberg, the grand duchy of Baden and some other territories.

Suakem, or Suaquam, a sea-port and the capital of the country of Abex, seated on a small island of the same name, in the Red Sea. It is the residence of a Turkish governor under the bashaw of Cairo, and was once a very flourishing place, but is now gone to decay. Long. 37. 55. E., lat. 19. 56 N.

Subiaco, a town of the papal states, in Campagna di Roma, seated on the Teverone, 33 m. E. by N. of Rome.

Succadana, a town on the S. W. coast of Borneo, capital of a kingdom of the same name. The chief products of the country are camphor and diamonds. It is seated at the mouth of a river. Long. 110. 15. E., lat. 1. 10. S.

Success, a township of Coos Co. N. H. Pop. 14.

Success Bay, a bay on the S. E. East of Terra del Fuego. The S. promontory, at its entrance, is called Cape Success. Long. 65. 27. W. lat. 55. 1. S.

Sucasunny p.v. Morris Co. N. J.

Suczara, a town of European Turkey, in Moldavia, formerly a flourishing city, but now much declined. It is seated on a river of the same name, 70 m. N. W. of Jassy. Long. 25. 52. E., lat. 47. 57. N.

Suda, a strong fort of the Isle of Candia, situate on an islet, in a gulf of its name, which is one of the finest and safest harbours in the Levant. This fort was constructed by the Venetians, who preserved it a great while after Candia was no longer in their possession. It is 8 m. E. of Canea.

Sudbury, a borough in Suffolk, Eng. 54 v. N. E. of London.

Sudbury, p.v. Rutland Co. Vt. 43 m. W. Windsor. Pop. 812, p.t. Middlesex. Co. Mass. 20 m. W. Boston. Pop. 1,424.

Suderhamn, a town of Sweden, in the government of Gefleborg, with a considerable trade in linen, butter, timber, and flax; situate at the mouth of a river, near the gulf of Bothnia, 20 m. N. of Gefle. Long. 17. 5. E., lat. 63. 20. N.

Suderkoping, a town of Sweden, in E. Gothland, seated on a navigable river, 10 m. S. S. E. of Nordkoping.

Sudermania, a province of Sweden Proper, 62 m. long and 42 broad; bounded by Uppland, Westmania, Nericia, and the Baltic. It is the most populous part of Sweden, and abounds in corn, and mines of divers metals. Nykoping is the capital.

Sudertelge, a town of Sweden, in Sudermania, with a manufacture of worsted and silk stockings, 16 m. W. S. W. of Stockholm.

Sudoree, one of the Feroe Islands, in the Northern Ocean, remarkable for a dangerous whirlpool, near it, which is occasioned by a crater, 61 fathoms deep in the centre. The danger, especially in storms, is very great; but at the reflux, and in very still weather, the inhabitants venture in boats, for the sake of fishing.

Suen-hoa, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Pe-tche-li, seated amid mountains, near the great wall, 77 m. N. N. W. of Peking. Long. 114. 39. E., lat. 40. 38. N.

Suez, a sea-port of Egypt, with a castle, seated at the N. end of the W. arm of the Red Sea, called the gulf of Suez. This gulf is separated from the Mediterranean by an isthmus, 125 m. over, which joins Asia to Africa. The town is surrounded by a sandy country, and is without water. Several vessels are employed in the navigation between this port and Jidda, where the commodities are bartered for Indian goods and the coffee of Arabia. The commerce of Cairo with Suez is carried on by caravans, which wait the arrival, and set out on the departure of the vessels, that is about the end of April, and in the course of July and August. The merchandise consists in corn, wood, iron, lead, wool, cloth, cordage, &c. 65 m. E. of Cairo. Long. 32. 51. E., lat. 30. 2. N.

Suffield, p.t. Hartford Co. Conn. 18 m. N. Hartford. Pop. 2,696. A township of Portage Co. Onto. Pop. 397.

Suffolk, a county of England, 58 m. long and 28 broad; bounded on the S. by Essex, W. by Cambridgeshire, N. by Norfolk, and E. by the German Ocean. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 270,542. The soil is of various qualities, but the country, in general, is level. Near the shore it is sandy and full of heaths, but abundant in rye, peas, turnips, carrots and hemp, with numerous flocks of sheep. High Suffolk or the woodlands, which is in the inland part, yields good pasture, which feeds abundance of cattle. That part on the confines of Essex and Cambridgeshire affords also excellent pasture; and to the N. and N. W. it is fruitful in corn. Its chief produce is butter and cheese; but the latter has gained almost proverbially the character of the worst in England. Ipswich is the principal town.

Suffolk, a county of Massachusetts, comprising Boston and Chelsea. Pop. 62,162. Boston is the Capital. A county of New York, consisting of the E. part of Long Island. Pop. 26,980; p.v. Nansemond Co. Va. 28 m. S. W. Norfolk.

Suhlta, a town of Prussian Saxony, capital of Henneburg, with manufactures of fustian, linen, leather, and steel. It is seated on the Hazel, 7 m. N. of Schleusingen.

Suhlingen, a town of Hanover, in the county of Hoya, on a river of its name, 22 m. W. by N. of Nieburg.

Suire, a river of Ireland, which rises in Tipperary flows by Clonmel and Carrick to Waterford and meets the Barrow at the head of Waterford Haven.

Sullivan, a county of New Hampshire. Pop. 10,657. Newport is the capital. A county of N. York. Pop. 12,372; Monticello is the capital. A county of Indiana. Pop. 4,696. Merom is the capital. A county of E. Tennessee. Pop. 10,073; Blountsville is the capital.

Sullivan, p.t. Hancock Co. Me. 35 m. E. Castine. Pop. 538. p.t. Cheshire Co. N. H. 33 m. S. W. Concord. p.t. 555. p.t. Madison Co. N. Y. Pop. 4,077; p.v. Tioga Co. Pa. a township of Lorain Co. Ohio. Pop. 206.

Sullivan's Island, a low island at the entrance of Charleston harbour, S. C.

Sully, a town of France, department of Loiret, seated on the Loire, 29 m. S. E. of Orleans.

Sulmona, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Citra, and a bishop's see. It contains 11 churches and 12 convents, and was the birthplace of the poet Ovid. It is seated on the Sora. 26 m. S. W. of Civita di Shieti. Long. 14. 55. E., lat. 42. 0. N.

Sultanta, a decayed town of Persia, in Irak, with a magnificent mosque, which contains the tomb of sultan Chodabend, or Hodabunda. 50 miles N. W. of Casbin. Long. 51. 53. E., lat. 36. 16. N.

Sultanpore, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Lahore, 62 m. S. E. of Lahore.

Sultanpore, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Oude, the station of a British detachment, 32 miles S. of Fyzabad and 50 N. of Allaabad.

Sultz, a town of Germany, in Mecklenburg, with a salt mine, seated on the Rekenitz, 18 m. E. S. E. of Rostock.

Sultz, a town of France, department of Upper Rhine, with a medicinal spring, 13 m. S. S. W. of Colmar.

Sultz, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, with some salt-works; seated near the Neckar, 12 m. N. of Rothweil.

Sulza, a town in the grand duchy of Saxe-Weimar, with a salt mine, seated on the Ilme, 13 m. E. N. E. of Weimar.

Sulzbach, a town and castle of Bavaria, in a duchy of its name, the regency of which is united to Amberg. It stands in a mountainous country, fertile in hops, 6 miles N. W. of Amberg.

Sulzburg, a town of Germany in Baden, with a fine palace seated in a territory fertile in good wine, 8 m. S. W. of Friburg.

Sumatra, the most western of the Sunda Islands, in the Indian Ocean. Its general direction is nearly N. W. and S. E. The equator divides it into almost equal parts; the one extremity being in 5. 53. N., the other in 5. 56. S. lat. and Acheen Head, its N. extremity, is in Long. 95. 34 N. It is 950 m. in length, and from 150 to 200 m. breadth; and is separated from Malacca by the strait of that name, and from Java by the strait of Sunda. A chain of mountains runs through its whole extent; the ranges in many parts, being double and treble; yet their altitude is not sufficient to occasion their being covered with snow during any part of the year. Between these ridges are extensive plains, considerably elevated above the surface of the maritime lands. In these the air is cool; and, from this advantage they are esteemed the most eligible portion of the country, are the best inhabited, and the most cleared from woods, which elsewhere, in general, cover both hills and valleys with an eternal shade. Here too are found many lakes and rivers which facilitate the communication between the different parts. The inhabitants consist of Malays, Achense, Battas, Lampons and Rejans; the latter are taken as a standard of description, with respect to the person, manners, and customs of the Sumatrans. They are rather below the middle stature; their bulk in proportion; their limbs, for the most part, slight, but well shaped, and particularly small at the wrist and ancles. Their hair is strong and of a shining black. The men are beardless, great pains being taken to render them so, when boys, by rubbing their chins with a kind of quick lime. Their complexion is properly yellow, wanting the red tinge that constitutes a copper or tawny colour. Those of the superior class, who are not exposed to the rays of the sun, and particularly the women of rank, approach to a considerable degree of fairness; but the major part of the females are ugly. The rites of marriage among the Sumatrans consist simply in joining the hands of the parties, and pronouncing them man and wife, without much ceremony, excepting the entertainment which is given upon the occasion. But little apparent courtship precedes their marriages. Their manners do not admit of it, the young people of each sex being carefully kept asunder, and the girls being seldom trusted from their mothers. The opportunities which the young people have of seeing and conversing with each other are at the public festivals, where the persons who are unmarried meet together, and dance and sing in company. A man, when determined in his choice, generally employs an old woman as his agent, by whom he sends a present. The parents then interfere, and the preliminaries being settled, a feast takes place. At these festivals, a goat, a buffalo, or several according to the rank of the parties, are killed to entertain, not only the relations and invited guests, but for all the inhabitants of the neighbouring country who chose to repair to them. The greater the concourse, the more is the credit of the host, who is generally, on these occasions, the father of the girl. Polygamy is allowed; but it is extremely rare that an instance occurs of a man having more than one wife, and that only among a few of the chiefs. This continence they owe, in some measure, to their poverty. Mothers carry their children straddling on their hip, and usually supported by a cloth tied in a knot on the opposite shoulder. The children are nursed but little, and are not confined by any swathing or bandages. The original natives of Sumatra are pagans; but it is to be observed that when the Sumatrans, or any of the natives of the eastern islands, learn to read the Arabic character, and submit to circumcision, they are said to become Malays, the term Malay being understood to mean Mussulman. The wild beasts of Sumatra are tigers, elephants, rhinoceroses, bears, and monkeys. The tigers prove to the inhabitants, both in their journeys and even their domestic occupations, most destructive enemies; yet, from a superstitious prejudice, it is with difficulty they are prevailed upon to use methods for destroying them, till they have sustained some particular injury in their own family or kindred. Alligators likewise occasion the loss of many inhabitants; and yet a superstitious idea of their sanctity also preserves them from molestation. The other animals of Sumatra are buffaloes, a small kind of horses, goats, hogs, deer, bullocks, and hog-deer. This last is an animal somewhat larger than a rabbit, the head resembling that of a hog, and its shanks and feet those of a deer; the bezoar stone found on this animal has been valued at ten times its weight in gold. Of birds there is a greater variety than of beasts. The coo-ow, or Sumatran pheasant, is a bird of uncommon beauty. Here are storks of a prodigious size, parrots, dung-hill fowls, ducks, the largest cocks in the world, wood pigeons, doves, and a great variety of small birds, remarkable for the beauty of their colours. The reptiles are lizards flying lizards, and camelions. The islands swarms with insects, and their varieties are no less extraordinary than their numbers. Rice is the only grain that grows in the country. Here are sugar-canes, beans, peas, radishes, yams, potatoes, pumpkins, and several kinds of potherbs unknown to Europe; and also most of the fruits to be met with in other parts of the E. Indies, in the greatest perfection. Indigo, saltpetre, sulphur, arsenic, brazil-wood, two species of the bread-fruit tree, pepper, cassia, camphire, benjamin, coffee, and cotton, are likewise the produce of this island. Here also are the cabbage-tree and silk cotton tree: and the forests contain a great variety of valuable species of wood, as ebony pine, sandal, eagle or aloes, teak, machineel, and iron wood, and also the banyan tree. Bees' wax is a commodity of great importance here; and there are likewise the edible birds' nests. Gold, tin, iron, copper, and lead, are found in the country; and the first is as plentiful here as in any part of Asia. Sumatra is divided into many petty kingdoms, the chief of which are Acheen, Indrapore, Palimban, and Jambi. The English and Dutch have factories on this island; the principal one of the former being fort Marlborough, at Bencoolen, where, as also at the Dutch settlement of Pedang, Christian missionaries have been for some time established.

Sumbawa, an island in the Eastern seas, about 200 m. long and 40 broad. It is divided into the districts of Beema, Dompoo, Tambora, Sangur, Pekat, and Sumbawa, all governed by their respective chiefs. The island furnishes sappan wood, rice, horses, saltpetre, sulphur, wax, birds' nests, tobacco, &c., though but little trade is at present carried on. In the W., part of the island is a town of the same name, with a good harbour.

Sumbhoonant, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Nepaul, with a celebrated temple, which is annually visited by an immense number of pilgrims from Bootan and Thibet. Long. 85. 38. E., lat. 27. 33. N.

Sumbul, a town of Hindoostan, in a territory of its name, lying E. of Dehli, subject to the nabob of Oude. 52 m. W. N. W. of Bereilly and 75 E. of Dehli.

Sumbulpour or Sumelpour, a town of Hindoostan, in a district of its name, in the province of Orissa, 144 miles W. N. W. of Cattack and 250 W. of Calcutta. Long. 83. 40. E., lat. 21. 25. N.

Sunch, a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, 11. m. E. of Pergamo.

Sumerein, a town of Hungary, in the island of Schint, 16 miles S. S. E. of Presburg.

Summynotown, p.v. Montgomery Co. Pa. 35 m. N. W. Philad.

Summei-kioum, a town of Birmah, the inhabitants of which are chiefly employed in the manufactures of saltpetre and gunpowder. It is seated on the Irrawaddy, 68 miles S. by W. of Ummerepoa.

Sumerfield, p.v. Guilford Co. N. C.

Sunm.at, p.t. Schoharie Co. N. Y. 33 m. S. W. Albany. Pop. 1,733.

Summitsville, p.v. Sullivan Co. N. Y.

Sumer, a county of W. Tennessee. Pop. 20,606. Gallatin is the capital; p.v. Oxford Co. Me. Pop. 1,099.

Sumter, a district of S. Carolina. Pop. 25,278. Sumterville the capital is 100 m. N. W. Charles ton.

Sunapee, a lake of New Hampshire 11 miles in length, in Hillsborough and Cheshire Cos. Its waters pass through Sugar River into the Connecticut.

Sunbury, p.t. Northumberland Co Pa; p.t. Liberty Co. Geo. 45 m. S. E. Savannah, on Newport river which here forms a tolerable harbour. It is a port of entry; p.t. Gates Co. N. C.; p.t. Delaware and Berkshire Cos. Ohio.

Sunart, Loch, an inlet of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, which extends 20 miles E. into the county of Argyle, from the N. end of the island of Mull.

Sunda Islands, islands in the S. E. part of the Indian Ocean. The chief of them are Borneo, Sumatra, and Java; the two latter separated by a channel called the Strait of Sunda.

Sunderbunds, a tract of country in Bengal consisting of that part of the delta of the Ganges which borders on the sea. In extent it is equal to the principality of Wales. It is completely enveloped in wood, infested with tigers, and composed of labyrinth of rivers and creeks, all of which are of salt, except those that immediately communicate with the principal arm of the Ganges. Here salt, in quantities equal to the whole consumption of Bengal and its dependencies, is made and transported with equal facility; and here also is found an inexhaustible store of timber for boat-building.

Sunderburg, a town of Denmark, in the island of Alsen, with a castle. It is seated on a strait called Sunderburg Sound, 12 miles E. of Flansburg. Long. 10. 0. E., lat. 54. 51. N.

Sunderdoo, a fortified island and sea-port of Hindoostan, in Concan, reduced by commodore James in 1756. It is 36 miles N. N. W. of Goa. Long. 73. 20. E., lat. 16. 3. N.

Sunderland, a sea-port in the county of Durham, Eng. For the exportation of coal, it is next in consequence to Newcastle. Its port, at the mouth of the Wear, will admit vessels of 400 tons; the entrance is defended by a battery, and a pier, on which is a lighthouse. Here are several small dockyards, manufactures of salt, glass, copperas, and earthenware, and a trade in lime, grindstone, and other articles. Sunderland is much frequented during the bathing seasons, and the neighbourhood for several miles round is enriched by many elegant seats and mansions. The pestilential cholera first appeared in England at this place at the latter part of 1831. It is situate on the river Wear, over which is a magnificent iron bridge of one immense arch, which will admit ships of 200 tons burden, to sail under it. 13 miles N. E. of Durham and 269 m. N. by W. of London.

Sunderland, p.t. Franklin Co. Mass. 90 m. W. Boston, with manufactures of cotton. Pop. 666; p.t. Bennington Co. Vt. 15 m. N. E. Bennington. Pop. 463.

Sundi, a province of Congo, which lies along the river Zaire. Its rivers renders it extremely fertile, and in the mountains are mines of several metals. The capital is of the same name. Long. 17. 55. E., lat. 4. 50. N.

Sundswald, a sea-port of Sweden, and the ep ital of Medelpadia. The chief trade is in tar, birch-bark, deals, hops, flax, and linen. It is seated near the gulf of Bothnia, 210 miles N. by W. of Stockholm. Long. 17. 50. E., lat. 62. 25. N.

Sunergong, or Sunnergaun, a town of Hindoostan, in Bengal, once a large city, and famous for a manufacture of fine cotton cloth. It is seated between the Burrampooter and a branch of the Ganges, 15 m. S. E. of Dacca.

Sunfish, p.v. Monroe Co. Ohio; a township of Pike Co. Ohio.

Superior Lake, a lake of N. America between the United States and Canada. 490 miles in length 1.700 miles in circumference, and the largest body of fresh water on the globe. It contains many islands; two of them very large, especially Isle Royale, which is 100 miles long, and in many places, 40 broad. The Indians suppose these islands to be the residence of the Great Spirits. Upwards of 30 rivers enter this lake, some of which are of considerable size, and its water is remarkable for purity and transparency. It abounds with fishes, particularly trout and sturgeon. Storms are even more dreadful on this lake than on the ocean. It discharges its water from the S. E. corner, through the strait of St. Mary, into lake Huron; but the quantity does not appear to be one-tenth part of what is conveyed into it by the rivers.

Supino, a town of Naples, in the Molise, with a castle, seated at the source of the Tamara, 17 m. N. by W. of Benevento.

Sur or Sour, a town of Syria, in Palestine, on the coast of the Mediterranean, where stood the famous city of Tyre, destroyed by Alexander the Great. It is now no more than a village, situate on a peninsula which projects from the shore into the sea, in the form of a mallet with an oval head. The village consists of about 60 families, who live obscurely on the produce of their little grounds and a trifling fishery, 18 miles S. S. W. of Saïda and 60 m. S. W. of Damascus.

Sura, a town of Sweden, in Westmanland, 15 m. N. of Stroemsholm.

Surat, a city of Hindoostan, in Guzerat, with a strong citadel. The squares are large, and the streets spacious, but not paved, so that the dust is troublesome. Each street has gates of its own, with which it is shut up in times of turbulence. The larger houses are flat roofed, with courts before them; and those of the common people are high roofed. It is said to have 320,000 inhabitants; and its trade is considerable, notwithstanding the sandbanks that obstruct the entrance of the Tapy, which causes large vessels to load and unload at Swally, 15 miles to the W. of Surat. In this city are Mahometans of several sects, many sorts of Gentoos, and Jews and Christians of various denominations. It is one of the stations of the London Missionary Society. The Mahometans at Surat are not, by far, so strict as they are in Arabia, or in other Turkish countries; nor are the distinctions of tribes among the Hindoos who reside here strictly observed. The latter are almost all of the cast of the Banians; and their skill and dexterity in matters of calculation and economy often raise them to places of considerable trust. Some of them are very rich, but all live in a style of moderate simplicity, and wear only a plain robe of white cotton. All people of distinction in Surat, and through the rest of India, speak and write the Persian language; but in trade, corrupt Portuguese is the language used. This city was long the emporium of the most precious productions of Hindoostan, for hither were brought from the interior parts an immense quantity of goods, which the merchants carried in their ships to the Red Sea, the Persian Gulf, the coasts of Malabar and Coromandel, and even to China. Since the rise of Bombay, however the traffic of this place has greatly declined, and now consists chiefly of raw cotton and a few of its own manufactures. One thing singular in Surat is, that, though there is no hospital for human beings, there is an extensive establishment of this nature for sick or maimed animals. When the Europeans turn out an old horse, or any other domestic animal, to perish as useless, the Hindoos voluntarily assume the care of it, and place it in this house, which is full of infirm and decrepit cows, sheep, rabbits, hens, pigeons, &c. The country round Surat is fertile, except towards the sea, where it is sandy and barren. Amongst the animals may be mentioned the Nyl Ghau, a creature somewhat between a cow and a deer and of an ashy grey colour. Before the English E. India Company obtained possession of Bombay, Surat was the seat of their presidency, and the centre of their eastern trade. It is situate 20 miles up the river Tapy and 147 m. N. of Bombay. Long. 72. 48. E., lat. 21. 11. N.

Surgooja, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a circar of the same name, in the province of Orissa. 75 m. N. E. of Ruttunpour and 210 S. S. W. of Patna. Long. 83. 32. E., lat. 23. 6. N.

Surguinsville, p.v. Hawkins Co. Ten. 240 m. N. E. Murfreesborough.

Surgut, a town of Asiatic Russia, in the government of Tobolsk, surrounded by pahasdoes, and seated on the Oby, 2.5 m. N. N. E. of Tobolsk. Long. 73. 30. E., lat. 61. 30. N.

Surinam, a country of Guiana, extending 75 miles along a river of the same name. It abounds with game, and singular animals of different kinds; the toad, in particular, being remarkable for its enormous size and ugly form. The products are fruits, indigo, sugar, tobacco, gums, and wood for dyeing. The woods are full of monkeys, and it is said there are serpents 30 feet long. Here is found the Phalanger, or Surinam rat, an animal about the size of a small rabbit

This country was ceded by the English to the Dutch, for the province of New York, in 1774. It was taken by the British in 1799, and again in 1804; but restored in 1814. The capital is Paramaribo.

Suriagua, a sea-port of Japan, in the island of Nippon, capital of a province of the same name with a castle, where the emperors formerly resided. 170 m. E. of Meaco. Lon. 139. 5. E., lat. 39. 30. N.

Surrey, a county of England, 37 m. long and 27 broad, bounded on the N. by Middlesex, E. by Kent, S. by Sussex, and W. by Hampshire and Berkshire. In 1821 the number of inhabitants was 393,653. The soil is very different in the extreme parts from that in the middle, whence it has been compared to a coarse cloth with a fine border; for the edge of the country on all sides has a rich soil, extremely fruitful in corn, and grass, particularly on the N. and W. towards the Thames; but it is far otherwise in the heart of the county, where are wide tracts of sandy ground and barren heath, and in some places long ridges of hills. It produces corn, boxwood, walnuts, hops, and fullers'-earth. Medicinal herbs are raised to a considerable extent, and about 3,500 acres of land consist of gardens for the supply of the London market. The principal rivers, besides the Thames (which is the boundary of this country on the N.), are the Mole, Wey, and Wandle. The spring assizes are held at Kingston, and the summer at Guilford and Croydon alternately.

Surry, a county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 7,108. A county of N. Carolina. Pop. 14,501. Rockford is the capital; p.t. Hancock Co. Me. Pop. 561; p.t. Cheshire Co. N. H. 40 m. S. W. Concord. Pop. 539.

Sursee, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucerne, seated on the river Sur, near the lake of Sempach, 12 m. N. W. of Lucerne.

Sus, a river of Morocco, which rises in Mount Atlas, flows through the kingdom of Sus, and enters the Atlantic at Messa. Its annual inundations enrich the country.

Sus, or Suse, a kingdom or province of the empire of Morocco, bounded on the W. by the Atlantic, N. by Morocco Proper, E. by Taflet, and S. by Darah. It is a flat country, abounding in corn, sugar-canes, and dates. The inhabitants, who are chiefly Berbers, or ancient natives, are distinguished by their industry, and many of them, who live in towns, become opulent, and are much more polite than the natives of Fez and Morocco. In the mountainous part they are entirely free, and are governed by their own chiefs. The principal town is Tarudant.

Susa, or Sousa, a sea-port of Tunis, the chief mart of the kingdom for oil and linen, and formerly a place of some repute: near it are considerable remains of ancient buildings. It stands on the E. coast, 75 m. S. E. of Tunis. Long. 11. 15. E., lat. 35. 40. N.

Susa, a province of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, consisting of a broad valley interspersed with steep rocks. It has an area of 700 square m. with 65,000 inhabitants.

Susa, a town of Piedmont, with a strong fort, called Brunette. Here are four churches and several religious houses, and near it is a triumphal arch in the honor of Augustus Caesar. It is seated on the Doria, among pleasant mountains, and is the principal passage out of France into Italy. It was taken by the French in 1799, but restored in 1814. 23 m. W. N. W. of Turin. Long. 7. 16. E., lat. 45. 10. N.

Susannah, a village of Clermont Co. Ohio.

Susdal, a town of Russia, in the government of Volodimir, and a bishop's see. It is built of wood and is seated on the Nerl, 90 m. N. E. of Moscow. Long. 40. 25. E., lat. 56. 26. N.

Susquehanna, a river of the United States, which issues from the lake Otsego. It crosses three times the line that divides the state of New York from Pennsylvania, after which it flows S. E. to Wilkesbarre, and then S. W. to Sunbury, where it meets the W. branch of the Susquehanna. It then flows by Harrisburg to Havre de Grace, where it enters the head of Chesapeake Bay. Toward its mouth its course is much impeded by falls, and several canals have been formed to assist its navigation. Vast quantities of salmon and shad are taken in its waters.

Susquehanna, a county of the W. District of Pennsylvania. Pop. 16,777. Montrose is the capital; p.v. Broome Co. N. Y.; t. Dauphin Co. Pa.

Susser, a town of France, department of Upper Vienne, 15 m. S. E. of Limoges.

Sussex, a county of England, 70 m. long and 28 where broadest; bounded on the N. by Surrey, N. E. and E. by Kent, S. by the English Channel, and W. by Hampshire. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 233,019. The soil is various, that of the downs, and thence to the sea, is fertile in corn and grass, the latter feeding sheep whose wool is remarkably fine; the middle abounds with meadows and rich arable ground, and the N. side is shaded with extensive woods, that used to supply fuel for the iron works when they were in a flourishing state. The chief commodities are corn, malt, cattle, wool, wood, iron, chalk, and glass. Sussex is not distinguished for any manufacture but that of gunpowder at Battel, and of needles at Chichester. Chichester is the capital.

Sussex, a county of New Jersey. Pop. 20,349. Newton is the capital; a county of Delaware. Pop. 27,118. Georgetown is the capital; a county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 12,720.

Susteren, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Limburg, 2 m. from the river Meuse and 10 S. of Ruremonde.

Sutherlandshire, a county of Scotland, with about 24,000 inhabitants. Some parts of this county, called forests are trackless deserts, destitute of trees; or bleak mountains, abounding with wild roes. In these parts there are few inhabitants, and no villages, but along the frith of Dornoch. The country is populous and well cultivated. It has abundance of ironstone, limestone, and slate, and many veins of lead ore. Dornoch is the county town.

Sutri, a town of the Papal States, in the patrimony of St. Peter, seated on the Puzzola, 22 m. N. W. of Rome.

Sutton Colfield, a corporate town in Warwickshire, Eng. Hardware forms the principal article of trade. 110 N. W. of London.

Sutton upon Trent, a small town in Nottinghamshire, Eng.

Sutton, p.t. Merrimack Co. N. H. 20 m. N. W. Concord. Pop. 1,421; p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 46 m. S. W. Boston, with manufactures of cotton. The Blackstone canal passes through this town. Pop. 2,186; p.v. Caledonia Co. Vt. 38 m. N. E. Montpelier. Pop. 1,005. A township of Meigs Co. Ohio.

Sutanne, St., a town of France, in the department of Mayenne, with a considerable pepper manufacture, 24 m. W. of Mans.

Sceaborg, a strong fortress of Sweden, built on several rocky islets in the gulf of Finland. In 1808 it surrendered to the Russians. 3 m. S. of Helsingfors.

Svenborg, a sea-port of Denmark, in the island of Funen, with the best harbour in the island. Here are manufactures of woolen and linen. 22 m. S. of Odens e. Long. 10. 37. E., lat. 55. 9. N.

Swaffham, a town in Norfolk, Eng. noted for utter. 93 m. N. E. of London.

Swainborough, p.v. Emanuel Co. Geo. 80 m S. E. Milledgeville.

Swale, a river in Yorkshire, Eng. This river was held sacred by the Saxons from the circumstance of upwards of 10,000 persons having been baptized in it by Paulinus, archbishop of York, upon their conversion to Christianity.

Swally, a town of Hindoostan, in Guzerat, with a harbour, where ships receive and deliver their cargoes for the merchants of Surat. It is seated near the gulf of Cambay, 15 m. W. of Surat. Long. 72. 33. E., lat. 21. 10. N.

Swalwell, a village in the county of Durham, Eng.

Swamp Churches, p.v. Montgomery Co. Pa.

Swan, a township of Hocking Co. Ohio.

Swan River, a river of N. America, which rises in lake Etowwemahmeh, passes through Pwan Lake, and falls into the Mississippi about 40 m. from its source. All the country in the neighbourhood of this and Red Deer River abounds in beavers, moose deer, sallow deer, elks, bears, buffaloes, &c. The soil is good, and promises to reward the industrious cultivator. A great number of persons have recently emigrated to this country from Great Britain and Ireland.

Swanville, a township of Waldo Co. Me. 15 m. S. W. Castine. Pop. 633.

Swanage, a village in Dorsetshire, Eng. seated on a bay of the same name, in the English Channel, 4 m. E. S. E. of Corfe Castle.

Switara, a river of Pennsylvania flowing into the Susquehanna at Middletown. Also a township of Dauphin Co. Pa.

Swicasyville, a township of Adams Co. Missouri.

Sweden, a kingdom of Europe, extending 1,000 m. from N. to S. and 300 from E. to W., bounded on the N. by Norwegian Lapland, E. by Russia,

S. by the gulf of Finland and the Baltic, and W. by the Sound, the Categat, and Norway. It was formerly divided into five general parts; Sweden Proper, Gothland, Nordland, Lapland, and Finland; and each of these subdivided into provinces. The greater part of Finland, however, was ceded to Russia in 1808, but in 1814, on ceding the small province of Swedish Pomerania, it acquired Norway, including which, and Norwegian Lapland, the total extent of surface may be computed at 343,000 sq. m. with a pop. scarcely exceeding 3,500,000. The Pop. of Sweden alone is 2,790,000.

The whole country is now divided into 23 governments, Umea, Hernosand, Gefleborg, Upsal, Stockholm, Westeras, Nykoping, Orebro, Stora Kopparberg or Fahlun, Carlstadt, Lindkoping, Jonkoping, Kronoborg or Wexio, Calmar Carlserona, Scaraborg, Elfsborg, Gottenburg Halmstadt, Christianstadt, Malmohus, and Wisby. Though enclosed by mountains on the W. and N., it is in general a very flat country; and it is remarkable that along the whole road, from Gottenburg in the W. to Stockholm in the E., there is not a single acclivity of consequence, till within a few miles of the latter. It is well watered by rivers (though not a single navigable one worth mentioning), numerous lakes, and inland pieces of water, on the banks of which the palaces and villas are usually built. At Stockholm, spring and autumn are scarcely to be perceived; for winter continues nine months, and summer during the remaining three. In winter the cold is excessive, and the heat in summer is considerable, the air being serene all that time. During this season all the rocks are quite covered with flowers, and the gardens have plenty of fruits. The trees are early in blossoming, the soil being fat and sulphureous; but the fruits have not so good a taste as in more southern countries. The animals are horses, cows, hogs, goats, sheep, elks, reindeer, bears, wolves, foxes, wild cats, and squirrels. The horses are so little and feeble that seven are put to a travelling carriage, four a breast in the first line, and three in the second; but a lame or foundered horse is seldom to be seen, which is attributed, in a great degree, to the manner of stabling them on perforated boards without litter. In some parts are rich silver, copper, and iron mines, and vast forests of timber trees. The articles of export, are boards, gunpowder, leather, iron, copper, tallow, skins, pitch, rosin, and masts; and the imports salt, brandy, wine, linen cloth, stuffs, tobacco, sugar, spice.

and paper. The inhabitants are of a robust constitution, and able to sustain the hardest labour. They are, however, more polished than formerly, and have several public schools and colleges, where the arts and sciences are taught. Their houses are generally of wood, with very little art in their construction. The roofs in many places are covered with turf, on which their goats often feed.

The form of the Swedish government has frequently varied. Before the accession of Gustavus I. it was an elective monarchy. By the union of Calmar, in 1397, it was stipulated that the same monarch should rule over Denmark, Sweden, and Norway; and hence Sweden became a merely tributary kingdom to Denmark. From this state of subjection to a tyrannical foreign yoke, it was rescued by Gustavus Vasa, on whom the Swedes, in 1523, conferred the sovereignty, and made the crown hereditary in his male issue. He was entrusted with great prerogatives; and these were augmented by Gustavus Adolphus, the right of succession being extended, at the same time, to the female line. In the minority of his daughter Christina, the regal powers were greatly circumscribed, and the nobles acquired such an exorbitant authority as gave great umbrage to the clergy, citizens, and peasants. This proved a favourable opportunity for Charles XI. to obtain from the states a formal cession of absolute sovereignty, which quietly devolved upon his son, Charles XII. Upon the death of the latter, the Swedes conferred the crown upon Ulrica Eleonora, his youngest sister, stipulating, at the same time, great limits to the prerogative. Ulrica resigned the crown to her consort Frederic I. From this period the Swedish monarch was the most limited one in Europe, till 1772, when Gustavus III. effected a revolution, by which he regained the most essential royal prerogatives, without, however, being an absolute monarch. He was assassinated in 1792, leaving his son Gustavus Adolphus, a minor, who attained his majority in 1796. This prince was deposed on the 1st of May, 1809, and his uncle, the duke of Sudermania, was called to the throne. But soon after his accession, in consequence of the sudden death of his son, the crown prince, he assembled the diet of the kingdom, in order to choose a successor to the throne. The Swedish diet met for this purpose at Orebro, on the 8th of August 1810, and, after a short speech from the king, they elected the French marshal, prince of Ponto Corvo, to the dignity of crown prince of Sweden. This person, though a Frenchman and raised to rank and eminence under Bonaparte greatly distinguished himself in the service of the allies in 1813, at the head of the Swedish army, and in 1814 secured Norway to Sweden by the treaty of Kiel. The established religion is the Lutheran, and they have one archbishop and 13 bishops. Stockholm is the capital. The annual revenue is 4,500,000 dollars: the public debt 17,264,812 dollars. The army amounts to 45,000 men.

Swindon, a town in Wiltshire, 83 m. W. of London.

Swinemunde, a town of the Prussian states, in Pomerania, in the isle of Usedom; situate at the mouth of the river Swine, 13 m. E. by N. of Usedom. Long. 14. 12. E., lat. 53. 56. N.

Swineshead, a town in Lincolnshire, Eng., 6 m. E. of Boston and 110 N. of London.

Swinaa, a small island of Scotland, one of the Orkneys, situate near the middle of the Pentland frith. Here are two whirl-pools, that are dangerous to mariners, particularly in a calm.

Switzerland, a country of Europe, bounded on the N. and E. by Germany, S. by Italy, and W. by France. It is 220 m. long and 140 broad, and is separated from the adjacent countries by high mountains, called the Alps. Switzerland has been divided, since 1815, into 22 cantons, namely, Lucerne, Uri, Schweiz, Unterwalden, Zug, Friburg, Soleure, Tesino, Valais, Bern, Basel, Schaffhausen, Zurich, Vaud, Neuchatel, Geneva, Appenzel, Glaris, Grisons, St. Gall, Thurgau, and Aargau. The first nine are Catholics, the next seven are Calvinists, and the others contain both religions. Each canton has its distinct internal government. The general government of the country is by a diet, composed of a member from each canton, which assembles annually in June at Friburg, Bern, Soleure, Basil, Zurich, or Lucerne, in rotation; and the president is styled Landamman of Switzerland. The diet declares war, concludes peace, makes alliances with foreign states, and also decides on all treaties on commerce. There are four passages over the Alps into Italy from Switzerland; the first is beyond the lake of Geneva, over Mount Cenis which leads to Savoy; the second begins in the country of the Grisons, crosses Mount St. Bernard, and leads to the valley of Aosta in Piedmont; the third begins in the country of the Grisons, crosses Mount Simplon, and leads to the duchy of Milan; the fourth crosses Mount St. Gothard, and the bailiwicks of Italy, and terminates in the Milanese. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lucerne, Zurich, and Neuchatel. The most considerable rivers are the Rhine, Rhone, Aar, Arve, Reuss, and Linmat. Switzerland exceeds every country in the world in diversity of appearance: the vast chain of Alps, with enormous precipices, extensive regions of perpetual snow, and glaciers that resemble seas of ice, are contrasted by the vineyard and cultivated field, the richly wooded brow and the verdant valley with its crystal stream. Agriculture, cannot, of course, be carried to great extent, but the grain produced is sufficient for domestic consumption. The chief riches consist of excellent pastures, in which many cattle are bred and fattened, and the goats and chamois feed on the mountains and in the woods. The men are strong and robust. The women are tolerably handsome, and are in general very industrious. The peasants retain their old manner of dress, and are content to live upon milk, butter, and cheese; and there are some of the mountaineers who never have any bread. In 1797, the part-zans of France having excited disturbances in Switzerland, the French entered the country ; and, after defeating the troops and the peasants, who opposed them in several battles, they abolished the constitutions of the principal cantons, erected what was termed the Helvetic Republic, and vested the government in two councils and a directory. This constitution was abolished, in 1802, by the first consul of France, and another was presented for their acceptance, but rejected; he offered them a new one in 1803, which they consented to accept. In December, 1813, the allied armies traversed the country, for the purpose of invading France, when some partial changes again took place in the administration of Switzerland, which was the cause of violent commotions amongst several of the cantons; but, in 1814, on the meeting of the diet, these disturbances were appeased, and on the 8th of September a federal compact was signed at Zurich. The population of Switzerland in 1827 was 2,037,030. The revenue is about 2,500,000 dollars. The army amounts to 15,000 men.

Switzerland, a county of Indiana. Pop 7,111. Vevay is the capital.

Swohetoen, p.v. Lancaster Co. Pa.

Sya, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland, 13 m. S. W. of Lindkoping.

Sycamore, a township of Hamilton Co. Ohio. Pop. 2,779. A township of Crawford Co. Ohio.

Sydney Bay, a bay on the S. side of Norfolk Island, in the S. Pacific, formed by Point Hunter and Point Ross, which are nearly 2 m. asunder. Long. 168. 12. E., lat. 29. 4. S.

Sydney, a town of New S. Wales, founded by governor Phillips, on a cove of Port Jackson, in 1788, as a British settlement for the colony of convicts; originally intended for Botany Bay. It is now the principal seat of the government, and has a handsome church, an orphan school, a commodious gaol, a military hospital, a naval yard, a good market, &c. The governor's house is built of stone, and has a very good appearance; the lieutenant-governor's is of brick as are also those belonging to the judge and the commissary. The generality of the houses are built of logs and plastered, and all the roofs are covered either with shingles or thatch. It is situate on the S. side of the harbour of Port Jackson. Long. 151. 23. E., lat. 33. 48. S.

Syene, or Asuan, a town of Egypt, with a small fort on the right bank of the Nile. It was anciently a city, and celebrated for the first attempt to ascertain the circumference of the earth by Eratosthenes, a native of Cyrene, about the year 275 B. C. The remains of the ancient town are on an eminence to the S. where columns and pillars of granite scattered here and there denote its situation. Near it on a small island in the Nile anciently called Elephantina, are the ruins of a temple of Cnuphis. 400 m. S. of Cairo. Long. 33. 20. E., lat. 24. 0. N.

Sylt, an island of Denmark, on the W. coast of Jutland, of an irregular form, about 40 m. in circumference, but in no part above 2 m. from the sea. Great quantities of oysters are found here. The chief town is Morsum. Long. 8. 26. E., lat. 54. 57. N.

Sylvania, p.v. Bradford Co. Pa.

Sytres, a town of Portugal, in Algarva, situate on a river of the same name, 15 m. E. N. E. of Lagos and 42 W. of Tavira.

Symmes, townships in Lawrence and Hamilton Cos. Ohio.

Symphoropol, the capital of the Crimea, or Russian province of Taurida. The houses are built of stone, and roofed in the ancient Greek style, with tiles. There are likewise numerous modern handsome buildings, for the residence of the governor, judges, and other civil officers. The old Tartar part of the town, called Achmetshet, is dirty and ill built. The environs are beautiful; and 2 m. to the E. of the city is the mountain Tchatirdagh, the highest in the Crimea, and the Mons. Berosus of the ancients. Sympheropol is situate on the Salgir, the principal river of the province, 65 m. W. by S. of Caffa, and 90 S. by E. of Precob. Long. 34. 0. E., lat. 44. 52. N.

Syracuse, a sea-port of Sicily, in Val di Noto and a bishop's see, with a fine harbour, defended by a castle. It was once the metropolis of all Sicily; war, tyranny, and earthquakes have reduced it to less than one-fourth of its former size, when it was deemed one of the most famous cities in the world, and 22 m. in compass. Near this place in 1718, there was a sea-fight between the Spaniards and English, in which the latter were victorious. It is seated near the sea, 72. m. S. by W. of Messina and 110 S. E. of Palermo. Long. 15. 10. E., lat. 37. 5. N.

Syracuse, p.v. Onondaga Co. N. Y. 155 m. W. Albany, on the Erie Canal, at the point where a branch strikes off to Lake Ontario along Oswego river. Great quantities of salt are manufactured here from the water of a spring, a mile and a half from the town. The water is brought from the spring by aqueducts and is evaporated in the sun. The vats cover 160 acres.

Syria, or Saristan, a province of Turkey in Asia, bounded on the N. by Naxolia and Diarbeck, E. by the latter and the deserts of Arabia, S. by Arabia Petrea, and W. by the Mediterranean. Under the general name of Syria was included the ancient Phœnicia, lying S. of Syria Proper. This province abounds in oil, corn, and several sorts of fruits, as well as peas, beans, and all kinds of pulse and garden-stuff; but it would produce much more than it does, if it were well cultivated; for there are the finest valleys in the world, between mountains whose sides are proper for the cultivation of tobacco, olives, and vines. The Jerboa, a pretty little animal somewhat like a mouse is common here. The inhabitants have a trade in silk, camlets, and salt. Syria was possessed by a succession of foreign nations, before the time of Ptolemy, when it became a province of the Roman empire. Five centuries after, when the sons of Theodosius divided their immense patrimony, this country was annexed to the empire of Constantinople. In this situation it continued till the year 622, when the Arabian tribes, under the banners of Mahomet, seized or rather laid it waste. Since that period it has been torn to pieces by the civil wars of the Fatemites and Ommiades—wrested from the califfs by their rebellious governors—taken from them by the Turkmen soldiers—invalued by the European crusades—retaken by the Mamelukes of Egypt—and ravaged by Tamerlane and his Tartars; it fell, at length, into the hands of the Ottoman Turks, who have been its masters nearly three centuries. It is divided into five pachalics, or governments, Aleppo, Tripoli, Damascus, Acre, and Palestine. Aleppo is the capital.

Syriam, a sea-port of Birmah, in Pegu, seated at the head of a river of the same name, opposite the mouth of Pegu River, 2 m. to the S. is the great pagoda of Syriam. 8 m. E. by N. of Rangoon and 60 S. of Pegu. Long. 96. 17. E., lat. 16. 50. N.

Syrk, a town of France, department of Moselle, 14 m. S. E. of Luxemburg.

Szekely, a town of Hungary, 18 m. E. S. E. of Debreezen.

Szlain, a district of Austria, in Croatia, comprising an area of 320 sq. m., with 40,000 inhabitants. It has a small town of the same name, on the Crona, 24 m. S. by E. of Carlstadt.

Szucca, a town of W. Prussia, seated on the Vistula, 12 m. S. by W. of Culm.

T

TAAIF, a town of Arabia, in the province of Hedjas, with a considerable trade in raisins and almonds, and other fruits. It is situate on a lofty mountain, 60 m. S. E. of Mecca. Long. 41. 35. E., lat. 21. 5. N.

Taas, a strong city of Arabia, in the province of Yemen, with a fortress. Here is the tomb of a saint, who, according to tradition, was king of the country. The city is seated at the foot of a fertile hill, 48 m. E. N. E. of Mocha. Long. 44. 10. E., lat. 13. 45. S.

Tausinge, an island of Denmark, between those of Langeland and Funen, 8 m. long and 4 broad. Long. 10. 37. E., lat. 54. 48. N.

Taata, a town of Upper Egypt, 1 m. from the Nile. It is the residence of a governor, has many curious remains of antiquity, and is 200 m. S. of Cairo. Long. 31. 25. E., lat. 26. 56. N.

Tabaga, an island in the bay of Panama, 4 m. long and 3 broad. It is mountainous, but abounds with fruit-trees. Long. 80. 16. W., lat. 7. 50. S.

Tabarca, an island on the coast of Barbary, at the mouth of the Zaine. It was fortified, and had a populous city of the same name, when under the dominion of the Genoese, who had a coral fishery here. But in 1757, on the Genoese attempting to transfer the island to France, the Tabareans surrendered their city to Tunis; and they were cruelly deceived by the bey, for he razed the fortifications, and took away most of the inhabitants as slaves. 50 m. W. N. W. of Tunis. Long. 9. 16. E., lat. 36. 50. N.

Tabarico, the ancient Tiberias, a town of Palestine, situate on the W. side of a lake, formerly called the sea of Tiberias, 50 m. N. N. E. of Jerusalem and 70 S. S. W. of Damascus. Long. 35. 45. E., lat. 32. 40. N.

In the 17th century it was very extensive and populous, possessing manufactures of silk, wool, and cotton; and it was celebrated for its cabinet ware. Little of these now remain, and the limits of the city are very circumscribed. The Indus, and its branches, admit of an uninterupted navigation from Tatta to Moultan, Lahore, and Cashmere, for vessels of nearly 200 tons; and a very extensive trade was carried on between those places, in the time of Aurungzebe; but this trade is now much diminished, owing to a bad government in Sindy, and to a hostile disposition of the Seiks. 280 m. W. N. W. of Amedabad and 390 S. S. W. of Moultan. Long. 67. 37. E., lat. 24. 50. N.

Tuttah, a town on the common frontiers of Morocco, Darah, and Tafilet, and in the route from Morocco to Timbuctoo. 170 m. S. by E. of Morocco. Long. 6. 15. W., lat. 28. 25. N.

Tattershall, a town in Lincolnshire, Eng., 128 m. N. E. of London.

Tauchel, a town of Prussia, in Pomerelia, seated on the Verd, 30 m. N. W. of Culm.

Taumaco, a town of European Turkey, in the province of Janna, 18 m. N. W. of Zeiton.

Taumago, a fertile island in the Pacific Ocean, 24 m. in circuit, discovered by Quiros in 1606. Long. 170. 45. W., lat. 13. 0. S.

Taunton, a river of Massachusetts flowing S. W. into Narraganset Bay. It is navigable 20 m. to Taunton for vessels of 50 tons.

Taunton, p.t. Bristol Co. Mass. on the above river, 32 m. S. Boston. Pop. 6,045. Here are large and thriving manufactures of cotton, iron, copper, lead, and Britannia ware. 7,500,000 yards of calico are made here yearly.

Taunton, a borough in Somersetshire, Eng. The silk trade furnishes the principal employment of the inhabitants, the manufacture of coarse woolen goods, which was formerly carried on here to considerable extent, having been transferred to Wellington and other neighbouring towns. 141 m. W. by S. of London.

Taurcau, an isle of France, department of Finisterre, at the mouth of the river Morlaix, with a fort to defend the port of Morlaix.

Taurida. See Crimea.

Tauris, or Tabris, a city of Persia, capital of Aderbeitzan, and formerly the capital of Persia. It is of an irregular figure, and has neither walls nor fortifications. The river Spingtcha flows through it, and the Agi passes on the N. side of the city. The bazaars, from their largeness, the beautiful domes with which they are covered and the merchandise with which they are filled, make as fine an appearance as any in Asia. Here were formerly 300 caravanseras so spacious that 300 persons might lodge in each; and the mosques and baths were grand and magnificent structures. In 1724 it was terribly shaken by an earthquake, and nearly 100,000 persons perished. Soon after this calamity the Turks laid siege to it, and they were driven away with great loss but they took it the next year after a bloody contest, in which the Persians lost 30,000 men and the Turks 20,000. Of 250 mosques, mentioned by Chardin, the ruins of three only are visible. The inhabitants carry on a good trade in cotton, cloth, silks, gold and silver brocades, fine turbans, and shagreen leather. It is seated in a fertile plain, at the foot of a mountain, 95 m. S. E. of Naksivan and 320 N. W. of Ispahan. Long. 48. 0. E. lat. 38. 28. N.

Taurus, or Kuron, a chain of mountains in Asia, which begins near the shores of the Archipelago and extends 600 m. to the river Euphrates. The Taurian chain was formerly considered as extending to the sources of the Ganges, and the extremities of Asia, so far as discovered by the ancients; but various parts of it were known by different names.

Taus, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Pilsen, 31 m. S. S. W. of Pilsen.

Tavastland, a district of European Russia, in the middle of Finland, 150 m. long and 100 broad. The N. part is mountainous and woody, but the greater part consists of fertile plains, watered by numerous rivers and lakes. Notwithstanding the goodness of the soil, in which it is scarcely surpas sed by any province in Sweden, it is far from being well cultivated; and the peasants are generally poor. The chief traffic is in corn, flax, hemp, dried fish, cattle, leather, tallow, and lime.

Tavastus, or Tavastborg, a town of Finland, formerly capital of the district of Tavastland. It has a strong castle, and is seated on a river which flows into the lake Wana, 110 m. E. N. E. of Abo.

Taverna, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ultra, 20 m. E. N. E. of Nicastro.

Tavira, or Tavila, a sea-port of Portugal, in Algarva, with a castle, and one of the best harbours in the kingdom, defended by two forts. It is seated at the mouth of the Gilaon, in the gulf of Cadiz, 96 m. N. W. of Cadiz and 136 S. E. of Lisbon. Long. 7. 36. W., lat. 37. 8. N.

Tavistock, a borough in Devonshire, Eng. with a manufacture of serges. In its vicinity was born the famous sir Francis Drake. It is seated on the river Tavy, 32 m. W. by S. of Exeter and 207 of London.

Tavoy, a sea-port on the W. coast of Siam, in a district of its name, which was wrested from the Siamese by the Birman, and subsequently ceded to the British in 1824-5. The town is 150 m. W. N. W. of Siam. Long. 98. 20. E., lat. 14. 45. N.

Tazahaw, p.v. Lancaster Dis. S. C.

Tay, a river of Scotland, which rises on the W. borders of Perthshire, flows through Loch Tay to Dunkeld, Perth, and Newburg, below which to the sea (above 20 miles) it may be deemed a continued harbour, and is called the Frith of Tay, having Fifeshire on one side and the counties of Perth and Angus on the other.

Tay, Loch, a lake of Scotland, in Perthshire, 15 m. long and in most parts above one broad, formed by several streams and the river Tay, which flows through its whole length.

Taylorville, p.v. Hanover Co. Va. 30 m from Richmond; p.v. Fairfield Dis. S. C. 18 m. from Columbia; p.t. Shelby Co. Ken. 30 m. S. E. Louisville.

Tazewell, a county of the W. District of Virginia. Pop. 4,104; p.v. the capital of this Co. 302 m. W. Richmond; p.v. Claiborne Co. Ten. 50 m. N. E. Knoxville.

Tzovskaia, a bay of Siberia, in Obskaia Gulf, about 140 miles long and 3 broad.

Tchad, a lake of Central Africa, in the kingdom of Bornou, in lat. 13. N. long. 15. W. It was first seen by Doctor Oudney and his companions, and afterwards visited by Clapperton and Denham. It is 200 m. long and 150 broad. It receives the rivers Yeou from the W. and Shary from the S. It abounds in fish, and its borders exhibit all the splendour of tropical vegetation. Its water is fresh. Major Denham travelled along the greater part of the shore, but was obliged to leave 144 m. of it unexplored. He was informed that it had no outlet.

Tching-tcha, a city of China, capital of the S. part of Hou-quang. It is seated on the river Heng, which has a communication with an extensive lake, called Tong-ting-hou, 740 m. S. by W. of Peking. Long. 112. 25. E., lat. 28. 11. N.

Tchang-tcheou, a city of China, of the first rank, in Fo-ken. It has a considerable trade with Emony, Pong-hou, and Formosa; and is 950 m. S. of Peking. Long. 117. 35. E., lat. 24. 32. N.

Tchang-te, a city of China, of the first rank, in Ho-nan. It is remarkable for a fish, like a crocodile, the fat of which is of such a singular nature that when once ignited it cannot be extinguished. Near it is a mountain so steep and inaccessible that in the time of war it affords a safe asylum to the inhabitants. It is 255 m. S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 111. 5. E., lat. 29. 2. N.

Tchao-king, a city of China, of the first rank, in Quang-tong, seated on the river Si, 70 m. W. of Canton.

Tchao-tchou, a city of China, of the first rank, in Quang-tong, seated on the Peikiang, 86 m. E. of Canton.

Tche-kiang, a province of China, one of the most considerable in extent, riches, and pop. It is bounded on the N. and W. by Kiang-nan, S. W. by Kiang-si, S. by Fo-ken, and E. by the ocean. In this province, whole plains are covered with dwarf mulberry trees, purposely checked in their growth; and prodigious quantities of silk-worms are bred. The principal branch of trade consists in silk stuffs; and those in which gold and silver are intermixed are the most beautiful in China. The tallow tree grows here, and a species of mushrooms, which are transported to all the provinces of the empire; and here also are found the small gold fish with which ponds are commonly stocked. In Tche-kiang are reckoned 11 cities of the first rank, 72 of the third, and 18 fortresses, which in Europe would be deemed large cities. Hang-tcheou is the capital.

Tcheou-chan, an island near the W. coast of China, belonging to the province of Tche-kiang. It is about 24 m. long and from 5 to 10 broad.

Tchernigof, a government of Russia, formerly a part of the Ukraine. Its capital, of the same name, is seated on the Desne, 345 miles S. S. W. of Moscow. Long. 66. 45. E., lat. 51. 24. N.

Tchesne, a town on the W. coast of Natolia, with a citadel. It stands almost opposite Scio, at the head of a spacious road, which is famous for the destruction of the Turkish fleet, by the Russians, in 1770. It is 48 miles W. of Smyrna. Long. 26. 26. E., lat. 38. 26. N.

Tching-kiang, a city of China, of the first rank, in Se-tchuen, 910 miles S. W. of Peking. Long. 104. 26. E., lat. 27. 18. N.

Tching-kiang, a strong city of China, of the first rank, in Kiang-nan, and the key of the empire towards the sea. Its situation and trade, and the beauty of its walls, give it a pre-eminence over the other cities of the province. It is seated on the S. side of the Kian-ku, 470 miles S. S. E. of Peking. Long. 18. 55. E. lat. 32. 14. N.

Tching-kiang, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Yun-nan, 36 miles S. by E. of Yun-nan. Long. 102. 40. E., lat. 24. 44. N.

Tching-tcheou, a city of China, of the first rank, in Hou-quang, seated on an angle formed by two rivers. Under it are five cities of the third class, in which a kind of plain earthenware is prepared, which the Chinese prefer to the most elegant porcelain. It is 765 miles S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 109. 40. E., lat. 28. 23. N.

Tching-ting, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Pe-tche-li, 136 miles S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 114. 21. E., lat. 38. 9. N.

Tching-tou, a city of China of the first rank, in the province of Se-tchuen. It was formerly the residence of the emperors, and one of the largest and most beautiful cities in the empire; but in 1646, during the civil wars that preceded the last invasion of the Tartars, it was almost entirely destroyed. Its temples, and the ruins of ancient palaces are objects of admiration to strangers. 1810 m. S. W. of Peking. Long. 103. 44. E., lat. 30. 40. N.

Tchin-ngan, a city of China, of the first rank, in Quang-si, 1,250 m. S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 106. 0. E., lat. 23. 21. N.

Tchi-tcheou, a city of China, of the first rank, in Kiang-nan; seated on the river Kiang, 570 m. S. of Peking. Long. 117. 0. E., lat. 30. 45. N.

Tchi-yuen, a city of China, of the first rank, in Koei-tcheou, 980 m. S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 107. 51. E., lat. 27. 1. N.

Tchoka. See Saghaliën.

Tchong-king, a city of China, of the first rank, in Se-tchuen. It is seated on a mountain, rising in the form of an amphitheatre, at the conflux of the Kincha with the Kian-ku, 750 m. S. W. of Peking. Long. 106. 20. E., lat. 29. 42. N.

Tchou-kiang, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Yun-nan, 75 m. W. of Yun-nan. Long. 101. 20. E., lat. 25. 6. N.

Tchukotski, the most eastern part of Siberia, in the province of Okotsk. The attention of the natives is confined chiefly to their deer, with which the country abounds. They are a well-made, courageous, warlike race, and are formidable neighbours to the Koriaes, who often experience their depredations.

Tchukotskoi, a cape of Siberia, on the eastern extremity of Asia, and the S. W. limit of Beer-ing strait. Long. 172. 30. W., lat. 64. 15. N.

Tchu-tcheou, a city of China, of the first rank, in Tche-kiang, 730 m. S. S. E. of Peking. Long. 120. 33. E., lat. 28. 36. N.

Tchiticar, the largest of the three provinces of Chinese Tartary, bounded on the N. by Siberia, N. E. by the sea of Okotsk, S. E. by the province of Kirin, and W. by Western Tartary and Siberia. It is a mountainous country, watered by the river Saghaliën, which receives many others in its course.

Tchiticar, a city of Chinese Tartary, capital of the foregoing province, and the residence of a Mandarin general. This city was built by the Emperor of China, to secure his frontiers against the incursions of the Russians. It is seated on the Nonni, 355 m. N. N. E. of Peking. Long. 123. 30. E., lat. 47. 25. N.

Teddington, a village of Middlesex, Eng. seated on the Thames, 12 m. W. S. W. of London.

Teddeza, a town of Algiers, on the coast of the Mediterranean, with a castle, 45 m. E. of Algiers.

Tednest, a town of Morocco, in the province of Hea, almost surrounded by a river. It was taken by the Portuguese in 1517, but they were driven away soon after. 40 m. N. E. of Mogador.

Tedsî, a town of Morocco, in the province of Sus, seated in a plain abounding in corn, 20 m. S. E. of Tarudant.

Teembo, a city of Central Africa, capital of the kingdom of Foota Jalloo. The inhabitants estimated at 8,000, carrying on manufactures of cloth, iron, silver, wood, leather, &c. 160 m. E. of Sierra Leone.

Tees, a river which rises on the confines of Cumberland, Eng. separates the counties of Durham and York, and enters the German Ocean below Stockton.

Tefessad, a town of Algiers, with mines of iron in its neighbourhood, 32 m. S. W. of Algiers.

Teflis, a city of Asia, the capital of Georgia, called by the inhabitants Thilis-Caba (Warm Town), from the warm baths in its neighbourhood. It contains 20,000 inhabitants, of whom more than one-half are Armenians. The streets seldom exceed seven feet in breadth, and the houses are of stone with flat roofs, which serve as walks for the women. Here is a foundry for cannon, mortars, and balls; also a public school founded by emperor Alexander. The most flourishing manufactures are those of silks and printed linens; but the chief trade is in furs sent to Turkey and the S. of Persia. In 1723 it was taken by the Turks, and in 1734 retaken by Kouli Khan. It is seated on the Kur, at the foot of a hill, 300 m. S. S. W. of Astracan. Long. 45. 3. E., lat. 42. 20. N.

Tefu, a strong town of Morocco, capital of a district of the same name, seated on the side of a mountain, 70 m. N. N. E. of Morocco. Long. 5 55. W., lat. 32. 0. N.

Tefzra, a town of Algiers, in the province of Mascara, 55 m. S. S. W. of Oran.

Tegaza, a town of Zahara, capital of a territory of that name, remarkable for mountains of salt. Long. 6. 30. W., lat. 21. 40. N.

Tegerhy, a town of the kingdom of Fezzan, 80 m. S. W. of Mourzook.

Tenedos, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, on the coast of Asia Minor, 14 m. S. of the strait of Gallipoli. It is 11 m. long and 7 broad, is inhabited almost wholly by Greeks, and its muscadine wine is the best in all the Levant. On the E. side is the town, at the foot of a mountain, with a harbour defended by a castle. Long. 26. 0. E., lat. 39. 50. N.

Teneiffe, one of the Canary Islands, and the most considerable of them for riches, trade, and population. It lies W. of the Grand Canary, is 70 m. long and 22 broad, and abounds in wine, different sorts of fruits, cattle, and game. One part of this island is surrounded by inaccessible mountains, of which one in particular, called the Peak of Teneriffe, is 12,072 feet above the level of the sea, and the distance to the Peak from the port of Oratavia, at the base of the mountain, is above 11 m. This island is subject to volcanic eruptions and in 1704 one destroyed several towns and many thousand people. The laborious works in this island are chiefly performed by oxen and mules, horses being scarce and reserved for the use of the officers. Hawks and parrots are natives of the island, as are swallows, sea-gulls, partridges, canary birds, and blackbirds. There are also lizards, locusts, and dragon-flies. St. Christophe de Laguna is the capital, but the governor resides at St. Cruz.

Teneriffe, a town of the republic of Colombia, in the former vice-royalty of New Granada, seated on the Madalena, 100 m. S. S. W. of St. Martha.

Tenez, or Tenis, a town of Algiers, in the province of Mascara, capital of a district of its name, with a fort. It has a considerable trade in corn and is seated on a river, 4 m. from the sea and 85 W. S. W. of Algiers.

Teng-an, a city of China, of the first rank, in Hou-quang, 550 m. S. by W. of Pekin. Long. 113 21. E., lat. 31. 20. N.

Tennessee, a river of the United States, the largest of all those which flow into the Ohio. Its commencement is formed in the state to which it gives name, by the junction of the Clinch with the Holston, 35 m. below Knoxville. It flows S. W., on the E. side of Cumberland Mountains, into Georgia, where it makes a circuit to the W. of called the Great Bend; it then re-enters the state of Tennessee, which it passes quite through into that of Kentucky, where it enters the Ohio, 50 m. above the conflux of that river with the Mississippi. The Tennessee is 600 yards broad at its mouth, and is thence navigable by vessels of great burden for 260 m., to the Muscle Shoals, in the Great Bend: here the river widens to between 2 and 3 m. for nearly 30 m.; and these shoals can only be passed in small boats; hence it may be navigated, by boats of 40 tons burden, 400 m. further to its commencement.

Tennessee, one of the United States, bounded N. by Kentucky; E. by North Carolina; S. by Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi; and W. by the river Mississippi, separating it from Missouri and Arkansas. Its length is about 430 m.; its breadth 104 m. It lies between 35. and 36. 36. N. lat., and between 81. 30. and 90. 10. W. long., and contains 40,000 sq. m. The western part of the State is comparatively level. The eastern portion is mountainous.

The Cumberland Mountains extend through the state from N. E. to S. W., dividing it into two sections. In East Tennessee are many parallel ridges, the most lofty of which, are the Laurel, Stone, Yellow, Iron, Bald, and Unaka Mountains. All these are peaks of a continued chain. Wellings' and Copper Ridge, and Church, Powell's, and Bay's Mountains, are in the N. E. The summits of some of these mountains exhibit plateaus of considerable extent, which admit of good roads, and are inhabited and cultivated. The heights subside as they approach the Mississippi and Ohio. The mountains contain a great number of caverns, which are among the most remarkable features of the country. They are of so frequent occurrence that very few have been explored; and little more is known of them, than that they abound in nitrous earth. One of them has been descended 400 feet below the surface, and found to consist of a smooth limestone rock, with a stream of pure water at the bottom, sufficient to turn a mill. A cave on a high peak of the Cumberland Mountain has a perpendicular depth that has never been fathomed. The enchanted Mountains, which are portions of the Cumberland ridge, exhibit some very singular footprints of men, horses, and other animals distinctly marked in a solid rock of limestone. In many cases they appear as if the feet which marked them had slid while the stone was in a soft state. One of the tracks is 16 inches long and 13 inches wide.

The whole state is well watered. The largest rivers are the Cumberland and Tennessee, which fall into the Ohio. The Obian, Forked Deer, Big Hatchee and Wolf rivers intersect the western part of the State, and fall into the Mississippi.

The valleys of the small rivers are extremely beautiful, and rich beyond any of the same description in the western states. The valleys of the great streams of the Tennessee and Cumberland, differ little from the alluvions of the other great rivers of the West. On the small valleys are many fine plantations, and yet so lonely that they seem lost among the mountains.

The climate is delightful, being milder than in Kentucky, and free from the intense heat which prevails in the southern portion of the Mississippi valley. Snows of some depth are frequent in the winter, but the summers, especially in the higher regions, are mild. In these parts, the salubrity of the climate is thought to equal that of any part of the United States; but the low valleys where stagnant waters abound, and the alluvions of the great rivers are unhealthy. Maize is planted in the central parts of the state early in April.

The soil in East Tennessee is remarkably fertile, containing great proportions of lime. In West Tennessee the soil is various, and the strata descend from the mountains in the following order; first, loamy soil, or mixtures of clay and sand; next, yellow clay; thirdly, a mixture of red sand and red clay; lastly, white sand. In the southern parts, are immense beds of oyster shells, on high table land, at a distance from the Mississippi, or any other stream; some of these shells are of an enormous size. The soil of the valleys and alluvions is extremely fertile.

Nearly all the forest trees of the western country are found in this state, but the laurel tribes are not common. Juniper, red cedar, and savin cover the mountains. Apples, pears, and plums, which are properly northern fruits, are raised in great perfection. The sugar maple is very abundant.

Inexhaustible quarries of gypsum of the finest quality abound in East Tennessee. Marble in many beautiful varieties is abundant. Iron ore is found in plenty, and some lead mines have been worked. Salt springs are numerous, but the water is not sufficiently strong to admit of their being made profitable. Nitrous earth abounds in the saltpetre caves.

The gold region elsewhere described in the southern states, extends into the southeastern part of Tennessee. The spot affording the metal, is situated about 12 miles south of the Tellico plains, near the Unika mountain, which separates this state from North Carolina. The gold occurs in small grains, and appears to have been produced by the disintegration of the rocks which compose the mountain. The gold is found in the small rivulets and brooks, and also on the declivities of the mountains, and very near their summits. It is contained in a stratum of the soil of 10 or 12 inches in depth, and is separated from the earth by washing.

Tennessee also contains an ore of zinc of an excellent quality. The Cumberland mountains are rich in coal. Manganese, roofing slate, and magnetic iron ore, may be also numbered among the mineral productions.

This state is politically divided into 2 Districts, East and West. The former has 22 counties and the latter 40. The population is 684,822 of whom 142,352 are slaves. Nashville is the capital. The other considerable towns are Knoxville and Murfreesborough. Agriculture is in a great measure confined to the raising of cotton: but the soil is well adapted to maize, wheat, rye, barley and oats, which are all more or less cultivated. There are some manufactures of iron, hemp, cotton and cordage.

The legislature is called the General Assembly and consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The members of both and the Governor are chosen for 2 years. Suffrage is universal; and the clergy are excluded from office. The Baptists are the most numerous religious sect; they have 141 ministers; the Methodists 125, the Presbyterians 80 and the Lutherans 10. There are colleges at Greenville, Knoxville, and Nashville. Tennessee was settled by emigrants from Virginia and North Carolina: the first settlements were made between 1765 and 1770. In 1796 a constitution was formed, and the territory was admitted into the union as a state.

Tennis, a town of Egypt, situate on an island in a lake of the same name, sometimes called Lake Menzaleh, 28 m. S. E. of Damietta.

Tensaw, a river of Alabama, flowing into Mobile Bay, and formed by the union of the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers. A river of Louisiana joining with the Washitau to form Black River.

Tensaw, p.v. Baldwin Co. Alabama.

Tenstaat, a town of Prussian Saxony, 10 m. N. E. of Langensalza.

Ten-tchou, a city of China, of the first rank, in Chang-tong, with a good port and a strong garrison. It is seated on the N. side of a peninsula of the Yellow Sea, 250 m. S. E. of Peking. Long. 120. 50. E., lat. 37. 20. N.

Tenderden, a town of Kent. 57 m. E. by S. of London.

Tentugal, a town of Portugal, in Beira, 8 m. W. N. W. of Coimbra.

Teramo, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ultra, 25 m. N. E. of Aquila.

Turasso, a sea-port of Asia Minor, on the coast of Caramania, and an archbishop's see. It was formerly called Tarsus, and was the capital of Cilicia, the literary rival of Athens and Alexandria, and the birthplace of the apostle Paul. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 100 m. W. by N. of Alexandretta. Long. 35. 15. E., lat. 37. 4. N.

Tequenaama, a cataract near Bogota in Colombia, caused by a branch of the Magdalena falling into a narrow chasm among the rocks. The cataract consists of 3 pitches and the whole fall is 567 feet.

Terceira, one of the Azores, of a circular form about 55  $\sigma$  in circumference, and very fertile. It contains several towns and villages, with a number of forts. Angra is the capital.

Terchiz, or Tershez, a town of Persia in the province of Chorasán, situate on the borders of the Great Salt Desert, 160 m. W. N. W. of Herat. Long. 57. 25. E., lat. 35. 5. N.

Terga, a town of Morocco, seated on the Omir-abi, 90 m. N. of Morocco.

Tergovist, or Ternis, a town of European Turkey, in Walachia. Here is a fine palace, belonging to the hosbodar, or reigning prince; but he chiefly resides at Buchorest. It stands on the Jalonitz, 35 m. N. N. W. of Buchorest. Long. 25. 53. E., lat. 45. 28. N.

Terki, a town of Asiatic Russia, in the government of Caucasus, formerly a frontier place against Persia. It is seated on a river of the same name, near the Caspian Sea, 180 m. S. of Astracan. Long. 47. 30. E., lat. 43. 22. N.

Terned, a town of Usbec Tartary, capital of a district in Bokharia; seated in an angle formed by the union of two rivers, 150 m. S. of Samarcand. Long. 65. 35. E., lat. 37. 15. N.

Termini, a town on the N. coast of Sicily, in Val di Mazara, with a strong castle. Its mineral waters are much celebrated, and it has a considerable trade. It is situate on a rocky eminence, near the mouth of a river of the same name, 20 m. S. E. of Palermo.

Ternoli, a town of Naples, in Capitanata, seated near the sea, 32 m. S. E. of Lanciano.

Ternute, one of the Molucca islands, lying to the W. of Gilolo, formerly the seat of sovereignty. It abounds in cocoa-nuts, bananas, citrons, oranges, almonds, and other fruits proper to the climate. There are also a great number of birds of paradise. It is a mountainous country, and contains a great number of woods, which furnish abundance of game. It is in the possession of the Dutch, from whom it was taken by the British in 1810, but restored, with their other Indian possessions, in 1814. The inhabitants are Mahometans and very indolent. 100 m. E. of Celebes. Long. 127. 4. E., lat. 0. 50. N.

Terneuse, a town and fort of the Netherlands, in Flanders, on the W. branch of the Scheldt, called the Hondt. It is 8 m. N. of Sas van Ghent and 25 W. N. W. of Antwerp.

Terni, a town of the ecclesiastical states, in the duchy of Spoleto, seated on the Nera, near the influx of the Velino, which has a famous cataract a mile from the town. Terni was the birth-place of Tacitus the historian. It is 15 m. S. S. W. of Spoleto and 46 N. of Rome.

Ternava, a town of Bulgaria, and an archbishop's see. It was formerly the seat of the princes of Bulgaria, and a strong place, but the fortifications are ruined. It is seated on a mountain, near the Jenera, 88 m. N. W. of Adrianople and 67 N. E. of Sofia. Long. 26. 2. E., lat. 43. 1. N.

Terouenne, a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, seated on the Lis, 6 m. S. of St. Omer.

Terra del Espiritu Santo, the largest and most western island of the New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific, being 40 leagues in circuit. The land is exceedingly high and mountainous, and in many places the hills rise directly from the sea. Except the cliffs and branches, every part is covered with wood, or laid out in plantations. Besides the bay of St. Philip and St. Jago, on the N. side of it, the isles which lie along the S. and E. coast from several good bays and harbours. Long. 167 E., lat. 15. S.

Terra Firma, a country of S. America, bounded on the N. by the Carribbean Sea. It is now included in the Republic of Colombia.

Terra del Fuego, a large island, separated from the southern extremity of America by the strait of Magellan, and so called from the volcanoes observed on it. The sea intersects it into several islands, all of them barren and mountainous; but on the lower grounds are found several sorts of trees and plants, and a variety of birds. The natives are short in stature, not exceeding five feet six inches; their heads large, their faces broad, their cheek-bones prominent, and their noses flat. They have little brown eyes, without life; their hair is black and lank, hanging about their heads in disorder, and besmeared with train oil. They wear no other clothing than a small piece of seal-skin, hanging from their shoulders to the middle of the back, being fastened round the neck with a string. They live chiefly on seals' flesh, of which they prefer the oily part. There is no appearance of any subordination among them, and their whole character is a strange compound of stupidity, indifference, and inactivity.

Terracina, a decayed town of the ecclesiastical states, in Campagna di Roma, with a castle on a rock. Formerly it was called Anxur, and was the capital of the Volsci, and its cathedral was originally a temple of Jupiter. It is seated near the sea, on the frontiers of Naples, 54 m. S. S. E. of Rome. Long. 13. 15. E., lat. 41. 24. N.

Terranova, a sea-port of Sicily, in Val di Noto, seated near the mouth of a river of the same name, 20 m. E. S. E. of Alicata. Long. 14. 10 E., lat. 37. 9. N.

Terranova, a sea-port of Sardinia, seated at the bottom of a bay on the N. E. coast, 62 m. E. N. E. of Sassari. Long. 9. 35. E., lat. 41. 3. N.

Terrasson, a town of France, department of Dordogne, seated on the Vesere, 28 m. E. of Perigueux.

Terre Haute, p.v. Vigo Co. Ind. on the Wabash 91 m. S. W. Indianapolis.

Terridon, Loch, an inlet of the sea, on the W. coast of Scotland, in Ross-shire, between Gairloch and Applecross. It has many creeks and bays.

Territore, a strong town and fortress of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, 25 m. N. of Trinchinopoly.

Terryville, p.v. Meeklenburgh Co. Va.

Teruel, a town of Spain, in Arragon, and a bishop's see, with a citadel. It is 80 m. S. W. of Sarragossa and 112 E. of Madrid. Long. 1. 0. W., lat. 40. 25. N.

Terrece, or Veere, a fortified sea-port of the Netherlands, in Zealand on the N. E. coast of the isle of Walcheren. It has a good harbour, and a fine arsenal. 4 m. N. by E. of Middleburg, with which it communicates by a canal. Long. 3. 42. E., lat. 51. 36. N.

Teschen, a town of Austrian Silesia, capital of a circle of the same name. It is surrounded by a wall, and at a little distance, on an eminence, is the old castle where the ancient dukes resided. The inhabitants carry on a trade in leather, woolen stuffs, and wine; and make excellent fire-arms. This town was taken by the Prussians in 1777 but restored in 1763. In 1779 a treaty of peace was concluded here between the emperor of Germany and the king of Prussia. It is seated in a morass, near the river Elsa, 36 m. E. S. E. of Troppau and 60 E. by N. of Olmutz. Long. 18. 32. E., lat. 49. 43. N.

Tesegelt, a town of Morocco, seated on a craggy rock, said to be impregnable, at the mouth of the Techubit, 140 m. W. N. W. of Morocco.

Teshoo Loomboo, the capital of Thibet, or of that part which is immediately subject to the Teshoo Lama, who is sovereign of the country during the minority of the grand lama. Its temples and mausoleums, with their numerous gilded canopies and turrets, and the palace of the lama, render it a magnificent place. It stands at the N. end of a plain, upon a rocky eminence, 220 m. S. W. of Lassa and 470 N. by E. of Calcutta. Long. 89. 7. E., lat. 29. 4. N.

Tesino, a town of the Austrian states, in Tyrol, 25 m. E. N. E. of Trent.

Tesset, a town of Zabara, capital of a district of the same name. It is 350 m. S. S. W. of Tafilet. Long. 5. 45. W., lat. 25. 54. N.

Tebury, a town in Gloucestershire, Eng. 99 m. W. of London.

Tetschen, or Tetzen, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leutmeritz, with a castle on a rock, on the river Elbe, 29 m. S. E. of Dresden.

Tettwang, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, 8 m. N. of Lindau.

Tetuan, a city of the kingdom of Fez, with a castle. The houses have only small holes towards the streets, which are very narrow, and the windows are on the other side, facing a courtyard, which is surrounded by galleries, and in the middle is generally a fountain. The houses are two stories high, flat at the top; and the women visit each other from the tops of them. The shops are very small, and without any door; the master sits cross-legged on a counter, with the goods disposed in drawers round him, and all the customers stand in the street. Several European consuls formerly resided in this city; the English are still allowed to touch here, and considerable communication is kept up with Gibraltar. It is seated on the river Cuz, near the Mediterranean, 110 m. N. N. W. of Fez. Long. 5. 23. W., lat. 35. 37. N.

Teceone, a river of Italy, the ancient Anio, which rises in the Appennines, 50 miles, above Tivoli, glides through a plain till it comes near that town, when it is confined for a short space between two hills, covered with groves. These were supposed to be the residence of the sibyl Albunea, to whom an elegant temple was here dedicated. The river moving with augmented rapidity, as its channel is confined, at last rushes over a lofty precipice, and the noise of its falls resounds through the hills and groves of Tivoli. Having gained the plain, it soon afterwards receives the waters of the lake Solfatara, and then joins the Tiber, near Rome.

Teviot, a river of Scotland, which rises in the mountains in the S. W. of Roxburgshire, and, passing N. W. through the county, unites with the Tweed a little above Kelso.

Taupitz, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg, with a castle on a lake, 25 m. S. by E. of Berlin.

Teuschnitz, a town and castle of Bavarian Franconia, 17 m. N. of Culmbach.

Teusing, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Pilsen, 30 m. N. W. of Pilsen.

Teukesbury, a borough in Gloucestershire Eng.

Here is one of the noblest parish churches in the kingdom, which is almost the only remains of the celebrated monastery to which it formerly belonged. 103 m. W. N. W. of London.

Teukesbury, p.t. Middlesex Co. Mass on the Merrimack, adjoining Lowell, 24 m. N. W. Boston. Pop. 1,527. Within the limits of the township is the village of Belleville, with manufacture of cotton and woolen.

Teukesbury, a township of Hunterdon Co. N. J.

Tezas, a province of Mexico, and the frontier district toward the United States: bounded N. by Missouri Territory and E. by Louisiana, from which it is separated by the Sabine, and the Gulf of Mexico on the S. Our knowledge of this extensive province—containing, according to Humbolt's table, a surface of 84,000 square miles, and according to others 100,000—is still very imperfect, and almost solely derived from Pike's journal of his hasty return from Chihuahua, guarded all the way by Spanish dragoons to prevent him from taking notes. But its rising political and commercial relations with the United States will soon disperse this ignorance. By an act of the Mexican congress it has been united to the province of Coahuila, under the name of Cochuila-y-Tezas. This province is exceedingly well watered, and is the most fertile of all the Mexican states. The large and beautiful savannahs, waving with grass, feed vast numbers of wild horses and mules, which are exported in great numbers to other parts of Mexico, and to the United States, and form at present a chief article of commerce. Immediately to the W. of the Sabine, the soil is rich without being low, and for a space of 12 successive miles, is covered with magnificent pines. W. of this again is one of the richest and most fertile tracks in nature, diversified by hills and dales, and divided, as it were, into natural meadows and shrubberies, in such admirable order, as to seem the work not of nature, but of art; this soil is rich, friable, and contains much iron. It is as fertile on the hills as on the plains, and the climate is delightful, being neither too warm nor excessively cold. The tract between the Sabine and Brasso rivers is occupied by 2,500 American families, emigrants from the United States, who raise cotton, maize, tobacco, rice, and sugar-canes. Besides these emigrant families, about 600 Spanish families are congregated in the vicinity of Nacogdoches, and inhabit the Ranchos, where they rear cattle.

The principal American establishment to the W. of the band of pines above mentioned, is the Air Bayou, entirely inhabited by Americans, who have already erected 7 or 8 cotton mills, and the products are exported to Nacitoches free of duty, as the consumption comes entirely from that place. The second American establishment is on the Brasso a Dios river, 150 miles from Nacogdoches. As this stream frequently overflows its banks, its vicinity is somewhat unhealthy. These emigrants have built a town named San Felipe de Austin, from that of the founder, General Austin, an American, who promised to the federal government to locate from 500 to 600 families on the banks of the Brasso river. At Nacogdoches another grant has been made to an American of the name of Edwards, who resided at Mexico. This grant borders on that of Austin, and contains more than 2,000 square miles. N. of this, another grant has been made to a Mr. Thorn, son-in-law of Edwards; and on the other side a similar grant has been made to general Wesley. The colony called Fredonia, in this province, was established in 1824 by Mr. Austin, who has offered to every colonist a lot of 640 acres, or an English square mile, with a house. The constitution of this government is that of a federal republic, and has been literally copied from that of the United States, but the Catholic religion was alone to be tolerated. But such an absurd intolerant clause as this in any of the new independent states of Mexico, cannot long be in force in the vicinity of such a free government as that of the United States, as such an act would exclude all but Roman Catholic emigrants.—whereas all are made equally welcome to the United States. In 1825 captain Sedgewick, of Russellville in Kentucky, obtained a grant from the Mexican government of from 6 to 8 millions of acres, in this province, along the borders of Louisiana. One principal condition was inserted in this grant, that a certain number of the colonists should be free from all taxes for five years. The capital of Texas under the old government was San Antonio de Bejar, on a small stream of the same name, and contained, according to Pike, about 2,000 souls; but the present capital, Saltillo, on the confines of Coahuila and New Leon, is said to contain 8,000 souls. Its site is bad, being surrounded with arid plains, where the traveller suffers much from want of water. The western part of Texas is inhabited entirely by Spaniards. The soil is excellent, and all the habitations are watered by artificial canals, which cause the waters of the Rio de Nueces and neighbouring springs to irrigate the gardens and fields.

Texel, an island of the Netherlands, separated from N. Holland by a narrow channel of the same name, defended by a strong fort on the mainland, called the Helder. This channel is the best and most southern entrance into the Zuyder Zee, and through it most of the ships pass that are bound to Amsterdam. In 1799 the fort was taken by the English, and the whole of the Dutch fleet, lying within the channel, surrendered to them; but the English abandoned the fort soon afterwards. Long. 4. 59. E., lat. 53. 10. N.

Teya, or Theya, a river of the Austrian states, which rises near Teltsch, in Moravia, flows E., by Znaim, on the borders of Austria, and enters the Morav, on the confines of Hungary.

Tejn, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Bechim, seated on the Muldau, 10 m. S. E. of Piseck.

Tezar, a town of Fez, capital of the province of Cuzi, containing a mosque half a mile in circumference. It is seated on a small river, 45 m. E. of Fez. Long. 4. 15. W., lat. 33. 40. N.

Tezucuo, a town of Mexico, once the capital of a rich kingdom. Here Cortez caused a canal to be dug, and built 18 brigantines, to carry on the siege of Mexico. It is seated near the lake of Mexico, 20 m. E. of Mexico.

Tezela, a town of Algiers, in the province of Mascara, with a castle, 15 m. S. W. of Oran.

Tezout, a town of the kingdom of Fez, seated on the point of a rock, 15 m. S. of Melilla.

Tezzoute, an ancient town of Algiers, in the province of Constantia. Its ruins extend 10 m. in circumference, among which are magnificent remains of city gates, an amphitheatre, a temple dedicated to Esculapius, and other elegant structures. 90 m. S. S. W. of Constantia.

Thainee, a town of the kingdom of Tunis, near the mouth of a river of the same name, 120 m S of Tunis. Long. 10. 15. E., lat. 34. 50. N.

Thame, or Tame, a river which rises near Tring in Hertfordshire, crosses Buckinghamshire to the N. of Aylesbury, enters Oxfordshire at the town of Thame, whence it is navigable for barges to Dorchester, where it joins the Thames. This river has been erroneously supposed to give name to the Thames.

Thame, a town in Oxfordshire, Eng. seated on the river Thame, 12 m. E. of Oxford and 44 W by N. of London.

Thames, the finest river in Great Britain, which takes its rise from a copious spring, called Thames Head, 2 m. S. W. of Cirencester, in Gloucestershire. About a m. below the source of the river, it is not more than nine feet wide in the summer, yet, in the winter, becomes such a torrent as to overflow the meadows for many miles. The stream proceeds to Lechlade; and being there joined by the Coln and Lezh, at the distance of 138 m. from London, it becomes navigable for vessels of 90 tons. At Oxford it is joined by the Charwell, and, proceeding by Abingdon to Dorchester, it receives the Thame. Passing by Wallingford to Reading, and forming a boundary to Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Surrey, and Middlesex, it waters Henley, Marlow, Maidenhead, Windsor, Staines, Chertsey, Kingston, and Brentford, in its course to London. From London the river proceeds to Greenwich, Woolwich, Grays-Thurrock, Gravesend, and Leigh, into the German Ocean. The tide flows up the Thames as high as Kingston, which, following the winding of the river, is 70 miles from the ocean—a greater distance than the tide is carried by any other river in Europe. Though the Thames is said to be navigable 138 miles above London Bridge, there are so many flats that in summer the navigation westward would be stopped, were it not for a number of locks; but the first lock is 52 miles above that bridge. The plan of new cuts has been adopted, in some places, to shorten the navigation; there is one near Lechlade, and another a mile from Abingdon. A still more important undertaking was effected in 1789—the junction of this river with the Severn. A canal had been made from the Severn to Stroud, which canal was afterwards continued to Lechlade, where it joins the Thames, a distance of above 30 miles. A communication between this river and the Trent and Mersey has likewise been effected, by a canal from Oxford to Coventry; and another canal extends from this, at Braunston, to the Thames at Brentford, called the Grand Junction Canal.

Thames, a river of Connecticut, formed of two principal branches, the Shetucket and the Norwich, or Little River, which have their junction at Norwich. From this place the Thames is navigable 15 m. to Long Island Sound, which it enters below New London.

Thames, a river of Upper Canada, flowing into Lake St. Clair above Detroit.

Thanet, an island comprising the E. angle of Kent, being separated from the mainland by the two branches of the Stour. It produces much corn, and the S. part is a rich tract of marsh land. It contains the towns of Margate, Ramsgate, and Broadstairs, and several villages.

Thanhausen, a town of Bavaria, on the river Mindel, 14 m. N. of Mindelheim.

Thasos, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, on the coast of Macedonia, at the entrance of the gulf of Contessa. It is 12 m. long and 8 broad, and abounds in all the necessaries of life. The fruits and wine are very delicate; and there are some quarries of fine marble. The chief town of the same name, has a harbour, frequented by merchants. Long. 24. 33. E., lat. 40. 59. N.

Thaxted, a town in Essex, Eng. 44 m. N. N. E. of London.

Theaki, an island in the Mediterranean Sea, 24 m. long and 7 broad, separated from the N. E. part of that of Cefalonia, by a narrow channel. It is the ancient Ithaca, celebrated as the birthplace and kingdom of Ulysses. The chief town is Velthi, which has a spacious harbour. Long. 20. 40. E., lat. 38. 25. N.

Thebaid, a country of Upper Egypt, now called Said, which see.

Thebes, the ancient name of a city of Upper Egypt. It was celebrated for having 100 gates; and there are many tombs and magnificent remains of antiquity. One of the tombs has been brought over to this country by M. Belzoni. Three villages, named Carnack, Luxor, and Gournou, are seated among its ruins, which are hence called the antiquities of Carnack and Luxor.

Thebes, in Greece. See Thiva.

Thisse, a river of Hungary, which rises in the Carpathian Mountains, flows above 100 m. in a western direction to Tokay, when it turns to the S., passes by Tsongrand and Segeden, and, after receiving a great number of rivers, falls into the Danube below Titul.

Themar, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Saxe-Coburg, near the river Werra, 10 m. S. E. of Meiningen.

Theresa, p.v. Jefferson Co. N. Y. 25 m. N. E. Sacketts Harbour.

Thernia, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, S. of the island of Zia, and near the gulf of Engia, 12 m. long and 5 broad. The soil is good and well cultivated, and it has a great deal of silk. The principal town, of the same name, is the residence of a Greek bishop. Long. 24. 59. E., lat. 37. 31. N.

Thermopylae, a narrow passage in the N. E. of Greece, with high cliffs on one side and an impassable marsh on the other. It is noted in history for the brave stand made by Leonidas with 300 Spartans, against the army of Xerxes.

Thessaly. See Janna.

Thetford, a borough in Norfolk, Eng. with a manufacture of woollen cloth and paper. 80. m. N. E. of London.

Thetford, p.t. Orange Co. Vt. on the Connecticut. Pop. 1,183.

Thibet, a county of Asia, bounded on the N. W. and N. by the Desert of Kobi, in Tartary, E. by China, S. by Assan and Birmah, and S. W. and W. by Hindoostan and Bootan. This country is one of the highest in Asia, being a part of that elevated tract which gives rise not only to the rivers of India and China, but also to those of Siberia and Tartary. Its length from E. to W. cannot be less than 1,400 m; its breadth about 500, but very unequal. It is divided into three parts, Upper, Middle, and Lower Thibet. The Upper, lies towards the sources of the Ganges and Burrampooter; the Middle is that in which Lassa, the capital, is seated; and the Lower that which borders on China. Little Thibet is situated between Upper Thibet and Casheur. Notwithstanding the very rough and sterile state of Thibet, and the severity of its climate, from its wonderful elevation, its inhabitants are in a high state of civilization; their houses are lofty and built of stone; and useful manufactures in some degree of improvement. The principal exports are gold-dust, diamonds, pearls, lamb skins, shawls, woollen cloths, rock-salt, musk, and tincal or crude borax. The nature of the soil prohibits the progress of agriculture; but wheat, peas, and barley are cultivated. Here are many beasts of prey, and great abundance and variety of wild fowl and game; with numerous flocks of sheep and goats, and herds of cattle of a diminutive size, as well as small horses. The ibex, or wild goat is a native of this country. The Thibetians are governed by the grand lama, who is not only submitted to and adored by them, but is also the great object of adoration for the various tribes of pagan Tartars, who walk through the vast tract of continent which stretches from the river Volga to Corea. He is not only the sovereign pontiff, the vicegerent of the deity on earth, but by the more remote Tartars is absolutely regarded as the deity himself. Even the emporor of China, who is of a Tartar race, does not fail to acknowledge the lama, in his religious capacity, although, as a temporal sovereign, the lama himself is tributary to that emperor. The opinion of the most orthodox Thibetians is, that when the grand lama seems to die, either of old age or infirmity, his soul, in reality only quits a crazy habitation to animate another younger or better; and it is discovered again in the body of some child, by certain tokens known only to the lamas or priests, in which order he always appears. The lamas, who form the greatest and most powerful body in the state, have the priesthood entirely in their hands. At the head of their hierarchy are three lamas, the Dalai lama, who reside at Lassa; the Teshoo lama, who lives at Teshoo Loomboo; and the Taranat lama, whose seat is Kharca, in the N. The priests constitute many monastic orders, which are held in great veneration among them. The most numerous sect are called Gylongs, who are exempt from labor, enjoined temperance, and interdiction all intercourse with the female sex; they abound over all Thibet and Bootan, notwithstanding the severity of discipline; since every family consisting of more than four boys is obliged to contribute one of them to this order; and it is also encouraged by ambition, as the officers of state are usually selected from this sect. Besides the religious influence and authority of the grand lama, he is possessed of unlimited power throughout his dominions. His residence is at a vast palace on the mountain Putala, 7 miles from Lassa. The religion of Thibet, though in many respects it differs from that of the Indian brahmins, yet, in others, has a great affinity to it. The practice of polyandry is universally prevalent in Thibet, and one female associates with all the brothers of a family, without any restriction of age or number; the choice of a wife is the privilege of the elder brother. This extraordinary custom, and the celibacy of priests, may have been intended to guard against too numerous a population in an unfertile country. The Tibetians preserve entire the mortal remains of their sovereign lamas only: every other corpse is either consumed by fire or exposed to be the promiscuous food of beasts and birds of prey. They have a great veneration for the cow, and highly respect the waters of the Ganges, the source of which they believe to be in heaven. The sunnises, or Indian pilgrims, often visit Thibet as a holy place; and the grand lama always maintains a body of nearly 300 of them in his pay. See Palte.

Thiel, or Tiel, a strong town of the Netherlands, in Guelderland, seated on the Waal, 18 m. W. of Nimeguen.

Thielet, a town of the Netherlands, in W. Flanders, 10 m. N. of Courtray.

Thiengen, a town of Baden, on the river Wutach, 13 m. W. of Schaffhausen.

Thiers, a town of France, department of Puy de Doine, with manufactures of paper, thread, leather, and cutlery. It is seated on the side of a hill, 21 m. E. by N. of Clermont.

Thionville, a strong town of France, in the department of Moselle. The Austrians bombarded it in 1792, but were obliged to raise the siege. It is seated on the Moselle, over which is a bridge defended by a hornwork, 14 m. N. of Mentz and 33 S. W. of Treves.

Thirsk, a borough in N. Yorkshire, Eng. with manufactures of coarse linens, sacking, &c. 214 m. N. by W. of London.

Thira, or Thibe, a celebrated city of Greece, and a bishop's see. The ancient city was 4 m. in circumference, but only that part of it is now inhabited which was originally the castle, called Cadmea, from Cadmus the founder. In the vicinity is a fine sort of white clay, of which bowls for pipes are made, that dry naturally and become as hard as stone. It is seated between two rivers, 28 m. N. W. of Athens.

Thiers, a town of France, department of Dordogne, 18 m. N. N. E. of Perigueux.

Tholen, a town of the Netherlands, in an island of its name belonging to the province of Zealand, 4 m. N. W. of Bergen-op-Zoom.

Thomas, St. an island in the Atlantic, lying under the equator, near the W. coast of Guinea, discovered in 1640 by the Portuguese. It is almost round, is about 30 m. in diameter, and consists chiefly of hills, intermixed with valleys, which are often filled with a thick fog. The soil is fertile, and produces plenty of sugar-canes, rice, and millet. On the same vine arc blossoms and green and ripe grapes, all the year round. The climate is unwholesome to the Portuguese, but it agrees well with the original natives, and also with the cattle, which are larger and finer here than on the coast of Guinea. In 1641 this island was taken by the Dutch; but they soon relinquished it in consequence of the inclemency of the climate. Pavaosan is the capital.

Thomas, St., one of the Virgin islands, in the W. Indies, with a harbour, a town, and a fort. It is 15 m. in circumference, and the trade is considerable, particularly in times of peace. It surrendered to the English in 1807, but was restored to the Danes in 1814. Long. 65.26. W., lat. 11.22. N.

Thomas, St., a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, formerly a powerful city. It is inhabited by weavers and dyers, and noted for making the best colored stuffs in India. 3 m. S. of Madras.

Thouars, a town of France department of Deux Sevres. The castle of its ancient dukes is on a rock, surrounded by walls, 120 feet high, built of white stone. It is seated on a hill, by the river Thone, 32 m. S. E. of Angers and 162 m. S. W. of Paris.

Thunder Bay, a bay in the N. W. part of Lake Huron, so named from the frequent thunder heard there.

Thrapston, a town in Northamptonshire, Eng. 73 m. N. N. W. of London.

Three Hills Island, one of the New Hebrides, in the S. Pacific, 12 m. in circumference, lying to the S. of Masicollo.

Three Rivers, or Trois Rivières, a town of Lower Canada, situate on a river of the same name, which before its conjunction with the St. Lawrence, is divided by two islands into three branches. It has two churches, a convent, and an hospital. 9 m. up the river is a considerable iron foundry. 70 m. W. S. W. of Quebec.

Thuin, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege: seated on the Sambre, 8 m. S. W. Charleroy and 15 S. E. of Mons.

Thun, a town of Switzerland, capital of a baili wic, in the canton of Bern, with a castle. It is seated on a lake of the same name, 14 m. long and three broad, where the river Aar issues from it, 15 m. S. by E. of Bern.

Thousand Islands, a group of small islands in the river St. Lawrence just below lake Ontario. Also a group of Islands in the Straits of Sunda.

Thur, a river of Switzerland, which rises in the S. part of the county of Toggenburg, and flows into the Rhine, 7 m. S. S. W. of Schaffhausen.

Thurgau, a canton of Switzerland, which lies along the river Thur; bounded on the S. by the canton of St. Gall, W. by that of Zurich, and N. and E. by the lake and territory of Constance. It is extremely populous, and the most pleasant and fertile part of Switzerland, though somewhat mountainous towards the S. Its area is computed at 350 square miles, with 77,000 inhabitants, one-third of whom are Catholics, and the other two-thirds Calvinists. Frauenfeld is the capital.

Thuringia, the former name of a province of Germany, in Saxony; bounded on the E. by Meissen, S. by Franconia W. by Hesse and Eichfeld, and N. by the duchy of Brunswick and the principality of Anhalt. It is 73 m. in length, and nearly as much in breadth, abounding in corn, fruits, and wood.

Thurso, a town of Scotland, in Caithness-shire, at the mouth of the river Thurso, on the S. W. side of a spacious bay. It has a considerable trade in corn and fish, and manufactures of woolen and linen cloth. 28 m. N. W. of Wick and 56 m. N. N. E. of Dornoch. Long. 3. 18. W., lat. 58. 30. N.

Tiagar, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, 50 m. W. S. W. of Pondicherry and 75 S. of Arcot.

Tiarno, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, with a famous nunnery and a mineral spring, 15 m. N. W. of Capua.

Tiber, a river of Italy, which rises in the Apennines, flows through the Pope's Dominions by Borgo, St. Sepulchro, Citta di Castella, Orto, and Rome, 10 m. below which it enters the Mediterranean Sea, between Ostia and Porto.

Tiburon, a cape at the most western extremity of the island of St. Domingo, with a town and fort, on an open road, opposite Port Antonio in Jamaica. Long 74. 32. W., lat. 18. 25. N.

Ticonderoga, a fort of the state of New York, built by the French in 1756, on the narrow passage between the lakes George and Champlain. It was taken in 1759 by general Amherst, and in to a farm. The township of Ticonderoga is in Essex Co. 92 m. N. Albany, and 110 S. Montreal. Pop. 1,996.

Ticino, a canton of Switzerland, to the W. of the canton of Grisons, and almost encircled by Italy. It is rich in pastures and cattle, and has an area of 1,130 square miles, with 90,000 inhabitants. Bellinzona is the capital.

Ticino, or Tesin, a river which has its source in Switzerland, on the S. side of St. Gothard, flows through the canton of Ticino and the lake Maggiore; then passes to Pavia, in the Milanese, and a little after joins the Po.

Tickhill, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. 156 m. N. by W. of London.

Tideswell, a town in Derbyshire, Eng. on the S. confines of the Peak. Here is a well, deemed one of the wonders of the Peak, which after great rains ebbs and flows two or three times in an hour, the waters gushing from several cavities at once, for the space of five minutes: the well is three feet deep and broad, and the water rises and falls two feet. 22 m. N. W. of Derby and 160 N. W. of London.

Tidore, an island in the eastern seas, one of the Moluccas. It is 20 m. in circumference, and produces cloves and flax. The woods and the rocks that surround it render it a place of defence. It is governed by a sultan, who possesses also the S. part of Gilolo, and claims tribute from Mysol. 16 m. S. of Ternate. Long. 126. 40. E., lat. 1. 0. N.

Tien-sing, a city of China, in Pe-tche-li, which has a great trade in salt. It is seated on the Peiho, at the influx of the Eu-ho, 90 m. from its mouth, and 90 S. E. of Peking.

Tiffin, p.v. Seneca Co. Oh'io. 100 m. N. Columbus: a township of Adam. Co. Ohio.

Tigre, a province in the N. E. part of Abyssinia, 200 m. long and 120 broad, through which passes all the merchandise of the kingdom destined to cross the Red Sea for Arabia. Adowa is the capital.

Tigris, a river of Asia, which has its source in the mountain of Tchilder, in Diarbek. It flows by Diarbekir, Gezira, Mosul, and Tecrit, in which course it separates Diarbek from Curdistan; then enters Irac Arabi, where it passes by Bagdad and Corna, and soon after joins the Euphrates; 35 m. above Bassora.

Tilbury, East, a village in Essex, Eng. near the mouth of the Thames, E. of Tilbury Fort. In this parish is a field, called Cave Feld, in which is a horizontal passage to one of the spacious caverns in the neighbouring parish of Chadwell. Dr. Derham measured three of the most considerable of them, and found the depth of one to be 50 another 70, and the third 80 feet. Their origin is too remote for investigation.

Tilbury Fort, a fortress in Essex, Eng. situated on the Thames, opposite Gravesend. It has a double moat, the innermost of which is 180 feet broad: and its chief strength on the land side consists in its being able to lay the whole level under water. On the side next the river is a strong curtain, with a platform before it; on both of which and the bastions, are planted a great number of guns. It is 28 m. E. by S. of London.

Tilliers, a town of France, department of Eure 6 m. N. E. of Verneuil.

Tilsit, a town of Prussian Lithuania, with a castle and a considerable trade in corn, linseed butter, cheese, and other provisions. In 1807 it was taken by the French; soon after which two treaties of peace were made, between France and 1777 by general Burgoyne, but evacuated soon after the surrender at Saratoga. It had all the advantages that art or nature could give it: but is now a heap of ruins, and forms an appendage

Prussia, and France and Russia, the three sovereigns being here in person. It is situate on the Memel, 50 m. N. E. of Königsberg and 95 S. S. W. of Mittau. Long. 22. 8. E., lat 55. 8. N.

Timana, a town of Terra Firma, in Popayan, capital of a territory of the same name, which abounds in fruits and pastures. It is seated on a river 130 m. E. S. E. of Popayan. Long. 74. 55. W., lat. 1. 35. N.

Timerycotta, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, chief place in the district of Palnaud. 72 m. S. E. of Hydrabad and 82 W. by S. of Candapilly. Long. 79. 26. E., lat. 16. 20. N.

Timon, or Timoan, an island on the E. coast of the peninsula of Malaya, 30 m. in circumference. It is mountairous and woody, and produces plenty of cocoa-nuts and rice. Long. 104. 25. E., lat. 3. 0. N.

Timor, an island in the Indian Ocean. to the W. of the N. W. point of New Holland. It is 200 m. long and 60 broad, and abounds in sandalwood, wax, and honey. The Dutch have a fort here, from which they expelled the Portuguese in 1513. It is situate at Cupan, the principal town, in the S. W. point of the island. Long. 124. 0. E., lat. 10. 23. S.

Timorlaut, an island in the Indian Ocean, between Timor and New Guinea. It is 60 m. in circumference, and the S. point is in long. 131. 54. E., lat. 8. 15. S.

Tinercly, a town of Hindoostan, capital of a district of its name, at the S. extremity of the Carnatic. It is seated on a river which flows into the gulf of Manara. 85 m. S. S. W. of Mobura. Long. 71. 46. E., lat. 8. 42. N.

Ting-tcheou, a city of China, of the first rank, in Fo kien, 980 m. S. of Peking. Long. 116. 30. E., lat 25. 48. N.

Tinian, an island in the N. Pacific, one of the Ladrões, 12 m. long and 6 broad. The soil is dry, and somewhat sandy, but produces abundance of cocoa-nuts, paupaus, guavas, limes, sour oranges, and bread-fruit; also much cotton and indigo. There are no streams; and the water of a well supposed to be the same at which commodore Anson filled his casks in 1742, was found by commodore Byron, in 1765, to be brackish and full of worms. Both these officers speak of the fish caught here as unwholesome. Moschetoes and other kinds of flies are numerous; and there are likewise many venomous insects, centipedes, and scorpions. The road is dangerous, for the bottom consists of hard sand and large coral rocks. Long. 146. 0. E., lat. 15. 0. N.

Tinicum, p.t. Bucks Co. Pa. and a township in Delaware Co. Pa. both on the Delaware.

Tinmouth, p.t. Rutland Co. Vt. 26 m. N. Bennington. Pop. 1,049.

Tino, the ancient Tenos, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, to the S. of Andros, from which it is separated by a channel of a mile in width. It is 15 m. long and 8 broad, and produces 16,000 pounds of silk every year. The fortress stands on a rock, and here is a bishop's see of the Latin church, though the Greeks have 200 papas or priests. The capital is St. Nicholo. Long. 25. 10. E., lat. 37. 40. N.

Tintagel, a village in Cornwall, Eng. noted for the splendid remains of a castle, on a bold promontory in the Bristol Channel, said to have been the birth-place of king Arthur, and the seat of the ancient dukes of Cornwall. 1 mile W. of Bossiney.

Tintern, a village in Monmouthshire, Eng.

noted for the venerable remains of an abbey, which is a beautiful specimen of Gothic architecture. It is seated on the river Wye, 5 m. N. by E. of Chepstow.

Tinto, a river of Spain, which rises in the province of Seville, and has its name from the water being tinged of a yellow colour. Near its springs it has a petrifying quality, no fish will live in it nor any plants grow on its banks; these properties continue till other rivulets enter and alter its nature; for when it passes by Niebla it is not different from other rivers, and 18 m. below it enters the bay of Cadiz, at Huelva.

Tizceda, a town of Barbary, in the county of Darah, on the river Dras. Long. 6. 13. W., lat 27. 30. N.

Tioga, or Chcmung, a river of New York and Pennsylvania, forming the N. W. branch of the Susquehanna.

Tioga, a county of N. Y. Pop. 27,704. Elmira is the capital. A county of the W. Dis. of Pennsylvania. Pop. 9,062. Wellsborough is the capital; p.t. Tioga Co. N. Y. Pop. 1,413; p.t. Tioga Co. Pa.

Tjorn, an island on the W. coast of Sweden, 25 m. in circumference, and abounding in excellent pastures. Long. 11. 29. E., lat. 58. 0. N.

Tipera, or Tippa, a district of Bengal, on the borders of Birmah. The chief town is Comiliah, which is the residence of the rajah, and the seat of the British civil establishment.

Tippacanoe, a branch of the river Wabash from the north, famous for a battle with the Indians fought upon its banks in November 1811. A celebrated Indian chief called the Shawanese Prophet had succeeded in stirring up the savages against the Americans, and collected a body of 600 warriors who were supplied with arms by the British and committed great devastations upon the frontiers. General Harrison was dispatched against them, and a severe battle was fought here in savages were totally defeated.

Tippacanoe, a county of Indiana. Pop. 7,167. Lafayette is the capital.

Tipperrary, a county of Ireland in the province of Munster. It is divided into 147 parishes, contains about 346,000 inhabitants and sends four members to parliament. The S. part is fertile, but the N. is rather barren, and terminates in a range of twelve mountains, the highest in Ireland, called Phelem-the-Madina. The river Suire runs through it from N. to S. Clonmell is the capital.

Tipperrary, a town of Ireland, in the county of the same name, 9 m. W. S. W. of Cashel and 20 N. W. of Clonmell.

Tirano, a town of Austrian Italy, capital of a district of it, the Valteline. It contains severahandsome buildings, but from the narrowness of the streets, and many ruinous houses, its general appearance is desolate. Its staple commerce consists in the exportation of wine and silk. Near the town is the magnificent church of the Madonna, much visited by catholic pilgrims. The massacre of the Protestants of the Valteline, in 1620, began in this town. It is seated on the Adda, 15 m. E. of Londeris. Long. 9. 58. E., lat. 45. 20. N.

Tipton, a county of W. Tennessee. Pop. 5,317. Covington is the capital.

Tirch, a town of Asia Minor, in Natolia, situate on the Meinder, 32 m. S. S. E. of Smyrna.

Tircey, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, lying to the W. of Mull. It is 16 m. long and 3 broad. The surface in general is even, and it is noted for its marble quarry and a handsome breed of little horses.

Tirelmont, a town of the Netherlands, in S. Brabant, formerly one of the most considerable cities in that duchy, but ruined by the wars, and by a great fire in 1701. Near this place the Austrians were defeated in 1792 by the French, who the year following were routed by the former. It is seated on the river Greete, 10 m. E. S. E. of Louvain.

Tirnau, a town of Hungary, in the country of Neitra, seated on the Tirna, 26 m. N. E. of Presburg.

Tirschenreid, a town of Bavaria, seated on a lake, 10 m. S. of Egra.

Tisbury, a township of Dukes Co. Mass. on Martha's Vineyard. Pop. 1,318.

Titan, or Cubaros, an island of France, the largest and most eastern of the Hieres, in the Mediterranean.

Titeri, the middle or southern province of the kingdom of Algiers, in which is a lake of the same name, formed by the river Shellif, near its source. Towards the N. the country is mountainous and narrow, and to the S. it extends far into the desert. It contains some of the highest mountains in the kingdom, part of which are inhabited by the Cabyls, an independent tribe, who have never been subdued by the Algerines. The principal town of this province is Belida.

Titicaca, a lake of S. America, between Peru and Bolivar. It is of an oval figure, with an inclination from N. W. to S. E., and 240 m. in circumference. Many streams enter into it, but its waters are so muddy and nauseous as to be unfit for drinking. One of the most splendid temples in the empire was erected on an island in this lake, by the Incas.

Tüllsberg, one of the highest mountains in Switzerland, in the canton of Uri, 11 m. S. S. W. of Altorf.

Tütschein, New, a well built town of the Austrian states, in Moravia, defended by walls, 28 m. E. by N. of Prerau.

Tittmaning, a town of Bavaria, in the duchy of Salzburg, seated on the Salza, 20 m. N. N. W. of Salzburg.

Titul, a town of Hungary, seated on the Theiss, 23 m. E. S. E. of Peterwardein and 24 N. N. W. of Belgrade.

Tiumen, a town of Siberia, in the province of Tobolsk, on the river Tura at the influx of the Pischma, 170 m. S. W. of Tobolsk.

Tiverton, a borough in Devonshire, Eng. noted for its woolen manufactures, particularly kerseys. 161 m. W. by S. of London.

Tiverton, a township of Newport Co. R. I. on Narraganset Bay 14 m. from Newport. Pop. 2,905.

Tivoli, a town of the papal states, in Campagna di Roma, and a bishop's see. Though now poor, it boasts of greater antiquity than Rome, being the ancient Tibur, which was founded by a Grecian colony. It was the favourite country residence of the ancient Romans, as Frascati is of the moderns. The cathedral is built on the ruins of a temple of Hercules. In the market place are two images of oriental granite, representing the Egyptian deity Isis. The adjacent country yields excellent oil. Near Tivoli are the ruins of the magnificent villa built by emperor Adrian, a celebrated cascade, a temple of Vesta, and another of the Sybil Albunea, a famous villa Esteme, and the remarkable lake of the Solfatara. Tivoli is seated on an eminence, on the river Teverone, 16 m. E. N. E. of Rome.

Tizzano, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Parma, 13 m. S. of Parma.

tlascalala, a province of Mexico bounded on the N. by Panuco E. by the gulf of Mexico S. by Guaxaca and the Pacific Ocean, and W. by Mexico Proper. On the W. side there is a chain of mountains for the space of 55 m., well cultivated; and on the N. is a great ridge of mountains, the neighbourhood of which exposes it to violent tempests and frequent inundation. Yet this is allowed to be the most populous county in all America; and it produces so much maize, that hence it had the name of Tlascalala, the Land of Bread. Puebla de los Angeles is the capital.

Tlascalala, a town of Mexico, formerly the capital of the province of the same name; seated on a river, 15 m. N. by E. of Puebla de los Angeles.

Tobago, the most southern of the islands in the W. Indies, and the most eastern except Barbadoes. It is 30 m. long and 10 broad: and near its N. E. extremity is Little Tobago, an island 2 m. long and 1 broad. The climate is not so hot as might be expected from its situation so near the equator; nor is it visited by such dreadful hurricanes as frequently desolate the other islands. It is diversified with hills and vales, and is equal in richness of produce to any island in these seas. In 1748 it was declared a neutral island, but in 1763 was ceded to the English. It was taken by the French in 1781, and confirmed to them in 1783; but it was taken by the English in 1792, and restored in 1802. It was again taken by the English in 1803, and confirmed to them by the treaty of Paris in 1814. The principal place is Scarborough.

Tobermory, a town of Scotland, in the island of Mull, with a good harbour, and a custom-house; seated on a fine bay, near the N. W. end of the sound of Mull. Long. 5. 58. W., lat. 56. 46. N.

Tobolsk, a government of the Russian empire, which comprehends the greatest part of Western Siberia. It is divided into the two provinces of Tobolsk and Tomsk.

Tobolsk, a considerable and populous city of Russia, formerly capital of Siberia, and at present of the government of Tobolsk. It is divided into the Upper and Lower Town: the former is properly the city, and stands very high, with a fort built with stone, in which are the governor's court, the governor's house, the archbishop's palace, the exchange, and two of the principal churches, all built of stone, but the houses in general are of wood, and are very low. The Tartars that live round this town, for several m. are all Mahometans, and their mufti is an Arabian in general they behave very quietly, and carry on some commerce, but practice no mechanic trades. There are also a great number of Calmuc Tartars, who serve as slaves. All the Chinese caravans pass through this town, and all the furs furnished by Siberia are brought here, and hence forwarded to Moscow. The Russians commonly send their state prisoners to this city. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Tobol and Irtysh, 11,000 m. E. by N. of Moscow and 1,200 E. by S. of Petersburg. Long. 68. 35. E., lat. 58. 12. N.

Toby, a township of Armstrong Co. Pa, on Alleghany river.

Tocantin, the largest river of Brazil, which rises in lat. 18. S., and flows N. E. at the foot of a ridge of mountains for above 700 m. then enters a more open country, and pursues its course 400 m. further to the Atlantic Ocean, which it enters by a large estuary, below the city of Para. The estuary of this river has a communication with that of the Amazon to the W.; and the space included by them and the ocean is an island, 150 m. in diameter, called Maraso or Joanes.

Tocat, a city of Asia Minor, in Sivas. The houses are handsomely built, and the streets paved, which is an uncommon thing in these parts; but the town makes a very odd appearance, being built on uneven ground. There are two rugged perpendicular rocks of marble, with an old castle upon each; and so many streams, that each house has a fountain. The inhabitants are computed at 60,000. The chief trade is in copper vessels, but much yellow leather and silk is manufactured. It is seated in a district which abounds in fruit and excellent wine. 45 m. W. N. W. of Sivas and 150 N. of Marash. Long. 36. 35. E., lat. 39. 10. N.

Tocayma, a town of Colombia, in a country abounding in fruit and sugar-canes. Here are hot baths between two cold springs; and near the town is a volcano. It is seated on the Pati, near its entrance into the Madalena, 34 m. W. of St. Fe de Bogota. Long. 74. 58. W., lat. 4. 5. N.

Tockoa, or Tuccoa Falls, a cascade on a small stream in Franklin Co. Geo. running into the Juguloo. The descent is 187 feet, and the water is dashed into a fine rain before it reaches the bottom.

Tocrur, a kingdom of Negroland, lying to the E. of Tombuctoo, on both sides the Niger. The capital is of the same name, seated on the S. side of the Niger, 320 m. E. of Tombuctoo. Long. 6. 12. W., lat. 16. 38. N.

Todd, a county of Kentucky. Pop. 8,801. Elkton is the capital.

Todi, a town of the papal states, in the duchy of Spoleto, seated on a hill, near the Tiber, 22 m. E. of Spoleto.

Toissey, a town of France, department of Ain, with a college; and seated near the conflux of the Saone and Chalarone, 15 m. N. of Trevoux.

Tokay, a town of Hungary, with a castle. It is celebrated for its wine, which is preferred to all others in Hungary; and near it are large salt-works. It stands at the conflux of the Bodrog with the Theisse, 105 m. E. N. E. of Buda. Long. 21. 15. E., lat. 48. 8. N.

Tolaga Bay, a bay on the N. E. coast of the northern island of New Zealand. Long. 178. 34. E., lat. 38. 21. S.

Toledo, a city of Spain, in New Castile, of which it was formerly the capital. It is seated on a conical hill on the river Tagus, which nearly surrounds it, and on the land side is an ancient wall, flanked with 100 towers. There are a great number of superb structures, besides 17 public squares, where the markets are kept. It is an archbishop's see; and the cathedral is the richest in Spain: the Segrario, or principal chapel, contains 15 large cabinets led into the wall, full of gold and silver vessels, and other works. Here are numerous religious houses and churches, with some hospitals; and formerly it had a university, which was suppressed in 1807. The inhabitants, once estimated at 200,000, are now reduced to 25,000. Without the town are the remains of an amphitheatre and other antiquities. It has a royal castle, and several manufactures of arms, silk, and wool. Toledo was occupied by the French in 1808. 37 m. S. of Madrid. Long. 3. 20. W. lat. 39. 50. N.

Tolen, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in Zealand, in an island of the same name, separated by a narrow channel from Brabant. On the Brabant side it has a fort called Schlyckenburg, 5 m. N. W. of Bergen-op-Zoom. Long. 4. 20. E., lat. 51. 30. N.

Tolentino, a town of the ecclesiastical states, in Ancona, where the relics of St. Nicholas are kept. A treaty of peace was concluded here between Bonaparte and the papal court in 1797. It is seated on the Chiento, 8 m. S. E. of St. Severino.

Tolna, a town of Hungary, formerly the capital of a county of the same name, producing excellent wine. It is seated on the Danube, 65 m. S. of Buda. Long. 19. 15. E., lat. 46. 30. N.

Tolnani, a town of Hindoostan, in the country of Baglana, 70 m. W. of Burhampour and 124 E. of Surat. Long. 75. 3. E., lat. 21. 15. N.

Tolometa, a sea-port of Barbary, in Barca, anciently called Ptolemais. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 100 m. W. of Derna. Long. 20. 30. E., lat. 32. 44. N.

Tolosa, a town of Spain, in Biscay, capital of the district of Guipuscoa; celebrated for its steel manufactures, particularly of sword-blades. It was taken by the French in 1794, and again in 1808. It is seated in a valley, between the Araxis and Oria, 36 m. E. of Bilbao. Long. 2. 5. W. lat. 43. 12. N.

Tolu, a sea-port of Terra Firma, in Carthage; famous for its balsam, produced from a tree like a pine. It is seated on a bay, 70 m. S. of Carthage. Long. 75. 16. W., lat. 9. 30. N.

Tom, Mount, an eminence of Massachusetts, on the W. bank of the Connecticut, near Northampton. It is about 1,200 feet above the level of the river.

Tomar, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, on the river Naboon, at the foot of the mountains, where there is a castle belonging to the knights of Christ. 40 m. S. by E. of Coimbra and 65 N. E. of Lisbon.

Tombuctoo, a city of Central Africa, and the great emporium of the interior trade of that continent. It is situated in an immense plain of white sand, having no vegetation but stunted trees and shrubs, such as the mimosa ferruginea, which grows no higher than three or four feet. The city is not closed by any barrier, and may be entered on any side. It forms a sort of triangle, about three miles in circuit. The houses are large but not high, consisting entirely of a ground floor; they are built of bricks of a round form, rolled in the hands and baked in the sun. The streets are clean and sufficiently wide for three horsemen to pass abreast. Both within and without the town there are many straw huts, which serve as dwellings for the poor and for the slaves who sell merchandise for their masters. The city contains seven mosques, two of which are large. The number of inhabitants is stated not to exceed 12,000, who are all engaged in trade; but the population is sometimes augmented by the Arabs, who arrive with the caravans and remain a while in the city. In the plain several species of grass and thistle afford food for the camels. Fire-wood is very scarce, being all brought from the neighbourhood of Cabra, and camel dung forms the only fuel of the poorer classes. The soil being totally unfit for cultivation, the inhabitants are obliged to procure from Jenne every thing requisite for the supply of their wants, such as millet, rice, vegetable butter, honey, cotton, Soudan cloth, preserved provisions, candles, soap, allspice, onions, dried fish, pistachios, &c.; and to prevent immediate famine, in case the vessels from Cabra should chance to be stopped by the Tooriks, the inhabitants take care to have their warehouses amply stored with every kind of provision. Water is also scarce, and is sold in the market place, where a measure containing about half a pint is procured for a cowrie. To the W. S. W. of the town there are large excavations, from 30 to 40 feet deep, for preserving the rain-water. These reservoirs have no covering; and the water, being consequently exposed to the sun and the hot wind, though tolerably clear, has a disagreeable taste, and is very hot. Near the reservoirs are some small plantations of tobacco, the only plant which is here cultivated, and which grows no higher than five or six inches, and that only by dint of watering. All the native inhabitants of Tombuctoo are zealous Mahometans. Their dress is similar to that of the Moors. They are represented as gentle and complaisant to strangers, industrious in their habits, and not wanting in intelligence. The men are of the ordinary size, generally well made, upright, and walk with a graceful step. Their color is a fine deep black. Their noses are a little more aquiline than those of the Mandingoes, and like them they have thin lips and large eyes. The women attend to domestic occupations. They are not veiled, like those of Morocco, and are allowed to walk out when they please. Those of the richer class have always a great number of glass beads about their necks and in their ears. Like the women of Jenne they wear nose-rings; and the female who is not rich enough to procure a ring substitutes a piece of red silk for it; they wear silver bracelets, and ankle rings of plated steel, the latter of which are made in the country. The female slaves of rich masters have gold ornaments about their necks, and instead of wearing ear-rings, as in the environs of the Senegal, they have little plates in the form of a necklace. The interior of the dwellings in Tombuctoo, as well as the dress of the inhabitants, is exceedingly neat. Their domestic articles consist of calabashes and wooden platters: knives and forks are unknown here, and the natives imagine that like them, all people in the world eat with their fingers. Their furniture consists merely of mats for sitting on; and their beds are made by fixing four stakes in the ground at one end of the room, and stretching over them some mats or a cow hide. The rich have cotton mattresses and coverlets, which the neighbouring Moors manufacture from camel's hair and sheep's wool. The people are well fed. Their meals, of which they take two in a day, consist of rice, and couscous made of small millet, dressed with meat or dried fish. Those negroes who are in easy circumstances breakfast on wheat bread, tea, and butter made from cows' milk: those of inferior circumstances use vegetable butter. Generally speaking, the negroes are not so well lodged as the Moors; the latter have great influence over them, and indeed consider themselves far their superiors. Cloth and other European merchandise, and salt, are brought to Tombuctoo by caravans from Barbary; these are exchanged for ivory; slaves, senna, gold-dust, dates, ostriches' feathers, &c., brought from the interior and more maritime parts of Africa. This city is subject to a well-regulated police, and many of the inhabitants are very rich. Cabra its port, 3 m. N., is a narrow town of mud huts, containing about 1,000 inhabitants, who are all employed either in landing the merchandise brought from Jenne, or in conveying it to Tombuctoo; it has a small mosque with a minaret, but is a dirty and miserable-looking place. Long. 3. 40. W. lat. 17. 50. N. Such is the description of the celebrated city of Tombuctoo, according to the relation of M. Caillie a Frenchman, who visited this city in 1827, and is the only European who ever returned from it. The veracity of his relation however, is doubted by many.

Tombigbee, river, a branch of the Alabama, rising in the northern part of Mississippi and flowing S. Easterly till it unites with the Black Warrior in Alabama. It is navigable by schooners to St. Stephen's.

Tovina, a province of Buenos Ayres, 72 m. long and 210 in circuit. The surface is mountainous, but the valleys are fertile.

Tomini, a town on the E. coast of the island of Celebes, on a bay to which it gives name. Long. 119. 0. E., lat. 0. 45. S.

Tomsk, a town of Asiatic Russia, capital of a province of its name, in the government of Tobolsk. On the highest part stands a wooden castle, defended by 14 pieces of cannon; and in it are a cathedral built of wood, the chancery, and an arsenal. The inhabitants carry on a great trade, this town lying on the great road through all the E. and N. parts of Siberia. Here are all kinds of artificers and tradesmen, but they are extremely indolent and slothful. It contains above 2,000 houses, with 12,000 inhabitants, and is seated on the river Tom, 560 m. E. by

S. of Tobolsk. Long. 84. 19. E., lat. 57. 4. N.

Tondern, a well-built town of Denmark, capital of a district of its name, in the duchy of Sleswick, with a considerable trade in corn, cattle, silk, and fine lace. It is seated on the river Widaw, and on a bay of the German Ocean, 28 m. S. by E. of Ripen and 40 N. W. of Sleswick. Long. 9. 40. E., lat. 54. 58. N.

Tongataboo, one of the Friendly Islands, 20 leagues in circuit. It was discovered by Tasman, who called it New Amsterdam, and was visited in 1773 and 1777 by Cook, who lay at anchor on the W. part. It has the best harbour, or anchoring-place, to be found among these islands. The land is low, with many gentle risings, and very fertile, being wholly laid out in plantations, with roads or lanes for travelling. It is the seat of government for all the other islands, and the ordinary residence of all the principal chiefs. Long. 174. 46. W., lat. 21. 9. S.

Tongerlon, or Tongres, a town of the Netherlands, in the territory of Liege, formerly one of the most flourishing cities in the Roman province of Gallia Belgica. It is seated on the Jecker, 13 m. N. W. of Liege.

Tonggin, a city of China, of the first rank, in Koei-tcheou, 850 m. S. S. W. of Peking. Long. 108. 37 E., lat. 27. 40. N.

Tongho, a city of Birmah, capital of a province of the same name, noted for producing the best betel-nut. It has a fort, deemed the strongest in the Birman empire, and is seated near the Setaung, 90 m. N. of Pegu. Long. 96. 45. E., lat. 18. 45 N.

Tong-tchang, a city of China, of the first rank, in Chang-tong, seated near the N. end of the grand canal, 210 m. S. of Peking. Long. 116. 12. E., lat. 36. 30. N.

Tong-tchou, a small city of China, in Petche-li, seated on the Pei-ho, 170 m. from its mouth and 12 E. by S. of Peking.

Tong-tchuen, a fortified city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Se-tchuen. The inhabitants are all soldiers, who have followed the profession of arms from father to son. 1,000 m. S. W. of Peking. Long. 102. 30. E., lat. 25. 56. N.

Tongusians, or Tonguses, a people who inhabit the E. part of Siberia, and are subject to the Russians. They are all pagans, and subsist chiefly by grazing and hunting of sables. They live in huts, which they take down and remove with them from place to place. These huts are composed of wooden poles, covered all over with hair and rubbish, except a hole left at the top to let out the smoke. Their fire is made in the middle, and they all sit round it upon turfs. Both sexes are very strong, and broad faced, and they all ride on horseback, not excepting the girls. Both men and woman dress alike in a sort of frock, with boots of skins on their legs, and their common drink is water.

Tonna, a town of Germany, in Saxe-Gotha, 6 m. N. of Gotha.

Tonnay Boutonne, a town of France, department of Lower Charente, on the river Boutonne, 17 m. N. of Saintes.

Tonnewanto, a small river of New York flowing into Niagara river opposite Grand Isle.

Tonningen, a sea-port of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleswick. The harbour is commodious and defended by three batteries. It is seated on a peninsula formed by the river Eyder, 25 m. W. S. W. of Sleswick and 70 N. N. W. of Hamburg. Long. 9. 10. E., lat. 51. 30. N.

Tonquin, a country of Asia, bounded on the N. by China, E. by China and the gulf of Tonquin S. by Cochinchina, and W. by Laos. It is 1209 miles in length and 500 in breadth, and one of the finest countries of the E. for population, riches, and trade. It contains about 18,000,000 of inhabitants. The commodities are gold, musk, silks, calicoes, drugs of many sorts, woods for dyeing, lackered and earthen wares, salt, aniseed, and worm-seed. The lackered ware is not inferior to that of Japan, which is accounted the best in the world. The natives in general are of a middling stature, and clean limbed, with a tawny complexion; their faces oval and flattish; and their hair black, long, and coarse, hanging down their shoulders. They dye their teeth black. They are dexterous, active, and ingenious in mechanic arts. Their garments are made either of silk or cotton; but the poor people and soldiers wear only cotton of a dark tawny colour. Their houses are small and low, and the walls either of mud, or hurdles daubed over with clay. They have only a ground-floor, with two or three partitions, and each room has a square hole to let in the light. They have stools, benches, and chairs; and on the side of a table in every house is a little altar, on which are two incense pots. The country abounds with villages, which consist of 30 or 40 houses, surrounded by trees; and in some places are banks to keep the water from overflowing their gardens, where they have oranges, betels, pumpkins, melons, and salad herbs. In the rainy season they cannot pass from one house to another without wading through the water, but sometimes they have boats. The Tonquinese in general are courteous to strangers; but the great men are haughty and ambitious, the soldiers insolent, and the poor thievish. They buy all their wives, of which the great men have several. The men are so addicted to gaming, that, when every thing else is lost, they will stake their wives and children; and in hard times they will sell them to buy rice for themselves. When a man dies, he is buried in his own ground, and, if he was a master of a family, they make a great feast. The first new moon that happens after the middle of January is a great festival, when they rejoice for 10 days together; and they have another great feast in May or June, when their first harvest is got in. Their religion is paganism, but they own a Supreme Being. Their principal idols have human shapes; but they have likewise some resembling elephants and horses, placed in small low temples built of timber. The language is very guttural, and some of the words are pronounced through the teeth: it has a great resemblance to the Chinese. Tonquin became an independent kingdom in 1308, but it has been entirely subdued by Cochinchina, so that, with Cambodia, and all the countries between Siam and China, it is now united under one empire. Cachao is the capital.

Tonsberg, a sea-port of Norway, in the province of Aggerhuys. It has some commerce in timber; and near it is Walloe, the most considerable salt-work in the kingdom. 46 m. S. of Christiania. Long. 10. 14. E., lat. 58. 50. N.

Tonuru, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, formerly a city of great extent, as appears by some ruins of the walls. Here are three temples, in good preservation; and near it is an immense tank, or reservoir of water, between two rocky hills. It is 10 m. N. of Seringapatam.

Tooboonai, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Cook. It is not, in any direction, above 6 m. over, but there are hills in it of a considerable elevation, covered with herbage, except a few rocky cliffs, with patches of trees interspersed to their summits. It is plentifully stocked with hogs and fowls, and produces several kinds of fruits and roots. See Society Islands. Long. 210. 23. W., lat. 23. 25. S.

Torsilla, a town of Sweden, in Sudermania, 43 m. W. of Stockholm.

Tortola, the principal of the Virgin Islands, in the W. Indies, 18 m. long and 7 broad. It formerly belonged to the Dutch, who built a strong fort, from which they were expelled by the English in 1666. The town and harbour are at the E. end of the island. In 1802 it was made a free port, since which period the island has undergone great improvements: it produces excellent cotton, sugar, and rum. Long. 63. 0. W., lat. 18. 33. N.

Tortona, a town of the Sardinian states, in a province of its name, with a good citadel on an eminence. It was formerly deemed a considerable frontier place: was taken by the allies in 1744, by the Spaniards in 1745, by the French in 1796, by the Russians and Austrians in 1799, regained by the French the same year, and by them delivered up to the Austrians in 1814. It is seated on the Serivia, 27 m. S. W. of Milan. Long. 8. 58. E. lat. 44. 54. N.

Tortorella, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, 5 m. N. E. of Policastro.

Tortosa, a town of Spain, in Catalonia and a bishop's see, with a citadel. It is divided into the Old and New Town, both surrounded by fortifications. The entrance is over a large bridge of boats, on the river Ebro. The cathedral, the royal college of Dominicans, and the convent of the Carmelites are the most remarkable edifices. Here is a great deal of silk and oil, and very fine potterware, which resembles porcelain. Tortosa was taken by the French in 1810 after a short siege; but restored in 1814. It is seated partly on a plain and partly on a hill, in a country fertile in corn and fruits, and abounding with quarries and mines of silver, iron, alabaster, jasper of divers colors, and stones with veins of gold. 48 m. S. W. of Tarragona and 96 S. E. of Saragossa. Long. 0. 35. E., lat. 40. 48. N.

Tortosa, the ancient Orthosia a town of Syria, with a castle. It is surrounded by lofty walls, and stands near the Mediterranean, 35 m. N. N. E. of Tripoli.

Tortue, or Tortuga, an island of the W. Indies, near the N. coast of St. Domingo, so named from the great number of tortoises found on and near it. Here the French buccaniers used to fortify themselves. It is about 20 m. long and 4 broad, and has a safe harbour, but difficult of access. Long. 73. 10. W., lat. 20. 10. N.

Tortuga, or Sal Tortuga, an uninhabited island near the coast of Terra Firma, 60 m. W. of the island of Margareta, and about 36 in circumference. There are a few goats on it, and the tortoises come upon the sandy banks to lay their eggs. At the E. end is a large salt-pond, where the salt begins to kern in April; and for some months after ships come here to lade salt. At the W. end is a small harbour with fresh water. Long. 64. 46 W., lat. 11. 16. N.

Tosa, a sea-port of Spain, in Catalonia, on a bay which forms a good harbour. It is built partly on a plain and partly on a steep hill, which projects into the sea. On the top of the hill is a strong citadel, with other fortifications. It is 57 m. N. E. of Barcelona. Long. 2. 54. E., lat. 41. 42. N.

Toscanello, a town of Austrian Italy, 5 m. E. N. E. of Salo.

Tosena, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland, 20 m. W. N. W. of Uddevalla.

Tosso, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland, 42 m. N. N. E. of Uddevalla.

Tost, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Oppeln, with a castle, 25 m. E. S. E. of Oppeln.

Tostar, or Suster, a town of Persia, capital of Kusistan, on the river Sable. It was once a celebrated city, where the kings of Persia had a magnificent palace, in which they deposited their archives and part of their treasure. In Scripture it is called Shushan, and the river is named Ulai. At present here are manufactures of silks, stuffs, and rich cloth. It is 170 m. S. W. of Ispahan. Long. 49. 2. E., lat. 31. 30. N.

Totness, a borough in Devonshire, Eng. 196 m. W. by S. of London.

Tottraham, a village in Middlesex, Eng. 5 m. N. of London.

Toul, a fortified town of France, department of Meurthe. The cathedral and episcopal palace are handsome structures. It is seated on the Moselle, in a plain, almost surrounded by mountains, 13 m. W. by S. of Nancy, and 34 W. S. W. of Metz.

Toulon, a fortified city and sea-port of France, capital of the department of Var. It is divided into the old and new quarter: the former, which is ill built, has nothing remarkable in it but the town-house, and a long street, shaded with trees, called the Rue aux Arbres; the other contains the magnificent works constructed by Louis XIV. many fine houses, and a grand oblong square lined with trees, and serving as a parade. The old and new harbour communicate with each other by means of a canal. The old haven has a noble quay, and is protected by two moles, begun by Henry IV. The new haven was constructed by Louis XIV., as were the fortifications; it contains an arsenal, a rope-walk, a park of artillery, dock-yards, basins, and every thing to be expected in the second port for men of war in this country. The galleys, transferred from Marseilles some years ago, occupy a basin in the new port. Many of the galley-slaves are artisans, and some merchants; they no longer sleep on board the galleys, but are provided with accommodations on shore, in a vast building, erected for that purpose. Both the old and new port have an outlet into the outer road or harbour, which is 10 m. in circuit, surrounded by hills, and the entrance defended, on both sides, by a fort and batteries. Toulon is the only mart in the Mediterranean for the re-exportation of the products of the E. Indies. In 1706 it was bombarded by the allies, both by land and sea, by which almost the whole town was reduced to a heap of ruins, and several ships burned; but they were at last obliged to raise the siege. In 1721 it experienced the dreadful ravages of a pestilence. In 1793 it capitulated, in the name of Louis XVII., to the British, who not finding the place tenable, evacuated it the same year, after having destroyed the arsenal, &c. Toulon is seated on a bay of the Mediterranean, 37 m. S. E. of Marseilles and 517 S. S. E. of Paris. Long. 5. 55. E., lat. 43. 7. N.

Toulouse, a city of France, capital of the department of Upper Garonne, and an archbishop's see. It contains 60,000 inhabitants, and is the most considerable city in France, next to Paris and Lyons, although its population bears no proportion to its extent. It was the capital of the Tectosages, who made so many conquests in Asia and Greece. It was next a Roman colony, and was successively the capital of the Visigoths (who destroyed the superb amphitheatre, of which there are still some remains, the capital, and other Roman monuments), and that of Aquitaine. The walls of the city, as well as the houses, are built with bricks. St. Stephen's, the metropolitan church, would be incomparable if the nave were equal to the choir, and the archbishop's palace is magnificent. The town-house forms a perfect square, 324 feet long and 66 high: the principal front occupies an entire side of the grand square called the Place Royale. In the great hall called the Hall of Illustrious Men, is the statue of the Chevalier Isaura, with the busts of all the great men to whom Toulouse has given birth. Communicating with the Atlantic on one side by the river Garonne, and with the Mediterranean on the other by the canal of Languedoc, Toulouse might have been a very commercial city; but the taste of the inhabitants has been principally for the sciences and belles-lettres. The little commerce they have consists in leather, wool, drapery, blankets, mignonets, oil, iron, mercury, hardware, and books. The bridge over the Garonne, equal to that of Tours, forms a communication with the suburb of St. Cyprian. The allied army entered this city on the 12th of April, 1814 after a severe action with the French army the preceding day. Toulouse is 145 m. S. E. of Bordeaux and 400 S. by W. of Paris. Long. 1. 26. E., lat. 43. 36. N.

Tournan, a town of France, department of Seine-et-Marne, 20 m. E. S. E. of Paris.

Tournay, a city of Belgium, in Flanders, and a bishop's see. It has several fine manufactures, and is particularly famous for good stockings. The cathedral, and the abbey of St. Martin, are very magnificent. It was taken by the allies in 1709, and ceded to the house of Austria by the treaty of Utrecht; but the Dutch were allowed to place a garrison in it, as one of the barrier towns. In 1792 it was taken by the French, who were obliged to abandon it in 1793, but re-entered again on the conquest of Flanders in 1794; and retained it till 1814. It is seated on both sides the Seneldt, over which is a bridge, 14 m. E. S. E. of Lisle and 30. S. S. W. of Ghent. Long. 3. 24. E., lat. 50. 33. N.

Tournelam, a town of France, department of Pas de Calais, 9 m. N. W. of St. Omer.

Tournon, a town in the department of Ardeche, with a fine college, and a castle; seated on the side of a mountain, on the river Rhone, 38 m. N. of Viviers and 48 S. of Lyons.

Tournus, a town in the department of Saone-et-Loire, 15 m. S. of Chalons.

Tours, a city of France, capital of the department of Indre-et-Loire, and an archiepiscopal see. It is seated on the Loire, and near the Cher. Over the former is one of the finest bridges in Europe, consisting of 15 elliptic arches, each 75 feet in diameter. The principal church is remarkable for the delicacy of its structure, curious clock, mosaic pavement, and rich library of manuscripts. Under the ministry of cardinal Richelieu, 27,000 persons were here employed in the silk manufacture; and now the whole number of inhabitants is about 23,000. The red wines of Tours are much esteemed. In one of the suburbs is the abbey of Marmontier, reputed the most ancient in the W. Near the city is Plessis-les-Tours, a palace built by the profligate and superstitious Louis XI., who died here in 1483. Tours is 52 m. N. N. E. of Poitiers and 127 S. W. of Paris. Long. 0. 42. E., lat. 47. 24. N.

Trant, a city of Naples, in Terra di Bari, the see of an archbishop, and the usual residence of the governor of the province, which is sometimes called Terra di Trani. Since the harbour has been choked up, the town has fallen greatly to decay. It stands on the gulf of Venice, 26 m. W. by N. of Bari and 125 N. by E. of Naples. Long. 16. 36. E., lat. 41. 18. N.

Tranqubar, a sea-port of Hindoostan, in the district of Tanjore, with a fort and factory, belonging to the Danes, who pay an annual rent to the rajah. The town is surrounded by a wall and bastions; and contains three Christian churches, a large mosque for the Mahometans, and several pagodas for the Gentoos. In 1807 it was taken by the English. It is seated at the mouth of the Cavery, 165 m. S. of Madras. Long. 79. 53. E., lat. 11. 1. N.

Transylvania, a country of Europe, formerly annexed to Hungary; bounded on the S. by Hungary, E. by Moldavia, S. by Walachia, and W. by Hungary. It is 160 m. long and 150 broad, and surrounded by high mountains, which, however, are not barren. It produces as much corn and wine as is wanted, and there are rich mines of gold, silver, lead, copper, quicksilver, and alum. The manufactures, which are in an extremely backward state, consists of woolen, cotton, glass, &c. It has undergone various revolutions, and now belongs to the house of Austria. The inhabitants are of various religions, as Roman Catholics, Lutherans, Calvinists, Socinians Armenians, Greeks, and Mahometans. The government is aristocratical; and, since the year 1722, rendered hereditary to the princes and princesses of the house of Austria.

Tumen, a town of Russia, in the province of Tobolsk, 150 m. W. S. W. of Tobolsk. Long. 150. 15. E., lat. 57. 3. N.

Tunbridge, p.t. Orange Co., Vt. Pop. 1,920.

Tunbridge, a town in Kent, Eng. 30 m. E. S. E. of London.

Tunbridge Wells, a town in Kent, Eng. much resorted to on account of its chalybeate waters, discovered in 1606, by Dudley lord North, who recovered from a deep consumption by drinking them. It is seated at the bottom of three hills, called Mount Sinai, Mount Ephraim, and Mount Pleasant, on which are seated some good houses, orchards, and gardens; and, as the country is naturally wild, the effect of the whole is romantic and picturesque. The wells are 5 m. S. of Tunbridge and 35 S. S. E. of London.

Tunguskoï, a town of Russia, situate on the Irkut, 80 m. S. W. of Irkutsk. Long. 103. 15. E., lat. 51. 18. N.

Tunis, a county of Barbary, bounded on the N. and E. by the Mediterranean, S. by Tripoli and Biledulgerid, and W. by Algiers. It extends 200 m. from N. to S. and 120 m. from E. to W. This country was formerly a monarchy, but in 1574 it became a republic, under the protection of the Turks, and pays a certain tribute to the bashaw that resides at Tunis. The soil in the E. part is but indifferent, for want of water. Towards the middle, the mountains and valleys abound in fruits; but the W. part is the most fertile, being watered by rivers. The environs of Tunis are very dry, and corn is generally dear; but there are plenty of citrons, lemons, oranges, dates, grapes, and other fruits; also olive trees, roses, and odoriferous plants. In the woods and mountains are lions, bisons, ostriches, monkeys, roebucks, hares, pheasants, partridges, and other sorts of birds and beasts. The principal rivers are the Guadilcarbar, Magrida, Magerada, and Caps. The form of government is by a divan, or council, whose president is the bey. The members of the divan are chosen by the bey. The inhabitants are a mixture of Moors, Turks, Arabs, Jews, and Christians, merchants and slaves; and they carry on a great trade in linen and woolen cloth, Morocco leather, gold dust, leather, lead, horses, oil, soap, and ostriches' eggs and feathers. The established religion is Mahomedism. All public instruments are written in the Arabic tongue, but commerce is usually carried on by that of the Lingua Franca.

Tunis, the capital of the above country, stands on a point of the gulf of Goletta, surrounded by lakes and marshes. It is in the form of an oblong square, 5 miles in circumference, with a lofty wall, five gates, and 35 mosques. The houses are all built of stone, though but one story high; and it has a citadel on an eminence, on the W. side of the city. Without the walls are two suburbs, which contain upwards of 100 houses. Within the walls are 10,700 families and above 3,000 tradesmen's shops. The divan, or council of state, assembles in an old palace, where the bey resides. The harbour has a very narrow entrance, which is well fortified. The Mahometans here have nine colleges for students, and a great number of smaller schools. Tunis is a place of great trade, and has manufactures of velvets, silks, linen, and red caps worn by the common people. It is 10 m. from the sea, 275 N. W. of Tripoli, and 380 E. of Algiers. Long. 10. 16 E., lat. 36. 45. N.

Tunju, a town of New Granada, capital of a district of the same name. Near it are mines of gold and emeralds. It is seated in a fertile valley 90 m. N. by E. of St. Fe de Bogota. Long. 73. 8 W., lat. 5. 20. N.

Tunkat, a town of Western Tartary, in Tarkestan, seated in a large plain, on the river Ilak, 160 m. S. E. of Taraz.

Tarbot, a township of Northumberland Co. Pa.

Turcoin, a town of France, department of Nord where the allies, under the duke of York, were defeated by the French in 1794. It is 6 m. N. N. W. of Lille.

Turcomania, a province of Turkey, in Asia, now called Armenia, which see.

Turcune, a town of France department of Correz, with a castle, 16 m. S. S. W. of Tulle.

Turin, a fortified city of Piedmont, capital of the dominion of the king of Sardinia, and an arch bishop's see, with a university founded in 1405 by Amedeo, duke of Savoy. There are many large squares, among which that of St. Charles is the most spacious; the buildings are handsome and it has extensive arcades on each side. Most of the streets are well built, uniform, and straight, and terminate on some agreeable object; the Strada di Po, the finest and largest, leads to the royal palace, and is adorned with piazzas, filled with shops, as are various others of the best streets; all of which are kept clean by means of a canal from the Doria, with sluices that flow through them into the Po. The inhabitants are computed at 112,000. The palace consists of two magnificent structures, joined together by a gallery, in which are several pictures, statues, and antiquities of great value. The citadel, which was demolished by the French after the battle of Marengo was a regular pentagon, comprehending an extensive and well-furnished arsenal, a cannon-foundry, a chemical laboratory, &c. There are fine walks on the ramparts and walls of the city; fine gardens on the side of the river Po; and a charming public place called the Corso, where many people assemble in an evening to exhibit themselves and their equipage. Near this city, on the banks of the Po, is the beautiful castle of Valentin, the garden of which is applied to botanical studies. In 1798 the French republican army took possession of this city, seized all the strong places and arsenals of Piedmont, and obliged the king and his family to remove to the island of Sardinia. In 1799 the French were driven out by the Austrians and Russians; but shortly afterwards the city and all Piedmont surrendered to the French. In 1814 it was delivered up to the allies, when they restored it to the king of Sardinia. It is seated in a fertile plain, at the confluence of the Doria with the Po, 68 m. N. W. of Genoa and 80 S. W. of Milan. Long. 7. 40. E., lat. 45. 4. N.

Turinge, a town of Sweden, in the province of Sudermanland, 24 m. W. S. W. of Stockholm.

Turinsk, a town of Russia, in the government of Tobolsk, with a fort, 190 m. W. by S. of Tobolsk.

Turivacary, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, consisting of an outer and inner fort, strongly defended by a ditch and mud walls, and an open suburb at a little distance. Here are two small temples of curious workmanship. 34 m S. of Sera and 50 N. of Seringapatam.

Turkestan, a country of Western Tartary, bounded on the N. and E. by the country of the Kalmycs, S. by Bokharia, and W. by the lake Aral. The chief of this country is generally called the Khan of the Karakalpahs. The capital is Taraz.

Turkey, a large empire, extending over part of Europe, Asia, and Africa, European Turkey formerly comprehended Moldavia, Bessarbia, Wallachia, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, part of Croatia and Dalmatia, Romania, Macedonia, Albania, Janna, Livadia, and the Morea. Bessarabia and part of Moldavia were, however, ceded to Russia in 1812, and in 1830, the independence of Greece being established by the allied powers, the territory of the sultan in Europe became greatly contracted. See Greece. Asiatic Turkey is bounded on the N. by the Black Sea and Circassia, E. by Persia, S. by Arabia, and W. by the Mediterranean and the Sea of Marmora. It lies between 27. and 46. E. long., and 28. and 45. N. lat., and contains the countries of Irac-Arabi, Diarbek, Curdistan, Armenia, Caramania, Natolia, and Syria, with Palestine. In Africa the Turks have Egypt, part of Nubia, and Barca; and the states of Tripoli and Tunis are under their protection. Of these countries (which see respectively) the climate, productions, manners, &c., must be various. The Turks are generally robust, well-shaped, and of a good mien. They shave their heads but wear long beards, except those in the seraglio, or palace, and military men, who wear only whiskers. The turban worn by the men is white, and consists of long pieces of thin linen made up together in several folds. No one but a Turk must presume to wear a white turban. Their clothes are long and full. They sit, eat, and sleep on the floor, on cushions, mattresses, and carpets. In general they are very moderate in eating, and their meals are despatched with great haste. Their principal food is rice; and the frugal repast is followed by fruit and cold water, which are succeeded by hot coffee, and pipes with tobacco. With opium they procure what they call a kief, or placid intoxication. Chess and draughts are favorite games; and the coffee-houses and baths furnish other sources of amusement. Polygamy is allowed among them; but their wives, properly so called, are no more than four in number. The fair sex here are kept under a rigorous confinement; the Arabic word Haram, which signifies a sacred or prohibited thing, is in its fullest sense used both of the habitation of the women and of the women themselves. The Turks believe in one God, and that his great prophet is Mahomet; they appropriate to themselves the name of Moslemim, which has been corrupted into Mussulman, signifying persons professing the doctrine of Mahomet, which he calls Islam. Drinking wine is prohibited by this prophet in the Koran, yet the Turks make use of it occasionally, without any scruple; though instead of it they generally use sherbet, a liquor made of honey, spices and the juice of fruits. They expend great sums on fountains, not only in the towns, but in the country, and other solitary places, for the refreshment of travellers and labourers. The grand signior is absolute master of the goods and lives of his subjects, inasmuch that they are little better than slaves. The grand vizier is the chief officer under the grand signior; besides discharging the functions of prime minister, he is commander of all the forces of the empire. The divan or cabinet council, consists of the vizier, the mufti, and the kioga bey. The other ministers are, the reis effendi (whose office corresponds in part to that of chancellor, and in part to that of secretary for foreign affairs in Britain); the teftedar, or minister of finance; the tschelebi, or master of the ordnance; the terrœna emini, or minister of marine; and the tschiaus baccha, or secretary of state. The pachas or governors of provinces act also as farmers general of the revenue for their respective provinces. The sangiac beys are the governors of districts under the pachas, and invested, like them, with both civil and military functions. The ulema are a numerous body, whose functions consist in explaining the koran and in applying its injunctions to the circumstances of the times. They thus combine the character of clergy and lawyers, having at their head the grand mufti. The imans, or priests, are a body altogether distinct from the ulema, their duty being merely to perform public worship in the mosques.

The public revenue of Turkey is derived partly from a capitation tax on Christians and Jews, partly from duties on tobacco and other articles of consumption. The amount of the whole is said to be less than 30,000,000 dollars. The army, which is composed of a variety of troops, seldom amounts to 100,000 men, and the navy is inconsiderable. The foreign commerce of Turkey is inconsiderable. The chief Turkish sea-ports in the Levant are Constantinople and Smyrna. There is little trade with the former. Smyrna has commerce with Europe and America in the exportation of fruit, particularly figs, which grow to great perfection in this part of the country.

Turkey, a township of Essex Co. N. J. 14 m N. W. Elizabethtown.

Tuscaloosa, the capital of Alabama and of the above county, on the Black Warrior River, near the centre of the state 200 m. N. Mobile. 900 m. S. W. Washington. Pop. 1,600. The university of Alabama at this place was founded in 1820. It has 6 instructors and 65 students, the library has 1,000 vols. It has one vacation of two months in August and September. Commencement is in December.

Tuscany, a sovereign state of Italy, with the title of a grand duchy, belonging to the house of Austria. It is bounded on the N. by Modena, on the E. and S. by the pope's territories, on the W. by the Mediterranean. It is about 150 m. in length, and 100 in breadth; and is watered by several rivers of which the Arno is the chief. There are several mountains, in which are found mines of iron, alum, and vitrol. There are also quarries of marble, alabaster, and porphyry, besides hot baths and mineral waters. Many parts of it are fruitful in corn and wine, and produce plenty of citrons, oranges, pomegranates, and other fruits. The inhabitants apply themselves to trade; they chiefly manufacture silks, stuffs, fine earthenware, and gilt leather. They are much visited by foreigners, on account of their politeness, and because the Tuscan language is accounted the purest in all Italy. This duchy is divided into three provinces, Florence, Pisano, and Sienna, to which some add the Islands. Upon the flight of the grand duke, in 1799, it was erected by the French into the kingdom of Etruria; but was soon afterwards transformed into an appendage to the crown of Italy. In 1814 however, the duchy was restored to the Austrians, when Ferdinand, the grand duke, returned to his dominions. Florence is the capital.

Tuscarawas, a county of Ohio, on a stream of the same name, flowing into the Muskingum. Pop. 14,298. New Philadelphia is the capital; also a village in the same Co. and a township in Stark Co. Ohio.

Tuzla a town of Asiatic Turkey, in Caramania, situate at the western extremity of a lake to which it gives name, 28 m. N. of Cogni.

Tver, a government of Russia, formerly a province in the government of Novogorod. It was the first province modelled according to the code of laws of Catharine II., and comprises an area of 24,000 sq. m. with 1,000,000 of inhabitants. The country produces abundantly all kinds of corn and vegetables. Its forests yield the most valuable timber. The quadrupeds and the feathered race are the same as in all the N. of Europe. Besides the fishes common to most lakes and rivers, there is one peculiar to the waters of these northern regions, called the sterlet: it is the acipenser ruthenus of Linne, and is a species of sturgeon, highly esteemed for the flavor of its flesh, and for its roe, of which the finest caviar is made.

Tver, the capital of the foregoing government, and an archbishop's see, with a fortress. It is a place of considerable commerce, being seated at the conflux of the Tyerza, and Volga, along which is conveyed all the merchandise sent by water from Siberia and the S. provinces towards Petersburg. It is divided into the Old and New Town; the former, situate on the opposite side of the Volga, consists almost entirely of wooden cottages; the latter has risen with lustre from the ashes of the conflagration of 1763. Catharine II., at her own expense, raised the governor's house, the episcopal palace, the courts of justice, the exchange, the prison, and some other public edifices; and, to every person who engaged to build a house of brick, she offered a loan of £300 for 12 years without interest. The streets are broad and long, extending in straight lines, from an octagon in the centre; the houses of this octagon, and of the principal streets, are of brick stuccoed white, and make a magnificent appearance. Here is an ecclesiastical seminary, which admits 600 students. In 1776 the empress founded a school for the instruction of 200 burgher's children; and in 1779 an academy for the education of 120 of the young nobility of the province. Tver is 99 m. N. N. W. of Moscow. Long. 36. 5. E., lat. 56. 7. N.

Tweed, a river of Scotland, which rises from numerous springs in the S. part of Peebles-shire, called Tweedsmuir. It divides that country almost into two equal parts, crosses the N. part of Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire, then forms the boundary between Berwickshire and England, and enters the German Ocean at Berwick.

Tweickenham, a village in Middlesex, Eng. adorned with many handsome villas, of which two are particularly celebrated: that which was the favorite residence of Pope, and Strawberry Hill, the elegant Gothic retreat of the celebrated Horace Walpole, earl of Orford. It is seated on the Thames, 3 m. S. S. W. of Brentford.

Ugogna, a town of Austrian Italy, 45 m. N. W. of Milan.

Uist, North and South, two islands of the Hebrides, on the W. coast of Scotland. N. Uist is 22 m. long and 17 broad, and the face of the country corresponds with that of Lewes. S. Uist is 23 m. long and 7 broad, and the trees are here equally unknown. Many cows are annually exported; but the staple commodity is kelp, of which about 1,100 tons are annually manufactured in each. The island of Benbecula lies between them, and they are each about 16 m. to the W. of the most western point in the Isle of Skye.

Ukenshoi, a town of Russia, in the government of Tobolsk, at the conflux of the Irtisch and Oby, 195 m. N. of Tobolsk. Long. 69. 15. E., lat. 61. 10. N.

Ukraine, a country of Europe, lying on the borders of Poland, Russia, and Little Tartary. Its name signifies a frontier. By a treaty between Russia and Poland, in 1693, the latter remained in possession of the Ukraine, on the W. side of the Dnieper, which constituted a palatinate called Kiov; while the E. side was allotted to Russia, and called the government of Kiov, but Russia having obtained the polish part, by the treaty of partition, in 1793, the whole belongs now to that power. That part of the Ukraine on the W. side of the Dnieper is but indifferently cultivated; but that on the E. side, inhabited by the Cossacs, is in much better condition. The principal town is Kiov. See Cossacs.

Ulatá, a town of Hindoostan, in Canara, 3 m. S. W. of Magalore.

Ulavool, a town of Scotland in Ross-shire, on the

E. side of the entrance of Loch Broom, at the mouth of a river of its name, with a good harbour and commodious road. It is a great fishing station and situate in the midst of a wool country, 48 m. W. by N. of Tain. Long. 5. 5. W., lat. 57. 50. N.

Ulea, or Ulaborg, an extensive province to the N. of Finland, and extending along the S. coast of the gulf of Bothnia. It was long subject to Sweden, but, since 1809, it forms a circle of the Russian government of Abo. The population is thinly scattered, the chief part of the surface being covered with forests, marshes, and rocks.

Uleaborg, the capital of the preceding province, and the largest town in E. Bothnia, with a castle on an island, and a commodious harbour. In 1714 this town was demolished by the Russians, to whom the Swedes surrendered it in 1808. It is situate at the mouth of a river of the same name 340 m. N. by E. of Abo. Long. 24. 40. E., lat. 65. 30. N.

Ulietea, one of the Society isles, in the S. Pacific. See Raietea.

Ullswater, a lake of England, on the borders of Westmoreland and Cumberland, 10 m. N. of Ambleside. It is 8 m. long, and abounds with Char and other fish. The report of guns, discharged in certain stations on the lake, is reverberated from rock to rock, promontory, cavern, and hill, with every variety of sound. The river Eamont flows through this lake, and by Penrith to the Eden, forming that part of the boundary line between the two counties.

Ulm, a city of Germany, in Wurtemberg. It is a fortified, large, and handsome place; in which the archives of the late imperial towns of Suabia were preserved, and where the diet of the circle was generally held. The cathedral is a large magnificent structure. Here is an excellent college, with a theological seminary annexed; and a convent for the daughters of the nobility and citizens, who are here educated, and afterwards at liberty to marry. Its other most remarkable buildings are the abbey of St. Michael, commonly called Wengen, the town-house, the arsenal, the magazines, and the valuable town library. The inhabitants are protestants, and estimated at 16,000; they have a good trade in linens, fustians, paper wine, and wool. The duke of Bavaria took it in 1702, by stratagem; but surrendered it after the battle of Blenheim, in 1704. In 1796 it was taken by the French, and it surrendered to them in 1805, with the flower of the Austrian army, under general Mack, consisting of 60,000 men. In 1810 it was transferred to Wurtemberg. It is seated at the confluence of the Blau with the Danube, opposite the influx of the Iller, 38 m. W. by N. of Augsburg and 40 S. E. of Stuttgart. Long. 9. 56. E., lat. 48. 24. N.

Ulotho, or Ulothov, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the county of Ravensburg, near which is a medicinal spring. 6 m. S. of Minden.

Ulrichstein, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, with a fortified castle, 25 m. S. E. of Marburg.

Ulrichshamn, a town of Sweden, in W. Gothland, formerly called Bogesund, the present name being given it in 1741, in compliment to queen Ulrica Eleanora. It has a considerable trade in cattle, provisions, tobacco, &c., and is 50 m. E. of Gotheburg.

Ulster, a province of Ireland, 116 m. long and 100 broad; bounded on the E. by the Irish Sea, N. by the Northern Ocean, W. by the Atlantic Ocean, S. W. by the province of Connaught, and S. by that of Leinster. It contains the counties of Donegal, Londonderry, Antrim, Tyrone, Fermanagh, Monaghan, Armagh, Down, and Cavan. The principal place is Londonderry.

Ulster, a county of New York. Pop. 36,551. Kingston is the capital; p.t. Bradford Co. Pa.

Ultzen, or Veltzen, a town of the Netherlands, in N. Holland, with a trade in flour and wool. 50 m. N. of Haarlem.

Ureterstone, a town in Lancaster, Eng. 261 m. N. N. W. of London.

Ulysses, a township of Tompkins Co. N. Y. Pop. 3,130.

Umbugog, a lake lying between N. Hampshire and Maine, 18 m. long and 10 broad. Its waters flow into the Androscoggin.

Uma, or Umea, a province of Sweden, comprising W. Bothnia, Unea Lapmark, and nearly all Swedish Lapland. It has an area of 65,000 sq. m. with about 80,000 inhabitants.

Uma, or Umea, a sea-port of Sweden, in W. Bothnia, capital of the above province, at the mouth of the river Uma, in the gulf of Bothnia. The houses are built of wood; and it was twice burnt by the Russians. 310 m. N. by E. of Stockholm. Long. 19. 18. E., lat. 63. 58. N.

Umago, a small sea-port of Austrian Illyria, in Istria, seated near the gulf Largon, 12 m. S. W. of Capo d' Istria.

Umbria, a province of Italy, now called the duchy of Spoleto, Umbriatico, a town of Naples, in Catabria, seated on the Lipuda, 15 m. N. by W. of St. Severina.

Ummerapoora, one of the most flourishing and well-built cities of Asia, once the metropolis of Birmanah, with a spacious and regular fort, completely fortified after the eastern manner. It was founded in 1783 by the emperor Minderagree, 4 m. to the N. E. of Ava, the ancient capital. The houses are raised on posts from the ground; the smaller supported by bamboos, the larger by strong timber. The streets are all straight, many of them wide, paved with brick, and frequently crossed by others at right angles. The royal palace is a splendid edifice, within the fort, and no nobleman of the court was permitted to enter it with his feet covered. The temples and monasteries are numerous, and though in general composed of wood are very magnificent: the unbounded expenditure of gilding, which is bestowed on the outside of the roofs, particularly on the lofty spires, renders them objects of extraordinary splendor. Ummerapoora is situate on a peninsula, formed by the Irrawaddy on the W. and a narrow channel branching E. from the river, which soon takes a N. direction and expands to a lake on the E. side of the city, 7 m. long and one and a half broad. 250 m. E. of Calcutta and 620 N. N. W. of Siam. Long. 76. 7. E., lat. 21. 57. N.

Unadilla, p.t. Otsego Co. N. Y. on the Susquehanna. Pop. 2,313.

Uncasville, p.v. N. London Co. Conn. 45 m. S. E. Hartford.

Underwalden, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N. by the canton of Lucern and the Lake of the Four Cantons, E. by high mountains which separate it from the canton of Uri, S. by Mount Brunich which parts it from the canton of Bern, and W. by that of Lucern. It is 24 m. long and 20 broad, contains an area of 300 sq. m. with 23,000 inhabitants, and is divided into the Upper and Lower Valley, by a forest called Kesterwald, which crosses the canton from N to S. The country abounds in fruit and cattle, but produces little corn and no wine. The inhabitants are Roman Catholics. Stanz is the capital of the Lower Valley, and Sarnen of the Upper and of the whole canton.

Ungvar, a town and fort of Hungary, capital of a palatinate of the same name. It stands in an island formed by the Ung, 57 m. E. of Cassovia. Long. 22. 23. E., lat. 48. 42. N.

Unguin, a small island in the N. Pacific Ocean near the W. coast of America, so named by the Russians. Long. 198. 44. E., lat. 55. N.

Unhuca, a small island in the Indian sea, at the entrance of the bay of Leronzo Marques. Lat. 26. 5. N.

Unhost, or Anhost, a town in Bohemia, in Schalan; 8 m. S. Schalan, 9 m. W. Prague. Pop. 992.

Uniego, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Lencicz, with a fine castle belonging to the archbishop of Gnesen, seated on the Warta, 20 m. S. W. of Lencicz.

Union, a county of the W. Dis. of Pennsylvania. Pop. 20,749. New Berlin is the capital. A county of Ohio. Pop. 3,192. Marysville is the capital. A county of Kentucky. Pop. 4,435. Morganfield is the capital. A county of Illinois. Pop. 3,239. Jonesborough is the capital. A county of Indiana. Pop. 7,957. Liberty is the capital. A county of Arkansas. Pop. 640. Corea Fabre is the capital. A District of S. Carolina. Pop. 17,905. Unionville is the capital.

Union, p.t. Lincoln Co. Me. Pop. 1,612; p.t. Tolland Co. Conn. Pop. 711; p.t. Brown Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,112; p.t. Essex Co. N. United Provinces of South America, called also Buenos Ayres, from the name of the chief city, and sometimes the Argentine Republic, from the etymology of the river La Plata; a republic of South America lying upon the La Plata and its tributary streams.

The present political boundaries are Bolivia on the N. Paraguay, Banda Oriental and the Atlantic Ocean on the E. Patagonia on the S. and Chile on the W. It contains 600,000 sq. m. and is divided into 13 provinces. This country resembles an extensive amphitheatre, bounded laterally by the Andes and the Brazilian mountains, and on the N. by a tract of mountains, denominated those of Chiquitos, which running N. W. from the Andes of La Paz and Potosi, and crossing the Parana, are connected with the Brazilian chain,—leaving towards the S. E. the immense opening of the Rio de la Plata, like a wide and magnificent portal proportioned to the grandeur, importance, and extent of the region to which it gives access. With in these limits—some scattered and intermediate ridges excepted—the country is extremely level, the hills generally not exceeding 540 feet of elevation above their bases; and the whole being a vast extended plain, covered with lakes and innumerable rivers, many of which, though equal to some of the largest in Europe, flow unregarded and nameless, and are viewed merely as tributary streams. Few of them, however, reach the sea, being either lost in the lakes, or stopped in the level plains, where they are soon absorbed or insensibly evaporated. The uniform levelness of this tract is so great, that it has been calculated by barometrical observation, that the great river Paraguay, in its progress to the south, does not fall above one foot in perpendicular height, between the parallels of 18. and 22. S. lat. or 230 miles direct distance, but much more by the course of the stream. Even when the winds from the S. E. occasion the rivers of Buenos Ayres to rise seven feet above their usual level, this rise is observed in the Parana, at the distance of 60 leagues. In consequence of this flatness of the soil, the rains which fall on the Andes are stopped where they descend into the plains, and are insensibly evaporated; so that a number of rivulets which, if collected on a different configuration of surface, would form a large stream, are thus stopped and annihilated. This physical defect cannot be supplied by any artificial means; for the same cause which prevents the superfluous moisture from finding its way to the sea, would equally prevent its conveyance by canals. In Buenos Ayres, and other towns situated on the banks of rivers, it is always found necessary to use a pump, in order to raise the water to the level of the town. This very circumstance, which produces the effects above described, is equally favourable to the formation of lakes. As the superfluous waters caused by the periodical rains, have no outlet, from the defect of descent, and cannot be absorbed by the soil, they are necessarily collected in the flat parts of the country, where they spread to a great extent, covering an immense space, but of no depth any where.

Most of the lakes are of this description; and among these is the celebrated lake of Xarayes, which is nothing else than the superfluous waters of the Paraguay, when swelled by the tropical rains, spread over an immense flat, and partly evaporated, and partly carried off by the river when it begins to retire within its banks. This marsh was formerly supposed to be its source; and many fables were circulated concerning it, as having a beautiful island in its centre: which, from the salubrity of its atmosphere, its perennial verdure, and exuberant fertility, was called 'the Island of Paradise,' and was said to be inhabited by the Orejones, a Peruvian tribe, which had taken refuge here at the time of the conquest. The number of crocodiles in this marsh is immense; and in the vicinity are found pumas, jaguars, stags, and monkeys of various kinds; the country also swarms with ants, moschetoes, and innumerable noxious insects. During the inundation, the Portuguese (from their settlements on the Cuyaba) cross it in canoes and small barks. When the inundation has ceased, the whole plain is completely dry, and covered with weeds and other plants. Of the same kind are the lakes of Aguasacaty in S. lat. 25., and Numbucu, in 27. S. lat., and in general all those to the E. of the Paraguay

The lake of Iberi, or Caracares, lies between the Uruguay and the Parana. For 30 leagues, the northern boundary of this lake runs parallel with the former river, and extends as far to the south. From its S. extremity the river Mirinay runs into the Uruguay; and from its W. and S. W. sides, three other large streams issue, namely the Santa Lucia, Corientes, and Battles, and fall into the Parana. None of these streams are fordable. Its greatest breadth is 46 miles. This lake neither receives rivers, brooks, nor springs, but is entirely nourished by the simple filtration of the waters of the Parana,—a phenomenon of which there is not another known instance in the world. This filtration alone supplies not only the four great rivers issuing from it, but also the vast quantity carried off by evaporation from a surface of 8,000 square miles; which, according to Halley's calculation, must be equal to 70,000 tons daily, allowing the mean temperature to be the same as that of England. This watery expanse, however, is generally very shallow, and filled with aquatic plants, so that its interior is completely inaccessible. The islands with which it is studded are well-stocked with deer and other game: flocks of wild fowl are always skimming on its surface, its fish are numerous, and very sweet and fresh, and many flourishing settlements are made on its shores. This lake overflows twice-a-year. During the intervals between the inundations, it has the appearance of an immense swamp, with 12 lakes dispersed at different distances.

There are other lakes, which stagnate in extensive flats, and being shallow, cover a great surface of ground; and which, consequently diminish the quantity of arable land. In the southern parts of this territory, and E. of the Plata, a chain of salt lakes extends E. from the Andes to this river. One of these lakes, in particular, 360 miles S. W. of Buenos Ayres, is remarkably salt. It is about 13 miles in circuit; and the salt found at the bottom is so hard and thick, that it is difficult to break it with iron tools. About 300 carts are annually loaded with it, and carried to Buenos Ayres; and what is very remarkable in this chain is, that a few of the lakes are fresh, though during the rains they are so swelled as to communicate frequently with those that are salt. All the springs throughout the greater part of the flat country W. of the Parana and Paraguay, are more or less salt, and few of the rivers can be drunk till they enter the Parana. The soil of this region, extending about 700 m. in length, and 190 m. in breadth, is saturated with fossil salt.

The western parts of this country, are generally mountainous, comprehending within their limits some of the loftiest ridges of the Andes. From the great chain of Andes, branches diverge in different places, extending far into the interior. Of these, the mountains of Cordova Achala, in the province of Tucuman, and those of the still more western province of Cuyo, form secondary ridges; and another ridge of the same kind branches off in the latitude of the great river Colorado, or Desaguadero, which, under the Indian appellation of Casuhati, runs nearly across to the Atlantic. The southern mountains are covered with thick impenetrable woods, and are little known. The Brazilian range on the E. is also of secondary elevation, generally covered with thick forests, interspersed with extensive tracts wholly destitute of vegetation. This extensive chain is con nected with the Andes on the W. and N. W., by an intermediate range, called the mountains of Chiquitos

This country is noted for the vast plains, called pampas. From the banks of the Paraguay immense plains extend westward to the frontiers of Los Charcas, and northward to the mountains of Chiquitos. These plains are generally elevated and dry, though traversed by numerous rivers. They are skirted by extensive and ancient forests, which afford shelter to the wild animals of the country, and are inhabited by Gauchos and other scattered tribes of Indians, who roam over their deserts in a state of savage independence. See Pampas.

A country so extensive as Buenos Ayres, must possess a great variety both of climate and soil. While, on the frozen summits of the Andes, the cold is intolerable even in summer, in the plains the heats of summer are extremely oppressive. The S. W. wind prevails only about one month during the year. In the northern parts of the country, and in the interior, the W. wind is scarcely known, and seldom lasts three hours together. At Buenos Ayres, and on the coast, the winds are more violent; the westerly wind is most common, and, sweeping down the immense plains of the interior, rushes over upon the coast with inconceivable violence. The S. E. wind is generally followed by rains in winter, and by dry weather in summer. In the spring and summer these winds are often very violent, raising clouds of dust which obscure the sun, and which cause great inconvenience to the inhabitants, by destroying their clothes, and penetrating into their houses and apartments. The atmosphere is very humid, and the apartments which have a southern exposure have always wet floors.

But, notwithstanding the exuberant fertility and benign temperature which pervades the greater part of this extensive country, its cultivation has been greatly neglected; and a colony which have been the granary of Europe, has hitherto produced little more than what merely supplies its own wants. The native pride and indolence of the Spaniards, and the extreme sluggishness of the Indians, effectually stop all agricultural improvements in this part of the New World; and extensive plains, watered by innumerable streams, are only employed to rear and fatten cattle.

The inhabitants of this extensive country are composed of the same classes as those of the other Spanish colonies, viz.: European Spaniards, Creoles, people of Colour, Negroes, and Indians. Of these, the Europeans held (till the late revolution) the first rank: and filled, with few exceptions, every office of trust, power, and influence, in the country. The Creoles who have at present gained the ascendancy, held an inferior optitical rank to the Europeans. The people of colour, the negroes, and Indians, still hold the same relative situations in society,—the Indians, as usual, being lowest in the scale. It is difficult to fix the number of inhabitants, and the relative proportions of the classes to each other.

The internal commerce of Buenos Ayres, or that carried on with its own provinces, is considerable. Of this traffic, the herb of Paraguay forms the most important branch: 2,500,000 lbs. of it pass annually into Peru, and 1,000,000 lbs. into Chile. It is conveyed in covered waggons drawn by oxen, from Santa Fe to Jujuy and Mendoza, and from thence is carried on the backs of mules to Potosi, La Paz, Peru, and Chile. In Paraguay, the price of this article is 4 dollars, or 18s. per arroba of 25 lbs. At Potosi, however, the price is more than double, and increases as it proceeds north. Immense droves of cattle pass annually into Peru; and 60,000 mules of two years old, are annually purchased in the territory, for that country. The greatest part of European commodities consumed in Chile, are drawn from Buenos Ayres. A considerable commerce is also carried on with the independent tribes that surround the country, particularly with the Pappas and Puelches. Some gold of a very superior quality, which is supposed to be collected among the mountains and upland springs on the banks of the Uruguay, has been lately brought to Buenos Ayres by the Indians, who contrive to barter it with the Americans or other foreign merchants.

The foreign commerce of this country is transacted chiefly at Buenos Ayres, from which place are exported hides, tallow, corn, beef, furs and peltry, gold and silver. The government is republican, but has been for some time in an unsettled state. Buenos Ayres is the capital. This country was formerly a viceroyalty under the Spanish government but revolted and declared its independence immediately after the invasion of Spain by the French in 1808. The population is above 2,000,000.

United States of America, a federative republic, occupying the middle division of North America, and consisting of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, N. and S. Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, all which are independent states with regard to their internal government, and the Territories of Florida, Michigan, Arkansas, Missouri, Oregon and the district of Columbia, which are under the dominion of the general government. This republic is bounded N. by British and Russian America, E. by the Atlantic Ocean, S. by the Atlantic, the Gulf of Mexico, the Mexican territories, and W. by the Mexican territories, and the Pacific Ocean. It extends from 25. to 55. N. lat. and from 43. 5. to about 130. W. long. and contains upwards of 2,300,000 square miles.

This country is traversed by two great chains of mountains; the Rocky mountains which are a continuation of the great Mexican chain and pass through the western territories of the United States in a northwesterly direction toward the Frozen Ocean; and the Apalachian chain, which has its whole extent in this country and stretches from the southeastern side of the Mississippi valley, in a northeast direction parallel to the coast of the United States nearly to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The different ridges of this chain, are known by a variety of names from the Cumberland Mountains of Tennessee, to the White Mountains of New Hampshire, and the highlands of Maine, but they may be considered as all constituting one system. An inferior range of mountains compared with these two are the Ozark and Masserne mountains, which may be regarded as detached branches of the Mexican chain stretching northwesterly into Missouri and Arkansas. The rivers which water the different parts of the United States are among the largest in the world, and the Missouri from its source in the Rocky Mountains to its outlet in the Gulf of Mexico, is the largest river on the globe. The rivers which rise on the southeastern slope of the Appalachian mountains, and flow into the Atlantic are not comparable to the streams of the west for length, yet are highly useful in navigation. The Atlantic coast is indented by innumerable bays and harbours, affording vast advantages for commerce, and the internal navigation of the country is assisted by a great number of canals, the chief of which are those uniting the great lakes of Canada with the rivers of the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico. The varieties of climate, soil, natural productions and agricultural industry, will be found minutely specified under the heads of the several states. For exact statistical details the reader is referred to the tables in the Appendix.

The population of the United States at the census of 1830 was 12,856,163, excluding the Indians. Since 1790 it has increased on an average one third every ten years. The number of Indians is estimated at 313,000. The commercial imports for 1830 were 70,876,920 dollars; the exports of domestic produce 59,462,020 dollars; total exports 73,849,508. The enrolled and licensed shipping at the end of the year 1828 amounted to 1,741,391 tons. The navy consists of 7 ships of the line, 12 frigates and 13 sloops of war and several small vessels. There are 5 ships of the line and 6 frigates in building. The army is restricted by law to 6,186 men.

Since 1810 there appears to have been no attempt at an exact estimation of the annual value of manufactures. At that period they were computed at above 170,000,000 dollars; their value at present is doubtless quadrupled. The money coined at the mint of the United States in 1831 was 3,923,473 dollars. The public debt is expected to be paid off in the course of the present year, 1832. The total expenditure of the U. S. government for 1830 was 12,729,533 dollars. The nett revenue for the same year was 22,697,679 dollars. There are in the U. S. 45 colleges, 21 Theological seminaries, 7 medical schools, 9 law schools, and above 12,000 churches; of which the Baptist and Methodists have together 4,434, the Presbyterians 1,472, the Congregationalists 1,331, the Episcopalians 932, the Catholics 784, the Dutch Reformed 602, the Quakers 562, the Universalists 298, the Lutherans 240, the Unitarians 127, the Calvinistic Baptists 84, the Swedenborgians 73, the Moravians 56, and the Jews 96 synagogues.

The United States form together a federal republic. Each state is independent, and has a separate legislature, executive, and judiciary; but the defence of the country, the regulation of commerce, and the general interests of the confederacy, are entrusted to the general government. The legislative power is vested in a congress, composed of a senate, consisting of 2 members from each state, chosen by the state legislatures for 5 years; and of a house of representatives, elected by the people for 2 years. The executive power is vested in a president, who, together with a vice president, is chosen for 4 years by electors from all the states. The principal subordinate officers in the executive department, are the secretaries of state, of the treasury, of war, and of the navy. The judiciary is independent of the legislature. The supreme court is composed of 7 judges. All power originates with the people. The constitution secures to the citizens the grand principles of freedom, liberty of conscience in matters of religion, liberty of the press, trial by jury, and the right of choosing and being chosen to office. Washington is the capital.

These States were most of them originally colonies of Great Britain. The first settlement made by the English was in Virginia in 1607: although Florida afterwards acquired by the United States from the Spaniards, was settled earlier. The oldest American town is St. Augustine which was founded about the year 1564. The dates of the settlement of the several states and their local histories will be found under the head of each. In 1775 the attempt of the British government to tax the colonies without their consent caused a revolt, and the Independence of the American states was declared on the 4th of July 1776, a desperate war with the mother country followed, but it was found impossible by the British to bring the Americans to submission, and in 1783 peace was concluded, and the independence of the states acknowledged by the king of Great Britain. The States enjoyed their separate independent governments till 1788 when the present constitution and federal government were established.

Uppingham, a town in Rutlandshire, Eng. 89 m. N. by W. of London.

Upsal, a city of Sweden, in Upland, and an archbishop's see, with a university. It is divided into two almost equal parts by the river Sala and the streets are drawn at right angles from a central kind of square. A few of the houses are built of brick, but the generality are constructed of wood, painted red, and the roofs are covered in with turf. Upsal was formerly the metropolis of Sweden, and near it is the morasten, or stone on which the king used to be crowned. The cathedral, a large structure of brick, contains the remains of the celebrated Gustavus Vasa, and of Charles Linne. The university is the most ancient in Sweden, and the first seminary in the north for academical education. The royal society here is likewise the oldest literary academy in the north. Here is an observatory, planned by the celebrated Celsius, from which the Swedish geographers compute the longitude; also a botanical garden, of which Linne was superintendent. Upsal is seated in a vast open plain, fertile in corn, 35 m. N. N. W. of Stockholm. Long. 17. 39. E., lat. 59. 52. N.

Upton, a county of Georgia. Pop. 7,013.

Upton, p.t. Worcester Co. Mass. 88 m. S. W. Boston. Pop. 1,157.

Upton, a town in Worcestershire, Eng. 111 m. W. N. W. of London.

Urach, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg. It has a great trade in paper, damasks, and linen, and is 21 m. S. S. E. of Stuttgart.

Uruguay, a province of S. America, so named from a large river, which unites with the Parana 70 m. above Buenos Ayres, and forms the famous river Plata.

Ural, or Oural, a river of Russia, which rises in Mount Caucasus, flows by Orenburg, Uralsk and Gurief, and enters the Caspian Sea by three mouths.

Ural Mountains, a chain of mountains extending from the 50th to nearly the 67th degree of N. lat., or about 1,150 m., and sometimes called by the Russians "the back of the world." The central part of this chain abounds in metals; and they contain fine white marble. Pouda, one of the highest mountains, is said to be 4,512 feet above the level of the sea. This chain forms a considerable part of the boundary between Europe and Asia.

Uralian Cossacs, a Tartar tribe that inhabit the Russian province of Orenburg, on the S. side of the river Ural. These Cossacs are descended from those of the Don; and are a valiant race. They profess the Greek religion, but they are dissenters from the established religion, whom the Russians called Roskolniki, or Separatists, and who style themselves Staroverski, or Old Believers. They consider the service of the established church as profane, and have their own priests and ceremonies. The Uralian Cossacs are all enthusiasts for the ancient ritual, and prize their beards almost equal to their lives. A Russian officer having ordered a number of Cossac recruits to be publicly shaved in the town of Yaitsk, in 1771, this wanton insult excited an insurrection, which was suppressed for a time; but in 1773 an impostor, Pugatchef, who assumed the name of Peter III., appeared among them; and taking advantage of this circumstance, roused them once more into open rebellion. This was suppressed by the defeat and execution of the impostor; and in order, to extinguish all remembrance of this rebellion, the river Yaik was called the Ural; the Yaik Cossacs were denominated Uralian Cossacs; and the town of Yaitsk was named Uralsk. These Cossacs are very rich, in consequence of their fisheries in the Caspian Sea. Their principal fishery is for sturgeons and beluga, whose roes supply large quantities of caviare; and the fish, chiefly salted and dried, afford a considerable article of consumption in the Russian empire.

Uralsk, a town of Russia, capital of the country of the Uralian Cossacs, was formerly called Yaitsk and is seated on the river Ural, 375 m. N. N. E. of Astracan. Long. 50. 10. E., lat. 52. 0. N.

Uraniburg, a once magnificent castle, of Denmark, in the island of Huen, now in ruins. It was built by Tycho Brahe, a celebrated astronomer, who called it Uraniburg, or Castle of the Heavens, and here made his observations.

Urbanna, p.t. Steuben Co. N. Y. 252 m. W. Albany. Pop. 1,288; p.t. Champaign Co. Ohio. Pop. 1,103

Urbana, p.v. Middlesex Co. Pa. on the Rappahannoc. 47 m. N. York. It has some commerce.

Urbania, a town of Italy, in the delegation of Urbino, built by Urban VIII.; seated on the Metro. 7 m. S. S. W. of Urbino.

Urbino, a delegation of Italy, in the pope's dominions, comprising the greater part of the former duchy of Urbino, with some adjoining districts. The air is not deemed wholesome, nor is the soil fertile. The chief production is silk, and game is plentiful.

Urbino, a city of Italy, capital of the foregoing delegation, and an archbishop's see. The university contains a noble college and 16 convents. Great quantities of fine earthenware are made here and it is famous for being the birth-place of the illustrious painter Raphael. It stands on a hill, 58 m. E. of Florence and 120 N. of Rome. Long. 12. 40. E., lat. 43. 46. N.

Ureden, a town of Prussian Westphalia, in the government of Munster, with manufactures of excellent linen; seated on the Berckel, 26 m. W. N. W. of Munster.

Urgel, a town of Spain in Catalonia, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the Segra, in a fertile plain, surrounded by mountains planted with vineyards, 78 m. N. N. W. of Barcelona. Long. 1. 28. E., lat. 42. 24. N.

Urghez, a town of the country of Carcasin, of which it was formerly the capital; seated on a small river which runs into the lake Aral, 90 m. N. N. W. of Khiva. Long. 58. 30. E., lat. 42. 24. N.

Uri, a canton of Switzerland, 30 m. long, and 12 broad; bounded on the N. by the canton of Sweitz and the Waldstadter Sea, E. by the cantons of Grisons and Glarus, S. by the bailiwicks of Italy, and W. by the cantons of Underwalden and Bern. It has an area of 640 square miles with 15,000 inhabitants. Altorf is the capital. See Schweitz.

Uri, Lake of. See Waldstadter See.

Urseren, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Uri, situate on the Reuss 17 m. S. S. E. of Altorf.

Ursitz, St., a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, indebted for its origin to a hermitage, built in the 7th century by St. Ursinius. It is seated on the Doubs, 6 m. S. of Porentrui.

Usbec Tartary, a vast country of Western Tartary, bounded on the N. by the country of the Kalmuos and Turkestan, E. by Thibet, S. by Hindoostan and Persia, and W. by the Caspian Sea. These Tartars are divided into several tribes, governed by their respective khans, or princes. When under one sovereign, they were the most powerful of all the Tartarian nations. The principal khans pride themselves in being descended from Tamerlane, whose birth-place was the ancient city of Samarcand. The Usbees, in their persons, are said to have better complexions, and more engaging features than the Kalmuos. Their religion is Mahometism, and they differ in general very little from the people of the northern provinces of Hindoostan.

Uscazia. See Scozia.

Usedom, an island of the Prussian States, in Pomerania, in the Baltic Sea, between the mouths of the Peene and Swin, with two forts named after these two rivers. It has a town of the same name, on the S. W. coast, 40 m. N. W. of Stettin. Long. 14. 2. E., lat. 53. 58. N.

Ushant, an island of France, on the coast of the department of Finisterre, opposite Conquet. It is 8 m. in circumference, and contains several hamlets and a castle. Long. 5. 5. W., lat. 48. 28. N.

Utingen, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Nassau. It has a handsome castle, and is seated on the Usbach, 12 m. S. S. E. of Wielburg.

Usk, a town in Monmouthshire, Eng. 142 m. W. by N. of London.

Ussel, a town of France, department of Correze, 32 m. N. E. of Tulle and 53 E. S. E. of Limoges.

Ustaritz, a town in the department of Lower Pyrenees, 6 m. S. S. E. of Bayonne.

Ustica, a small island in the Mediterranean, 25 m. N. of the coast or Sicily. It was for centuries uninhabited, except by wild goats, till in the year 1765, a citadel was built and a colony settled. The island is without springs, and its only supply of fresh water consists of rain kept in cisterns. Long. 13. 26. E., lat. 38. 42. N.

Usting, a town of Russia in the government of Vologda, capital of a large district of its name and an archbishop's see. Great quantities of grain are sent hence to different parts. It is seated on the Dwina, 464 m. N. E. of Moscow.

Utica, city, Oneida Co. N. Y. on the Mohawk 96 m. N. W. Albany. is one of the largest and most flourishing towns in this part of the state. It is regularly built, with broad and straight streets, and handsome buildings. The Erie canal, the great road, and the river unite at this point and secure this place a flourishing trade; the surrounding country is fertile, Utica has 11 churches, 3 banks, a lyceum and a court house. Pop. 8,523

Utica, p.v. Clarke Co. Ind.; p.v. Licking Co. Ohio.

Utrecht, one of the Dutch provinces, 30 m. long and 20 broad; bounded on the N. and W. by Holland and the Zuyder Zee, E. and S. by Guelderland. The soil is fertile, and there are no inundations to fear as in the other provinces.

Utrecht, a fortified city of the Netherlands, capital of the foregoing province, with a famous university. It is of a square form, about 3 miles in circumference, exclusive of the suburbs, which are considerable. The inhabitants are estimated at 35,000. The most distinguished of the public buildings is the cathedral, the tower of which is very lofty, and said to be one of the handsomest in the kingdom. The town-house is also a noble building, and there are a great many churches and hospitals, schools for the fine arts, a hall of paintings, several valuable libraries, &c. The principal manufactures are silk and fire arms; and in a palace called the Mall is an extensive foundry for cannon balls. Two canals, called the New Graft and the Vaert, run through the city, and over them are 36 stone bridges. The environs are full of gardens, walks, and groves, which added to the purity of the air, render Utrecht one of the most agreeable places for residence in these parts. Here the union of the Seven United Provinces was begun in 1579; and here was concluded, in 1713, the peace which terminated the wars of queen Anne. Utrecht surrendered to the Prussians in 1787, and to the French in 1795, each time without resistance. It is seated on the Rhine, 18 m. S. E. of Amsterdam and 35 N. N. W. of Nimeguen. Long. 5. 8. E., lat. 52. 6. N.

Utrera, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, near which is a salt-spring, 21 m. S. of Seville.

Uttoxeter, a town in Staffordshire, Eng. with a market on Wednesday, manufactures of cabinet-ware, and a considerable trade in corn and cheese. The parish church, the body of which has been recently rebuilt, is a spacious Gothic edifice. The other places of worship are two meeting-houses for Methodists, and one for Quakers. It is seated on a rising ground, near the river Dove, 14 m. N. E. of Stafford and 135 N. N. W. of London.

Utznach, a town of Switzerland, capital of a bailiwick belonging to the cantons of Schweitz and Glaris. It is 3 m. N. from the lake of Zurich and 15 N. by W. of Glaris.

Vaison, a town of France department of Vaucluse, noted as the birth-place of Trogus Pompeus, the Roman Historian. It is seated on a mountain, near the river Oreze, and the ruins of ancient Vaison, which was one of the largest cities of the Gauls. 22 m. N. E. of Avignon and 23 S. S. E. of Montelimar.

Val, a village of the Netherlands, 3 m. W. of Maestricht, where in 1744 marshal Saxe obtained a victory over the duke of Cumberland.

Val di Demona, a province in the N. E. angle of Sicily. It means the valley of demons, and is so called because Mount Etna is situate in this province, which occasioned ignorant and superstitious people, at the time of its fiery eruptions, to believe it was a chimney of hell. The capital is Messina.

Val di Mazara, a province in the W. angle of Sicily, so called from the town of Mazara. It contains Palermo, the capital of the whole island.

Val di Noto, a province in the S. E. angle of Sicily, so called from the town of Noto, its capital.

Valais, a canton of Switzerland, which consists of a valley 100 m. long and 20 broad, between ridges of very high mountains, among which are the Great St. Bernard, Grimsel, Furca, and others whose summits are never free from snow. The S. chain separates it from the Milanese, Piedmont, and Savoy; the N. divides it from the canton of Bern. The country is divided into Upper and Lower Valais. The former reaches from Mount Furca, its E. boundary, to the river Morge, below Sion, and the latter from that river to St. Gingou, on the lake of Geneva. A country consisting of plains, elevated valleys, and lofty mountains, must necessarily exhibit a great variety of climates and prospects. The productions must vary also according to its singular diversity of climates; for strawberries, cherries, plums, pears, and grapes, in their natural growth, may be tasted in the same day. It has more than sufficient wine and corn for interior consumption, the soil in the midland and lower districts being exceedingly rich and fertile; but, in the more elevated parts, barley is the only grain that can be cultivated with success. The inhabitants profess the Roman Catholic religion, and the lower class are extremely indolent and dirty; they have no manufactures of any consequence. In 1802 the Valais was constituted an independent republic, under the guarantee of France, Switzerland, and Italy; but in 1814 it was annexed to Switzerland. Sion is the capital.

Valckour, a town of Slavonia, seated on the Walpo, near its conflux with the Danube, 70 m. W. N. W. of Belgrade.

Valdai, a town of Russia, in the government of Novogorod, on the side of a lake of the same name. The lake is 20 m. in circumference, and has an island in the middle, on which is a convent surrounded by trees. The town contains several brick buildings; and the wooden houses are more decorated than the generality of Russian cottages. It is 72 m. S. E. of Novogorod. Long. 33. 44. E., lat. 57. 50. N.

Valdasnes, a town of Portugal in Tras os Montes, 9 m. E. S. E. of Mirandela.

Valdeburon, a town of Spain, in Leon, near the source of the Esla, 33 m. N. E. of Leon.

Valdeabras, a town of Spain, in New Castile, 10 m. N. N. E. of Cuenza.

Valdecona, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, 15 m. S. by W. of Tortosa.

Valdemoro, a town of Spain in New Castile, 13 m. S. of Madrid.

Valdivia or Baldivia, a sea-port of Chile, built in 1552, by the Spanish general Valdivia, after he had conquered the country. It is surrounded by walls built of earth, and defended by several forts and batteries; the entrance of the harbour has also numerous pieces of cannon on each side. In the vicinity are many gold mines. It stands on a bay of the Pacific Ocean, 200 m. S. of Concepcion. Long. 73. 10. W., lat. 39. 40. S.

Valence, a city of France, capital of the department of Drome, and a bishop's see, with a citadel and a school of artillery. It is surrounded by walls; and the greatest part of the public places and many private houses, are adorned with fountains. Besides the handsome cathedral, there are many other churches, as well as convents. It is seated on the Rhone, 30 m. N. by E. of Sivers and 335 S. by E. of Paris. Long. 4. 52. E., lat. 44. 55. N.

Valence, a town of France, department of Lot-et-Garonne, on the river Garonne, 12 m. S. E. of Agen.

Valencia, a province of Spain, formerly a kingdom; bounded on the N. by Arragon, N. E. by Catalonia, E. by the Mediterranean, S. and S. W. by Murcia, and W. by New Castile. It is 22 m. long, and from 20 to 60 broad, and the most pleasant and populous country in Spain; for here they enjoy a perpetual spring. It is watered by a great number of streams, and fertile in all the necessaries of life, especially fruits, oil, and wine. In the mountains are mines of iron and alum, and quarries of marble, jasper, and lapis calaminaris. Here is also much silk, cotton, and hemp; the manufactures of which are the cause of a considerable population.

Valencia, a city of Spain, capital of the above province, and an archbishop's see, with a university. The Moors were expelled from it in the 12th century. It was taken by the earl of Peterborough in 1705, and lost again in two years after. In 1811 it was taken by the French, under Suchet, with a garrison of 16,000 men, and immense stores. It contains 12,000 houses within the walls, besides those in the suburbs and pleasure gardens around it, which amount to the same number. The cathedral has a steeple 130 feet high; and one side of the choir is incrusted with alabaster, and adorned with fine paintings of Scripture history. The palace of the viceroy, that of Ciuta, the monastery of St. Jerome, the exchange, and the arsenal, are all worthy of notice. Here are manufactures of cloth and silk; and several remains of antiquity. It is seated on the Guadalaviar, near the Mediterranean, 130 m. E. S. E. of Madrid. Pop. 80,000.

Valencia, a town of S. America, in Venezuela, seated on the lake Tocarigua, 57 m. S. W. of Porto Cavallo. Long. 65. 30. W., lat. 9. 50. N.

Valencia d'Alcantara, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, with an old castle. It is surrounded by walls, and stands on a rock, near the frontiers of Portugal, 28 m. S. W. of Alcantara and 45 N. N. W. of Badajos.

Valenciennes, a city of France, in the department of Nord, seated on the Scheldt, which flows through it in several branches, and here begins to be navigable. It is large and populous; but the streets are narrow and crooked and many of the houses are of wood. The citadel and fortifications were constructed by order of Louis XIV. who took this town from the Spaniards, and it was confirmed to him by the treaty of Nimwegen, in 1678. In 1793 it was taken by the allies, under the duke of York, after a severe siege. But in 1794 it again surrendered to the French by capitulation, and was confirmed to them by the treaties of 1814, 1815. Besides lace, this city is noted for manufactures of woollen stuffs and cambric. It is 25 m. S. E. of Lisle and 120 N. N. E. of Paris. Long. 3. 32. E., lat. 50. 21. N.

Valentia, an island and harbour on the coast of Ireland in the country of Kerry, S. of Dingle Bay.

Valentine, a town of France, department of Upper Garonne, 9 m. N. E. of St. Bertrand.

Valenza, a town of Austrian Italy, in the government of Milan, seated on a mountain near the river Po, 12 m. E. S. E. of Cassal, and 35 S. S. W. of Milan

Valenza, a fortified town of Portugal in Entre Douero e Minho, seated on an eminence, near the river Minho, opposite Tuy, in Spain, and 30 m. N. N. W. of Braga.

Valette, a city of Malta, the capital of that island, and wonderfully strong both by nature and art. It is seated on a peninsula, between two of the finest ports in the world, which are defended by almost impregnable fortifications. Valette has three gates, and the streets are all paved with flat square stones. The houses are neat, and built of stone; the rooms forming a flat terrace plastered with pozzolana; and most of them have a balcony to the street, where the inhabitants pass a great part of their time. The principal buildings are the palace of the grand master, the infirmary, the conservatory, and the magnificent church of St. John. The pavement of this church is composed entirely of sepulchral monuments of the finest marbles, porphyry, lapis lazuli, and a variety of other valuable stones, admirably joined together, representing the arms, insignia, &c., of the persons whose names they commemorate. The great source of water that supplies Valette rises near Citta Vecchia, and is thence conveyed by an aqueduct, erected at the expense of one of the grand masters. Valette is situate opposite Cade Passero in Sicily. Long. 15. 34. E., lat. 35. 54. N.

Valette, a town of France, department of Charante, 12 m. S. by E. of Angouleme.

Valkenburg, or Fauquemont, a town of the Netherlands, in Limburg. In 1672 it was taken by the French, who demolished the fortifications. It is seated on the Geule, 8 m. E. by N. of Maestricht. Long. 5. 58. E., lat. 51. 0. N.

Valladolid, a city of Spain, in Leon, capital of a province of the same name, and a bishop's see with a university. It has long and broad streets, and is adorned with handsome buildings, squares, and fountains. The market place, called El Campo, is 700 paces in circumference, surrounded by a great number of convents. There are numerous monasteries and nunneries, the finest of which is that of the Dominicans, remarkable for its church, which is one of the most magnificent in the city. The kings formerly resided at this place; and the royal palace, which still remains, is of very large extent, though but two stories high. The town-house takes up the entire side of a square. Here are some woollen manufactures, and many goldsmiths and jewelers. The environs of the city are covered with gardens, orchards, vineyards, meadows and fields. Valladolid was taken and retaken several times, by the French and Spaniards, during the late peninsular war. It is seated on the Escurva, near the Pisuerga, 74 m. S. S. W. of Leon and 100 N. N. W. of Madrid. Long. 4. 47. W., lat. 41. 42. N.

Valladolid, a province of the republic of Mexico, bounded N. by the Rio de Lerma, S. by the Pacific, W. by New Galicia, and E. by Mexico Proper. It is 200 miles in circumference, and is very rich, abounding in all the necessaries of life; and the climate in general is mild and salubrious. At the period of the Spanish conquest this province formed part of the kingdom of Mechoacan, which was independant of the ancient Mexican empire.

Valladolid, or Mechoacan, a city of Mexico, capital of the foregoing province, with a fine cathedral, and some handsome houses; situate on a river near its source, 120 m. W. of Mexico.

Van Diemen's Land, an island in the S. Pacific, 160 m. long and 80 broad, separated from the S. part of New Holland by Bass Strait. It was discovered by Tasman in 1642, and till 1799 was deemed the S. extremity of New Holland. Cook called here in 1777 for supplies of wood, water, and grass, and it has since been visited by different navigators. The natives are of a common stature, but rather slender, the skin black, and the hair woolly, but their lineaments more pleasing than those of Negroes. They seem to prefer birds to all other food. The hovels in which they live resemble those of New S. Wales; but sometimes large trees are hollowed out by fire to the height of six or seven feet. The land is chiefly high, diversified with hills and valleys, which are well wooded and watered. The forest trees seem to be all of one kind, growing quite straight to a height proper for masts. The low lands produce flowering shrubs and odoriferous plants that perfume the air. S. Cape is in long. 146. 50. E., lat. 43. 40. S.

Vaniam Bady, a town of Hindoostan, in Mysore, 55 m. W. S. W. of Arcot and 130 E. of Seringapatam.

Venasque, a town of Spain, in Arragon, in a valley of the same name, and on the river Essarn, 47 m. N. N. E. of Balastro.

Venasque, a town of France, department of Vaucluse, on the river Nasque, 10 m. E. S. E. of Carpentras and 18 E. N. E. of Avignon.

Vencaticbery, a town of Hindoostan, in the E. part of Mysore, ceded to the English by the treaty of Seringapatam. Here are the remains of the rajah's palace, and the ruins of a fort. Near this place iron is smelted from black sand. It is 57 m. W. of Arcot and 58 E. of Bangalore.

Vence, a town of France, department of Var, 9 m. N. of Antibes and 9 W. of Nice.

Vende, a department of France, including part of the former province of Poitou. It is so called

From a small river of the same name. The surface is level and the soil fertile. It contains an area of 2,600 sq. m. with 250,000 inhabitants. Bourbon Vendee is the capital.

Venden, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga, on the river Aa, 36 m. E. N. E. of Riga.

Vendome, a town of France, department of Loire-et-Cher, on the river Loire, 30 m. N. E. of Tours and 95 S. W. of Paris.

Vendrell, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, 25 m. W. S. W. of Barcelona.

Venuria, a town of Piedmont, which took its name from a magnificent hunting-seat built by a duke of Savoy. It has manufactures of wool and silk, and stands on the Stura, 8 m. N. N. W. of Turin.

Venezuela, one of the 12 provinces of the republic of Colombia, bounded E. by the province of Cumana, W. by Maracaybo, N. by the Caribbean Sea, and S. by the plains of Varinas and the Orinoco. It spreads round a gulf of the same name (which reaches 90 m. within land, and is 80 in breadth) and the lake of Maracaybo. When the Spaniards landed here in 1499 they observed some huts built upon piles, in an Indian village named Cora, in order to raise them above the stagnated water that covered the plain; and this induced them to give it the name of Venezuela, or Little Venice. Near the sea coast are high mountains, the tops of which are barren, but the lower parts in the valley are fertile, and gold is found in the sands of the rivers. The province is said to contain 100,000 inhabitants, who raise great numbers of sheep, manufacture some cotton stuffs, and cultivate excellent tobacco, cocoa, and sugar. Caracas is the capital.

Venice, formerly a celebrated republic of Italy, the government of which was aristocratic, for none could have any share in it but the nobles. The doge was elected by a plurality of votes, obtained in a peculiar manner by means of gold and silver balls; and after his election the ducal cap was placed on his head with great ceremony, on his public entrance into St. Mark's church. He held his dignity for life, and his office was to marry the Adriatic Sea, in the name of the republic; to preside in all assemblies of the state; to have an eye over all the members of the magistracy; and to nominate to all the benefices annexed to the church of St. Mark. On the other hand his power was so limited that he has been justly defined to be, in habit and state, a king; in authority a counsellor; in the city a prisoner; and out of it a private person. There were five councils: the first was called La Signoria, composed of the doge and six counsellors. The second was Il Consiglio Grande, in which all the nobles, amounting to 2,500, had a voice. The third was Il Consiglio dei Pregadi, consisting of about 250 of the nobility. The fourth was Il Consiglio Proprio, which was united to the Signoria; its members consisted of 28 assessors; this council gave audience to the ambassadors. The fifth and last was Il Consiglio dei Dieci, composed of ten counsellors, who took notice of all criminal matters; and the doge himself, when accused, was obliged to appear before them; there was no appeal from this council, which was a severe state inquisition. This constitution, however, no longer exists. In 1797, a tumult having happened at Venice, in which some French soldiers were killed, the French seized the city, and instituted a provisional democratic government; but soon after, by the treaty of Campo Formio, the city and territory of Venice, lying to the N. and W. of the river Adige, was ceded to Austria as a duchy, in equivalence for the dominions that house had lost in the Netherlands and the remainder of the territory was annexed to what the French then styled the Cisalpine republic. In 1805 commenced a short war between Austria and France, and, by the treaty of peace at Presburg, the duchy of Venice was given up, and the whole territory of Venice was annexed to the kingdom of Italy. The Austrians, however, took possession of this country in 1814. The Venetian territories on the continent, enumerated above (and which, by way of distinction, are sometimes called the Terra Firma) are described in their respective places.

Venice was one of the most powerful commercial and maritime states in Europe. For this it was indebted, at first, to the monopoly of the commerce of India; the products of that country being conveyed, in the middle ages, up the gulf of Persia, the Euphrates, and the Tigris as far as Bagdad; thence by land across the desert, to Palmyra; and thence to the Mediterranean ports; and afterwards the supplying of the crusaders with provisions and military stores was an additional source of opulence and power. All this declined, however, after the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, by the Portuguese, in 1486; which in its consequences, has reduced Venice from a state of the highest splendour to comparative insignificance. The Venetians are lively and ingenious, extravagantly fond of amusements, with an uncommon relish for humour. They are in general tall, well made, and of a ruddy brown colour, with dark eyes. The women are of a fine style of countenance, with expressive features and a skin of rich carnation; they are of easy address, and have no aversion to cultivate an acquaintance with strangers who are properly recommended. Whatever degree of licentiousness may prevail among them, jealousy, poison, and the stiletto have been long banished from their gallantry. The common people display some qualities very rarely to be found in that sphere of life, being remarkably sober, obliging to strangers, and gentle in their intercourse with each other.

Venice, a city of Italy, and a long time the capital of a territory of the same name. In the 4th century, when Attila, king of the Huns, ravaged the N. part of Italy, many of the inhabitants abandoned their country, and retired into the islands of the Adriatic Sea, now called the gulf of Venice. These islands being near each other, they found means to join them by driving piles on the sides, and forming the channels into canals, on which they built houses, and thus the superb city of Venice had its beginning. It is the see of a patriarch, and stands on 72 little islands, about 5 m. from the mainland, in a kind of laguna or lake, separated from the gulf of Venice by some islands at a few m. distance. These islands in a great measure break the force of the Adriatic storms, before they reach the laguna. The number of the inhabitants in 1825, was 109,927. They have a flourishing trade in silk manufactures, bone-lace, and all sorts of glasses and mirrors, which make their principal employments. Most of the houses have a door opening upon a canal, and another into a street, by means of which, and of the bridges, a person may go to almost any part of the city by land as well as by water. The streets in general are narrow, and so are the canals, except the Grand Canal which is very broad and has a serpentine course through the middle of the city. There are nearly 500 bridges in Venice; but most of them are only paltry single arches thrown over the canals. The Rialto consists also of a single arch, but a very noble one, and of marble, built across the grand canal, near the middle, where it is the narrowest; this celebrated arch is 90 feet wide on the level of the canal, and 24 feet high. The beauty of it is impaired by two rows of booths or shops, which divide its upper surface into three narrow streets. The view from the Rialto is equally lively and magnificent, the canal being covered by boats and gondolas, and flanked on each side by magnificent palaces, churches, and spires. The patriarchal church of St. Mark, one of the richest and most expensive in the world, is crowned by five domes: and the treasury is very rich in jewels and relics. In the numerous churches and convents are the most admirable paintings; and indeed Venice, highly renowned for valuable paintings, far surpasses, in this respect, even Rome itself. The ducal palace, before the subversion of the republic, contained the apartments of the doge, halls and chambers for the senate and the different councils and tribunals, and an armory, in which a great number of muskets were kept, ready charged, that the nobles might arm themselves on any sudden insurrection. The arsenal is a fortification of three m. in compass; before it was possessed by the French, it contained arms for 60,000 foot and 20,000 horse, arranged in an ornamental manner; and 2,800 men were daily employed in building ships, casting cannons, making cables, sails, anchors, &c. The handsome structure called Il Frontica di Tedeschi, containing 22 shops and 100 rooms, is that where the German merchants store their commodities. The bank of Venice is supposed to be the first of the kind in Europe, after the model of which those of Amsterdam and Hamburg were established. In this city a famous carnival is held from Christmas till Ash Wednesday, in all which time libertinism reigns through the city, and thousands of foreigners frequent it from all parts of Europe. The chief divisions are ridottos and masquerades; and St. Mark's Place is the general rendezvous. Venice is included in the provinces called the Dogado, and is 125 m. N. N. E. of Florence and 140 E. of Milan. Long. 12. 23. E., lat. 45. 27. N.

Venice, Gulf of, a sea or gulf of the Mediterranean, between Italy and Turkey in Europe. It is the ancient Adriaticum Mare, and is still sometimes called the Adriatic Sea. There are many islands in it, and many bays or small gulfs on each coast. The grand ceremony of the doge of Venice marrying the Adriatic annually on Ascension Day, by dropping into it a ring from his bucentaur, or state barge, attended by all the nobility and ambassadors in gondolas, was intermitted in 1797, for the first time for several centuries.

Venice, p.t. Cayuga Co. N. Y. 174 m. W. Albany. Pop. 2,445; p.t. Huron Co. Ohio, on Sandusky Bay, 110 m. N. E. Columbus.

Venlo, a strong town of the Netherlands, in Guelderland, and a place of trade for merchandise coming from the adjacent countries. In 1702 it surrendered to the allies, and was confirmed to the Dutch by the barrier treaty in 1715. It was taken by the French in 1794, but ceded to the allies in 1814. It is seated on the E. side of the Meuse, opposite Fort St. Michael, 12 m. N. of Ruremonde. Long. 6. 6. E., lat. 51. 22. N.

Venosa, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, noted as the birth-place of Horace; seated on the river Ofanto, 13 m. N. W. of Acerenza.

Venta de Cruz, a town of Terra Firma, in the isthmus of Darien, seated on the river Chagre. Here the Spaniards used to bring the merchandise of Peru and Chile on mules from Panama, and embark it on the river for Porto Bello, 20 m. N. of Panama.

Venzona, a town of Austrian Italy, in Friuli, situate on the Tagliamento, 18 m. N. N. W. of Friuli.

Vera, a town of Spain, in Grenada, 24 m. N. N. E. of Almeria and 80 E. of Grenada.

Vera Cruz, a province of Mexico, comprising a considerable part of the eastern coast. It has an area of about 32,000 square miles, with 160,000 inhabitants. The soil of the lower grounds is abundantly productive, but the climate is so various that in the space of one day the traveller may pass from the regions of perpetual snow through all the intermediate temperatures to the suffocating heat of the plain near the sea, and within the compass of a few miles the naturalist may range through the scale of vegetation.

Vera Cruz, a city and sea-port of Mexico, capital of the above. The harbour is defended by a fort, situate on a rock of the island of St. Juar de Ulhua, nearly adjoining. This port is the natural centre of the treasure and merchandise of Mexico, and it receives much E. India produce by way of Acapulco from the Philippine Islands. The city is regularly built; its streets broad and strait, and its edifices constructed of Materials drawn from the bottom of the ocean—for no rock is to be procured in the neighbourhood. It is situated in an arid plain, without running water, and on which the N. winds blow with dreadful impetuosity from October to April, forming vast hills of moving sand. People in easy circumstances drink rain water collected in cisterns, and it is in contemplation to erect public cisterns within the precincts of the city; but at present the common people are obliged to use water which proceeds from the filtration of the marshes, and which having been in contact with the roots of vegetables, is of very bad quality. The Old Town, 16 m. to the N. W., is famous on account of the landing of Cortez, with 500 Spaniards, when he undertook the conquest of Mexico. Vera Cruz is 200 m. E. S. E. of Mexico. Long 96. 50. W., lat. 19. 5. N.

Vera Paz, a province of S. America, in Guatemala, bounded on the N. by Yucatan; E. by the bay and province of Honduras, S. by Guatemala Proper, and W. by Chiapa. It is full of mountains and forests; but there are many fertile valleys which feed a great number of horses and mules. There are also many towns and villages of the native Americans. The capital, of the same name, is a bishop's see, but is inconsiderable. It is 120 m. N. E. of Guatemala. Long. 90. 55. W lat 15. 30. N.

Veragua, a province of Terra Firma, bounded on the N. by the Caribbean Sea, E. by the province and bay of Panama, S. by the Pacific Ocean, and W. by Costa Rica. It is 125 m. long and 40 broad, and is a mountainous and barren country but abounds in gold and silver. St. Jago is the capital.

Verberie, a town of France, department of Oise, on the river Oise, 10 m. N. E. of Senlis.

Vercelli, a city of the Sardinian States, in Piedmont, capital of a lordship of the same name, and a bishop's see. The townhouse, the governor's palace, and the hospital, are handsome structures. The inhabitants, estimated at 20,000, are chiefly employed in the manufacture of silk. It is seated at the conflux of the Cervia with the Cesia, 40 m N. E. of Turin. Long. 8. 24. E., lat. 45. 31 N.

Vercholensk, a town of Russia, in the government of Irkutsk, seated on the Lena, 120 m. N. of Irkutsk. Long. 105. 35. E., lat. 54. 0. N.

Verchotura, a town of Russia, in the government of Perm, and a bishop's see. This was the first town the Russians built in Siberia. It is situated near the river Tura, 120 m. N. of Catharinenburg. Long. 60. 15. E., lat. 58. 45. N.

Verde, Cape, a promontory on the W. coast of Africa, 145 m. N. W. of the mouth of the Gambia. Long. 17. 31. W., lat. 14. 44. N.

Verde Islands, Cape, islands in the Atlantic, above 300 m. W. of the coast of Africa, between 13. and 19. N. lat. They were discovered in 1446, by Anthony Noel, a Genoese in the service of Portugal, and received their general name from their situation opposite Cape Verde; but they are said to have been known to the ancients, under the name of Gorgades. They are ten in number, lying in a semicircle. The names are St. Antonio, St. Vineent, St. Lucia, St. Nicholas, Sal, Bonavista, Mayo, St. Jago, Fuego, and Brava. St. Jago is the principal.

Verden, a duchy of Hanover, 28 m. long and nearly as much broad; bounded on the W. and N. by the duchy of Bremen, and E. and S. by the duchy of Lunenburg. It consists chiefly of heaths and high dry lands; but there are good marshes on the rivers Weser and Aller. It was formerly a bishopric, which, at the peace of Westphalia, was secularised, and ceded to Sweden; in 1712 it was taken by the Danes, who, in 1715, ceded it to the electoral house of Brunswick, which session was confirmed in 1718 by the Swedes. The inhabitants are Lutherans.

Verden, the capital of the foregoing duchy, contains four churches, and is seated on a branch of the Aller, 18 m. E. S. E. of Bremen. Long. 9. 20. E., lat. 52. 58. N.

Verdun, a strong town of France, department of Meuse, and a bishop's see. The citadel, which is a regular fortification, was constructed by Vauban, who was a native of this place. Besides the cathedral there are a collegiate church and nine parish churches, and it is divided into the Upper, Lower, and New Town. Verdun surrendered to the Prussians in 1792, but was retaken soon after. Here Bonaparte confined those Englishmen whom he detained after the rupture of 1803. It is seated on the Meuse, 28 m. N. by E. of Bar le Duc and 140 E. by N. of Paris. Long. 5. 23. E., lat. 49. 9. N.

Verdun, a town in the department of Saone-et Loire, seated on the Saone, at the influx of the Doubs, 30 m. E. by S. of Autun.

Verdun, a town in the department of Upper Garonne, seated on the Garonne, 20 m. N. N. W. of Toulouse.

Verca, a town of Macedonia, 48 m. W. of Salonica.

Vereria, a town of Russia, in the government of Moscow, 56 W. S. W. of Moscow.

Vergennes, p.t. Addison Co. Vt. on L. Champlain at the mouth of Otter Creek. 21. m. S. Burlington. Pop. 999. This place has been incorporated with city privileges. It has many iron foundries and mills, and manufactures of woolen.

Verinu, a town of Terra Firma, in Cumana, celebrated for its tobacco. It is situate on a gulf of the Atlantic, 45 m. E. of Cumana. Long. 63 44. W., lat. 10. 8. N.

Vermadois, a territory of France, in Picardy
Vermanton, a town of France department of Yonne, 14 m. S. S. E. of Auxerre.

Vernejo, a river which rises in Tucuman, on the borders of Peru, flows S. E. to the Paraguay, and enters that river a little above its junction with the Parana.

Vermilion, a county of Illinois. Pop. 5,836. Danville is the capital. A county of Indiana. Pop. 5,706. Newport is the capital.

Vermont, one of the New England States, bounded N. by Canada, E. by N. Hampshire, S. by Massachusetts and W. by N. Y. from which it is separated from the west part by Lake Champlain. It extends from 42. 44. to 45. N. lat. and from 71. 33. to 73. 26 W. long. and contains 10,212 sq miles. The eastern limit is washed by the Connecticut, and the whole State is traversed from N. to S. by the Green Mountains, from which numerous small streams flow East and West into Lake Champlain and the Connecticut. The chief of these streams are Onion River, Otter Creek, the Missisque, the Pasumic, White River and West River. Lake Memphremagog lies on the northern limits of the State. A remarkable eruption of one of the small lakes of this state took place in 1810. Long Lake, a beautiful sheet of water, a mile and a half in length, and three fourths of a mile in width, was situated in the town of Glover in the N. part of the state, and communicated by a small stream with lake Champlain. About 290 rods from Long Lake, was a smaller lake on much lower level, the outlet of which was Barton River, flowing in an opposite direction into Lake Memphremagog. The land separating these lakes was a steep declivity. The water being low at the mills on Barton River, during the summer of 1810, it was thought advisable to obtain a new supply by letting out a portion of the water of Long Lake into the lake beneath, by means of a trench down the intervening declivity. Accordingly, on the 6th of June the people of the neighbourhood assembled with their tools, and began the work of cutting the trench, when on a sudden the lake burst its borders, and poured with its whole mass down the descent, rushing with inconceivable velocity in an immense column, three quarters of a mile wide, and 80 feet in depth, across the country 15 miles into Lake Memphremagog. This furious torrent tore up in its course, rocks, hills and forests, sweeping away houses, mills, cattle, &c roaring like thunder, and shaking the earth like a mighty earthquake. The inhabitants of Barton hearing the roar, looked up toward the lake, and beheld the torrent coming down upon them, bearing a whole forest upon its top. The cattle for many miles round, ran bellowing to their homes, and all the neighborhood were thrown into the greatest terror. No lives were lost, but a vast amount of damage was occasioned.—The winter begins here about the first of December, although the frosts appear as early as the first of September. From the first setting in, to the breaking up of the winter, there is scarcely any thaw. The winter continues till April. Snow storms are frequent, yet little snow falls at a time: they come from all points of the compass except the East, and are generally over in a few hours. The cold is here more steady and uniform than in the other New England states. On the mountains, the snow is commonly three or four feet deep, and lies till the end of April. On the low grounds, it is from 1 to 1-2 feet in depth, and continues till about the 20th of March. The severest cold never kills the young trees, and the chilling easterly winds of spring seldom reach so far inland as to be felt here; west of the Green Mountains they are totally unknown. Droughts are uncommon; the crops more frequently suffer from too much moisture. During April and May the weather is mild with frequent showers. Through the summer it is fair and serene. The wind at this season is mostly from the S. W. being regulated by the direction of the mountains, and the shores of lake Champlain. The heat of the day is excessive, but the nights are ever cool and agreeable. The soil is generally rich and loamy. On the borders of the rivers are fine tracts of interval land, which consists of a deep, black, alluvial deposit; these are sometimes a mile in width, and are very productive in maize, grain, grass, and garden vegetables. The uplands are in many places scarcely inferior to the intervals, and are in general sufficiently free from stones to admit of easy cultivation. The hills and mountains which are not arable on account of their steepness, or the rocks, afford the best of pasturage for sheep and cattle. There is hardly any part of the country better adapted to the rearing of horses, horned cattle and sheep, than the mountainous parts of this state. Wheat is raised more abundantly on the western side of the mountains, than on the eastern. The soil and climate of all parts are very favourable to the growth of the apple and other fruits. The greater part of the state is better fitted for grazing, than tillage.

Iron is abundant in this state, and lead, zinc, copper and manganese are found in many places. Sulphate of iron, or copperas is very plentiful. The best iron is found at Peru in the southern part of the state, and has the highest reputation for its ductility and toughness. It is worked into chains, bolts, &c. but the bed of ore having been much reduced of late, and the manufacture of iron increased, an inferior sort is now mixed with the Peru iron, by which its quantity has much deteriorated. It is still, however, of high excellence. A quarry of fine marble exists in Middlebury. It rests upon a bed of argillite, and rises in many places above the surface of the ground. The marble is of various colors, and has been wrought ever since 1806. It is now in the possession of an incorporated company, and the machinery for sawing it is driven by water. At Swanton on lake Champlain in the N. is an inexhaustible quarry, which covers an area of more than 300 acres. The marble is of a beautiful black, and sometimes of a bright blue clouded color. 100 saws are occupied at the mills in this town, in working it into various forms. On a small island in lake Memphremagog, is a quarry of noracalite, known by the name of Magog oil-stone; it is several hundred feet in length, and interspersed with quartz. A manufactory of this stone has been established in the town of Burke. The oil-stones when manufactured, sell for 50 cents per pound. Quarries of slate are wrought near Brattleboro'. The surface of the state is highly diversified. From the mountainous ridge which occupies the centre of the state, the land slopes, toward the Connecticut and lake Champlain. Adjoining the rivers are extensive plains, but the elevated country forms the greater proportion of the surface.

In the northern parts, the population is thin, and the country still unsubdued by the plough. Innumerable stumps, the remains of the pristine forests, deform the fields. Pines and other trees, girded, dry, and blasted by summers heat, and winters cold, scorched and blackened by fire, or piled in confusion, on fields cleared half by the axe, and half by burning—these with the rude low huts of the inhabitants, indicate a country imperfectly subdued by man. But if we confine ourselves to merely physical observations, and consider the natural formation of hill, mountain, valley, lake and stream, we shall find this state to be among the most picturesque portions of North America.

This state is divided into 13 counties. The population is 280,679. Montpelier is the capital. The other large towns are Windsor, Brattleboro, Burlington, Middlebury, Bennington and Rutland. The agriculture resembles that of the other New-England states. Wheat is only cultivated W. of the mountains. Maize thrives best on the intervals, but is also raised abundantly on the uplands. Farmers who are industrious, seldom fail of having their barns filled with hay and flax; their granaries with maize, wheat, rye, oats, barley, pease and beans, and their cellars with the best of cider, potatoes and other esculent roots. The raising of wool has lately much increased. Lake Champlain affords facilities for a considerable commerce between this state and Canada. The trade in this quarter is chiefly with Montreal; the exports are pot and pearl ashes, beef, pork, butter and cheese, flax, live cattle, &c. The domestic trade is mostly with Boston, New York and Hartford. Except the domestic fabrics of linen and woolen which occupy almost every family the manufactures of this state are not considerable. There are however above 100 woolen and cotton manufactories, paper mills and oil mills also 300 tanneries, and 150 distilleries. Maple sugar is made in nearly every town and family in the state; the average quantity made by each farming family is estimated at 150 pounds, amounting to 6 million pounds a year. Pot and pearl ashes, and iron are also manufactured in various parts. There are manufactories of copper-ash from native sulphuret of iron at Strafford and Shrewsbury.

The legislature of Vermont is comprised in a house of representatives called the General Assembly. There is no senate; each town has one representative. The executive officers are a Governor, Lt. Governor, and a council of 12, chosen annually by general ballot: all residents in the state of one year's standing are voters. There is also a council of censors, chosen every 7 years; they are 13 in number, and hold their office for a year; their duty is to inquire whether the constitution has been preserved inviolate during the period preceding their appointment, and whether the legislative and executive branches have done their duty, and to suggest alterations in the constitution. The legislature meet at Montpelier in October. The Congregationalists have 203 churches, and 110 ministers. The Baptists 105 churches, and 56 ministers. The Methodists have 44 ministers. The Episcopalians have 11 churches. There are two Unitarian churches, one at Burlington and one at Brattleboro'. There are colleges at Burlington and Middlebury. Academies and schools are numerous in this state as in other parts of New England. Each town is obliged by law to support public schools. Vermont was first explored by the French settlers of Canada, but the earliest settlement within the territory was made by the English of Massachusetts, who in 1724, more than 100 years after the discoveries in the northern parts of Champlain, established themselves at Fort Dummer, on the Connecticut. Six years after this, the French advanced from Canada down Lake Champlain, and settled at Crown Point, and on the eastern shore of the lake. The claim to the country was afterwards disputed by N. Hampshire and New York. The British Parliament decided in favour of the latter state, but much confusion and altercation were caused by the conflicting grants of land made by the N. Hampshire and N. York governments. The disputes thus occasioned, remained unsettled during the revolutionary war, after which New York compounded for her claim, and Vermont became an independent state. She was received into the Union in March 1797.

Veroli, a town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, seated on the Cosa, 3 m. S. of Alatri.

Verona, a province of Austrian Italy, in the government of Venice, 35 m. long, and 27 broad. It is a very fertile country, abounding in corn, wine, fruit, and cattle.

Verona, a city of Italy, capital of the foregoing province, and a bishop's see. It has three forts, and is surrounded by thick walls, deep ditches, and good ramparts. The river Adige divides it into two parts, which communicate by four bridges. Most of the buildings are of marble, above 30 kinds of which are found in the neighbourhood; but the streets are neither clean nor straight; the best is that called the Corso, which is pretty long, and there is a handsome square called the Piazza d'Armi. This city is famous for antiquities, the most remarkable of which is the Roman amphitheatre, of which seven rows of benches of white marble are still entire; but various repairs have been made from time to time. In the town house are the statues of five illustrious natives of Verona; namely, Catullus, Æmilius Marcus, Cornelius Nepos, the elder Pliny, and Vetruius. Besides the cathedral there are a great number of churches and convents, and several hospitals. The palaces of Bevilacqua and Scipio Maffei contain many valuable paintings, antiques, and other curiosities. The principal trade arises from the manufactures of silk and woolen, and next to them are those of gloves and leather. Near the city is a delightful place, called Campo Marzo, where two annual fairs are held in May and November. Verona has been often taken, and when Italy was invaded by the French, it was added to the kingdom of Italy. In 1814 it was ceded to Austria, and in 1822 the members of the Holy Alliance met here to deliberate on the affairs of Europe. It is 20 m. N. N. E. of Mantua and 54 W. of Venice. Long. 11. 18. E., lat. 45. 26. N. Pop. 60,000.

Versailles, a town of France, capital of the department of Seine-et-Oise, and a bishop's see. In the reign of Louis XIII. it was only a small village, in a forest 30 m. in circuit; and here this prince built a hunting seat in 1630, which Louis XIV. enlarged into a magnificent palace, and it was the usual residence of the kings of France till 1789, when Louis XVI. and his family were removed from it to Paris. The buildings and gardens were adorned with a vast number of statues by the greatest masters, and the water-works were magnificent. The gardens, with the park, are 5 m. in circumference, and surrounded by walls Versailles is 10 m. W. S. W. of Paris. Long. 2 7. E.. lat. 48. 48. N.

Versetz, a town of Hungary, in Temeswar, and a bishop's see. It contains some extensive barracks, and near it are the ruins of a castle. 18 m. N. of Vipalanca and 40 S. of Temeswar.

Vershire, a township of Orange Co. Vt. Pop. 1,260.

Versoix, a town of France, department of Aisne. Here, in 1768, an attempt was made to form a harbour, in opposition to Geneva, and great sums were expended for that purpose; but it was soon after relinquished. It is seated on the lake of Geneva, at the influx of the river Versoix, 6 m. S. E. of Gex and 7 N. of Geneva.

Vertus, a town of France, department of Marne, seated at the foot of a mountain on which are good vineyards, 17 m. S. W. of Chalons and 78 N. E. of Paris.

Verviers, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Liege, which has a considerable traffic in cloth. It is seated on the Weze, 4 m. S. W. of Limburg and 17 E. S. E. of Liege.

Vervins, a town of France, department of Aisne, famous for a treaty, in 1598, between Henry IV. of France and Phillip II. of Spain. It is seated on the Serre, 40 m. N. E. of Soissons.

Verzuolo, a town of the Sardinian states, in Piedmont, with a castle. It is surrounded by an ancient wall, flanked with towers, and seated in a very fruitful soil, near the Vratia, 3 m. S. of Saluzzo.

Vesley, a town of France, department of Aisne, on the river Aisne, 10 m. E. N. E. of Soissons.

Vesoul, a town of France, capital of the department of Upper Saone. In its vicinity is a medicinal spring. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, near the river Durgcon, 24 m. N. of Besancon and 106 E. S. E. of Troyes. Long. 6. S. E., lat. 47. 36. N.

Vesprim, an episcopal town of Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle. It is seated on the Sed, 19 m. W. by S. of Stuhlweissenburg and 70 S. S. E. of Presburg. Long. 17. 57. E., lat. 47. 16. N.

Vesuvius, a volcanic mountain of Italy, 7 m. E. of Naples. It is nearly 30 m. in circuit at the base, and about 3,700 feet high. Towards the sea it is covered with fruit-trees and vineyards; but on the S. and W. sides, and on the top, nothing is to be seen but black ashes, cinders, and stones. The top of Vesuvius is divided into two points, the southernmost of which is called Mont de Somma. The eruption in the year 79, under Titus, was accompanied by an earthquake, which overturned several cities, particularly Pompeii and Herculaneum; and this eruption proved fatal to Pliny the naturalist. Great quantities of ashes and sulphureous smoke were carried not only to Rome, but also beyond the Mediterranean, into Africa; birds were suffocated in the air, and fell down upon the ground; and fishes perished in the neighbouring waters, which were made hot, and infected by it. Another very violent eruption, in 1631, totally destroyed the town of Torre del Greco. The eruption in 1767 was the 27th from the time of Titus, since which there have been 11 others, the last of which was in 1819. Next to those in 79 and 1631, that of 1794 was the most violent and destructive. In this eruption the lava flowed over 5,000 acres of rich vineyards and cultivated lands, and the town of Torre del Greco was again destroyed; the top of the mountain likewise fell in, and the crater is now little short of 2 m. in circumference.

Veudre, a town of France, department of Allier, on the river Allier, 17 m. N. W. of Moulins.

Vevay, a town of Switzerland, capital of a bailliwick in the Pays de Vaud. The principal manufacture is hats; it has a large trade in cheese, and its wine is in great estimation. It stands near the lake of Geneva, 10 m. E. by S. of Lausanne. Long. 7. 0 E., lat. 46. 25. N.

Vevay, p.t. Switzerland Co. Indiana, on the Ohio. 45 m. S. W. Cincinnati. It was settled in 1804 by a body of Swiss emigrants, to whom the United States government made a grant of land in order to introduce the cultivation of the vine. The vineyards are now very flourishing, and are the largest in the United States. The inhabitants are mostly Swiss, and carry on some manufactures of straw bonnets and other articles.

Veyme, a town of France, department of Upper Alps, 12 m. W. by S. of Gap.

Vezelay, a town in the department of Yonne, noted for the noble stand made by the Calvinists, in 1560, against Charles IX., who besieged the town, but was obliged to retire after the loss of 1,500 men. Theodore Beza was a native of Vezelay. It is seated on the top of a mountain, near the river Cure, 26 m. E. by S. of Auxerre.

Vezelize, a town in the department of Meurthe, seated on the Brenon, 12 m. S. of Nancy and 14 S. E. of Toul.

Viana, a town of Portugal in Entre Douro e Minho, at the mouth of the Lima, with a good harbour for small vessels, defended by a fort, 20 m. W. by N. of Braga.

Vianen, a town of the Netherlands, in Luxemburg, divided into the Old and New Town by the river Uren. It has a castle, on an inaccessible rock, and considerable manufactures of cloth, and leather. 22 m. N. of Luxemburg and 22 N. W. of Treves.

Viamen, a town of the Netherlands, in S. Holland, with a castle; seated on the Leek, 7 m. S. of Utrecht.

Viatka, a government of Russia, which was formerly a province of Kassan, containing an extent of 47,000 square miles, with not more than 1,100,000 inhabitants. It takes its name from the river Viatka, which flows through the country, and joins the Kama.

Viatka, formerly called Khlynof, a town of Russia, capital of the foregoing government, and a bishop's see with a castle. It is seated on the river Viatka, 100 m. N. of Kassan. Long. 54. 15. E., lat. 57. 25. N.

Viazna, a town of Russia, in the government of Smolensk, seated on an eminence, 80 m. N. E. of Smolensk.

Vic, a town of France, department of Meurthe, seated on the Seille, 15 m. E. N. E. of Nancy.

Vic, or Vique, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, and a bishop's see. It is seated in a fertile plain, 35 m. N. of Barcelona.

Vic Bigorre, a town of France, department of Upper Pyrenees, situated on the Adour, 12 m. N. of Tarbes.

Vic Fezensac, a town in the department of Gers, seated on the Douze, 15 m. W. of Auch.

Viele Compte, a town in the department of Puy de Dome, with a palace, where formerly the counts of Auvergne resided. About a mile from it are mineral springs. It is seated near the Allier, 15 m. S. E. of Clermont.

Viecegrad, a town of Hungary, with a castle on the top of a rock, in which the crown of Hungary was formerly kept. It is seated on the S. side of the Danube, 8 m. S. E. of Gran and 16 N. W. of Buda.

Vicenza, or Vicentino, a delegation of Austrian Italy, in the government of Venice, 35 m. long and 27 broad, and so pleasant and fertile that it is called the garden and flesh-market of Venice. Here are also mines of silver and iron, and quarries of stone, almost as fine as marble.

Vicenza, a city of Italy, the capital of the foregoing province, and a bishop's see. It is without walls, but is a large place, adorned with about 20 palaces from the designs of Palladio, who was a native of this place. The cathedral is embellished with marble, and has some good paintings; besides which there are above 60 other churches, and in that of St. Corona, the high altar, and the painting by Paul Veronese of the Magni, paying adoration to Christ, attract particular notice. In the fine square before the town-house are two lofty columns, with St. Mark's winged lion on one of them, and on the other a statue of our Saviour. The other remarkable places are the Monte della Pietà with its fine library, the Palazzo Vecchio with its admirable paintings, the Theatrum Olympicum after the model of the amphitheatre of Palladio, and the triumphal arches in the public promenade of Campo Marzo. The principal manufactures are silk, damask, and taffeta. about 4 m. from the city on a mountain, is the church Della Madonna di Monte Berico, which is much frequented by pilgrims, and has a fine frontispiece, with a convent close by. Vicenza is seated in a fertile plain, between two hills, at the union of the rivulets Bacchiglione and Rerone, 22 m. E. of Verona and 15. W. of Venice. Long. 11. 40. E., lat. 45. 28. N.

Vichy, a town of France, department of Allier, near which are some mineral springs. It is seated on the Allier, 40 m. S. of Moulins.

Vicksburg, p.t. Warren Co. Mississippi, on the Mississippi, 60 m. N. E. Natchez. It has a brisk trade in the exportation of cotton to New Orleans by steamboats. The town is very picturesquely built on the slopes of several high hills.

Vico, a town of Naples, in Principato Citra, near the bay of Naples, 5 m. N. E. of Sorrento.

Vico, a town of Corsica, in which is the cathedral of the bishop of Sagona, a town now in ruins. It is 15 m. S. W. of Corte and 30 S. of Calvi.

Vicovaro, a town in the Ecclesiastical states, in the district of Sabina, seated near the Teverone, 10 m. N. E. of Tivoli.

Victor, p.t. Ontario Co. N. Y. 218 m. W. Albany. Pop. 2,265.

Vologda, a town of Russia, in the government of Vologda, situated on the Vogado, 156 m. N. N. E. of Vologda. Long. 41. 45. E., lat. 61. 40. N.

Vienna, a city of Lower Austria, the capital of the empire, and an archbishop's see. It stands in a fertile plain, on the right bank of the Danube at the influx of the little river Vien. The city itself is not of great extent, nor can it be enlarged being limited by fortifications; but it is very populous. The streets in general are narrow, and the houses high; but there are several fine squares, and in that called Joseph Square is a colossal equestrian statue in bronze of Joseph II. Some of the public buildings are magnificent; the chief of them are the imperial palace, the palaces of the princes Litchtenstein, Eugene, &c., the imperial chancery, the extensive imperial arsenal, the cit-arsenal, the mint, the general hospital, the town house, the custom-house, the bank, the library and the museum. No houses without the walls are allowed to be built nearer to the glacis than 600 yards; so that there is a circular field of that breadth all round the city, which has a beautiful and salutary effect. The eight suburbs are not populous in proportion to their size, for many houses have extensive gardens. The circumference of the city and suburbs is upwards of 18 m. Many families, who live during the winter within the fortifications, spend the summer in the suburbs. The cathedral is built of freestone, and the steeple contains a bell of uncommon magnitude cast out of the cannon taken from the Turks. Adjoining to this church is the archbishop's palace, the front of which is very fine. Vienna was ineffectually besieged by the Turks in 1589 and 1683. At the latter period the siege was raised by John Sobieski, king of Poland, who totally defeated the Turkish army. The university had several thousand students, who, during the siege mounted guard, as they did also in 1741. The archducal library is much frequented by foreigners, as it contains above 1,000,000 printed books, and 12,000 MSS. The archducal treasury, and a cabinet of curiosities of the house of Austria, are great rarities. The Danube is here very wide, and contains several woody isles, one of which is the prater, or imperial park; it also forms a sort of harbour, where are magazines of naval stores, and ships have been fitted out to serve on that river against the Turks. The trade of Vienna is in a flourishing state, and it has manufactures of silk stuffs, gold and silver, lace, tawesty, looking-glasses, &c. In 1805 this city surrendered to the French, but was given up by the peace of Presburg. In 1809 it again surrendered to the French, but they again restored it on the conclusion of Peace. In 1830 it experienced a severe calamity after a frost of 118 days a thaw set in on the 26th of February, and about midnight on the 28th the ice broke and inundated the dwellings of 50, 000 inhabitants, many of whom were drowned, together with a great number of horses, cows, pigs, &c. In 1831 it was united by the pestilential cholera, and suffered severely. It is 50 m. W. of Presburg, 330 N. N. E. of Rome, and 570 E. of Paris. Long. 16. 16. E., lat. 48. 13. N. Pop. 290,000.

Vienne, a town of France, department of Isere, and an archbishop's see. In the 5th century the Burgundians made it the capital of their kingdom. The cathedral is a handsome Gothic structure. In 1311 a general council was held here, at which pope Clement V. presided, and among other matters, the suppression of the Knight Templars was determined. The commerce of Vienne consists in wines, silk, and sword-blades. It is seated on the Rhone, 15 m. S. S. E. of Lyons and 38 N. W. of Grenoble. Long. 4. 56. E., lat. 45. 32. N.

Vienne, a department of France, formed of part of the province of Poitou, and bounded N. by the department of Indre-et-Loire, and S. by that of Charente. It takes its name from a river, which rises in the department of Correze, and flows into the Loire 5 m. above Saumur. Poitiers is the capital.

Vienne, Upper, a department of France, comprising the greater part of the province of Limosin. Limoges is the capital.

Vierraden, a town of Prussia, in Brandenburg seated on the Vesle, near its conflux with the Oder, 22 m. E. S. E. of Prenzlau.

Vierzon, a town of France, department of Cher, famous for its forges. It is seated on the Cher, near the influx of the Yevre, 17 m. N. W. of Bourges.

Vincet, Cape, St., the S. W. promontory of Portugal, 25 m. W. by S. of Lagos. Long. 9. 0 W., lat. 37. 3 N.

Vincet, St., one of the Windward Caribbee Islands, in the W. Indies, 24 m. long and 18 broad and about 70 m. W. of Barbadoes. It is extremely fertile, and well adapted for the raising of sugar and indigo; and here the bread-fruit trees brought from thrivate Otaheite remarkably well. The original inhabitants were Caribs, a warlike race, manifestly distinguished from the aborigines of the larger islands. They are conjectured to have been originally a colony from N. America, their fierce manners approaching nearer to those of the original natives of that continent than they do to that of S. America, and their language also having some affinity to that spoken in Florida. In their wars they preserved their ancient practice of destroying all the males, and preserving the women either for servitude or for breeding. St. Vincent was long a neutral island; but, at the peace of 1763, the French agreed that the right to it should be vested in the English. The latter, soon after, engaged in a war against the Caribs, on the windward side of the island, who were obliged to consent to a peace, by which they ceded a large tract of land to the crown. The consequence of this was, that, in 1779, they greatly contributed to the reduction of this island by the French, who, however, restored it in 1783. In 1795 the French landed some troops, and again instigated the Caribs to an insurrection, which was not subdued for several months. It was almost desolated in 1812 by an eruption of the Souffrier mountain, which had continued quiet for nearly a century before. Kingston is the capital.

Vincet, St., one of the Cape Verde Islands, 12 m. long and three broad and uninhabited. On the N. W. side of it is a good bay, where ships may wood and water, and wild goats may be shot. Long. 25. 30. W., lat. 17. 30. N.

Virgin Gorda, or Spanish town, one of the Virgin Islands in the W. Indies. It has two good harbours, and is defended by a fort. Long. 64. 0. W., lat. 18. 18. N.

Virgin Islands, about 30 islands and keys in the W. Indies, between St. Juan de Puerto Rico, and the Leeward Caribbee Islands. They are possessed by the English and Danes. In the first division, belonging to the English, is Tortola, to which belong Jost Van Dike, Little Van Dike, Guana, Beef, and Thatch Islands. In the second division is Virgin Gorda, to which belong Anegada, Nickier Prickly Pear, the Muskitos, the Commanoes, &c. Of the Danish Islands, the principal are St. Thomas and St. John.

Virginia, one of the United States; bounded N. by Ohio, Pennsylvania and Maryland: E. by Maryland and the Atlantic; S. by S. Carolina and Tennessee and W. by Ohio and Kentucky. It lies between 36. 40. and 40. 43. N. lat. and 75. 25. and 83. 40. W. long. It is the largest state in the union being 370 m. in length, and 200 in breadth. It comprises 64,000 sq. m. The Apalachian chain from Pennsylvania, passes through the state, southwesterly into N. Carolina and Tennessee. The most easterly ridge is known by the name of the Blue Ridge. On the west, the Laurel Mountains and Chesnut Ridge extend from Pennsylvania, and terminate in this state. The Cumberland Mountains lie between Virginia and Kentucky. The Alleghany ridge is continued from Pennsylvania; there are other ridges as Greenbriar, North Mountain, Broad Mountain, Back Bone, Jackson River Mountain, Iron Mountain, and Great Flat Top. The loftiest summits are the Peaks of Otter, in the Alleghany ridge, which are 3,103 feet above the level of the sea. This state is watered by a great number of rivers, among which may be mentioned the Potomac, Rappa, hannoc, York, James, and Staunton, east of the Mountains; and the Ohio and Kanawha to the W. The outer half of Chesapeake Bay lies in this state, and by its depth and extent, and the numerous fine rivers which it receives, is of the highest use for navigation. Most of the large towns are situated at a considerable distance up the rivers. Norfolk has a good harbour, in the southern part of the bay, near the mouth of the James. The embouchure of this river forms a spacious haven, called Hampton Roads. These roads were formerly open, but strong fortifications have rendered their entrance impracticable to an enemy. The shores are low and flat. A peninsula about 60 m. long, and from 10 to 15 wide, lies on the eastern side of the Chesapeake, and is bordered toward the sea by a string of low, sandy islets. The waters of the Chesapeake enter the sea, between Cape Charles and Cape Henry, forming a strait 15 m. in width.

From the vast extent of this state, and the varieties of its surface, we should of course be led to expect a great diversity of climate. In the Atlantic country, east of the Mountains, the heats of summer are long and oppressive, the spring short and variable, and the winters extremely mild, the snow seldom lying more than a day after it has fallen. Droughts in summer and autumn are frequent. The people have sallow complexions, from the heats of summer, and bilious diseases in autumn. On the mountains, the air is cool and salubrious, and the inhabitants are tall and muscular, with robust forms and healthy countenances. Fires are here used during five months of the year. The heat of summer during the day is considerable, but the nights are always cool. On the western side of the mountains, the climate is colder by some degrees than in the same parallel of latitude on the coast. The valley of the Ohio is exceedingly hot in summer, while in winter, the river is frozen so as sometimes to be passable for two months together. The autumn is dry, temperate, and healthy, with the most beautiful weather. From the Atlantic coast to the head of tide water on the rivers, the country is low, flat and marshy, or sandy; this meagre soil is covered with pines and cedars; but the banks of the rivers are loamy and rich, and the vegetation in those parts, luxuriant. This territory is alluvial, and exhibits marine shells and bones everywhere beneath the surface. From the head of tide water to the Blue Ridge, the land begins to rise, and becomes stony and broken; the soil lies on a stratum of stiff, reddish clay, and is much superior to the Lowland country. In the valley between the Blue Ridge and the Alleghany, we come to a limestone country; here the soil lies upon a bed of that rock, and is very fertile, particularly in grain and clover. In some parts the soil is chalky. The western part of the state, or that part which lies between the mountains and the Ohio, has a broken surface, with occasional fertile tracts, but the soil is generally lean.

The most remarkable natural curiosities in this state are Weier's Cave, the Rock Bridge, or Natural Bridge over Cedar Creek, and the passage of the Potomac through the Blue Ridge at Harper's Ferry,—all of which see. In the mountainous and western parts, there is abundance of iron ore, with lead and coal. Gypsum of the best quality is also found in the same region. In the eastern part between the Potomac and James rivers, gold has lately been discovered near the surface, and considerable quantities have been obtained by washing the earth. Since the year 1827, the gold mines of Virginia have attracted attention. The belt of country in which they are found, extends through Spotsylvania, and some neighbouring counties. In 1830, about 24,000 dollars value of gold from Virginia, was coined at the mint of the United States. Almost every part of the state, west of the mountains, abounds in salt springs. Among the mountains, are also a great number of mineral springs. The Warren Springs, near Green Valley, in Bath county, have a temperature of 96. The Hot Springs, in the same neighbourhood, have a temperature of 112. These and several others are visited by invalids.

This state is divided into 103 counties, comprised within two districts, the Eastern and Western. The population is 1,211,272, of whom 469,724 are slaves. Richmond is the capital. The other large towns are Norfolk, Petersburg, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg, Williamsburg and York, all which are on the eastern side of the mountains. Wheeling, on the Ohio, is the largest of the western towns in the state. Virginia has been chiefly distinguished for the culture of tobacco, although wheat and maize receive a good share of attention; these three articles constitute the chief exports of the state. The cultivation of tobacco has considerably fallen off within a few years, and the land in many cases, has been neglected in consequence of the exhaustion of the soil. Many tracts in the eastern parts, formerly devoted to tillage, are now abandoned and overgrown with pines. Agriculture in general, may be pronounced in a backward state in Virginia. East of the mountains, the labour is almost wholly performed by the slaves, and this portion of the state appears to be declining in wealth. West of the mountains, slave labour is less relied upon, and the country is improving in its condition. The imports into this state for 1829, amounted to 395,352 dollars; the domestic produce exported, to 3,783,493 dollars; total exports, 3,787,431 dollars. The enrolled and licensed shipping in 1828, amounted to 67,302 tons. The manufactures consist chiefly of iron and salt. The salt works, on the Kanahwa, produce about 2,000,000 bushels of salt yearly. At Harper's Ferry, is a manufactory of muskets, employed principally for the United States.

The legislature consists of a Senate and House of Representatives. The senators are 32; they are elected by districts, and hold their office four years, one quarter of their number being renewed every year. The representatives are chosen yearly. These elections are made viva voce, and not as in other states, by ballot. The governor is elected for three years, by the two branches of the legislature, and is eligible but once in 6 years. There is a council of three, chosen like the Governor, the senior counsellor is Lt. Governor. The right of voting comes very near to universal suffrage. Clergymen are ineligible as legislators. No legislative provision can be made for religious worship.

The most numerous religious sect in Virginia, are the Baptists who have 337 churches; the Presbyterians have 104; the Episcopalians 45 ministers: the Methodists 77. There are also Lutherans, Catholics, and Jews in small numbers.

There are 4 colleges in this state; at Charlottsville, Williamsburg, Lexington and Prince Edward county. The state has a Literary Fund of 1,510,689 dollars

Virginia was the earliest settled of the British American colonies. An expedition was despatched by the London Company, under Captain Newport, who was accompanied by Gosnold and the celebrated Captain Smith. They entered the Chesapeake, and discovered James' river in April, 1607. A settlement was immediately formed at Jamestown, but the colonists soon began to suffer severely by famine and the hostility of the natives. Smith was taken prisoner, and when on the point of being put to death by the savages was rescued and released by the romantic generosity of Pocahontas, the King's daughter. The affairs of the colony after this, fell into so bad a state, that all the settlers embarked, and were under sail to leave the country, when several ships arriving with supplies, they were induced to remain. From this period, the settlement began to thrive, though much harassed by Indian wars. Charles I. conferred upon the inhabitants the right to elect representatives; in return for which favour the Virginians adhered to the royal interests during the civil war which preceded his overthrow. The parliament in 1652, sent a fleet which brought them to submission, and for 9 years, Cromwell appointed the Governor of the colony. After the restoration, Virginia was much disturbed by a civil war in her own territory, but the Governor continued to be appointed by the King till the beginning of the American Revolution. In 1776, a new constitution was formed; and in 1830, it was revised by a Convention.

Vighera, a province of the Sardinian states, adjacent to Austrian Italy, comprising an area of 100 square miles, with 110,000 inhabitants. The soil is fertile in corn and wine, and much silk is produced.

Voghera, a town of Italy, capital of the above province, and a bishop's see. The chief manufacture is that of silk. It is seated on the Staffora, 9 m. N. E. of Tortone.

Vogtbruck, a town of Austria, on the river Vogel, 28 m. N. E. of Salzburg and 38 S. W. of Lintz.

Void, a town of France, department of Meuse, 18 m. E. S. E. of Aar le Euc.

Voigtland, a circle of the kingdom of Saxony, adjoining that of Erzgebirge, comprising an area of 700 square miles, with 100,000 inhabitants. It is very hilly, and abounds in wood; but the valleys afford plenty of corn, and pastures that feed great numbers of excellent cattle. Plauen is the capital.

Voigtsberg, a town and citadel of Saxony, in Voigtland, 5 m. S. by E. of Plauen.

Voigtsberg, a town of the Austrian States in Stiria, seated on the Kainach 18 m. E. by S. of Gratz.

Vohelmark, or Volkenmark, a town of Austrian Illyria, in Carinthia, seated on the Drave, 17 m. E. by S. of Clagenfurt.

Volcano, one of the most considerable of the Lipari Islands in the Mediterranean, lying S. of the island of Lipari, from which it is separated by a deep channel, a mile and a half broad. It is 12 miles in circumference, and is a volcano, in the form of a broken cone, but now emits smoke only.

Volcanello a small volcanic island in the Mediterranean, between that of Lipari and Volum.

Volga, a river of Russia, which forms part of the boundary between Europe and Asia. It has its source in two small lakes, in the government of Pleskof, about 80 m. W. of Tver, begins to be navigable a few m. above that town, and is there augmented by the influx of the Tverza. It waters some of the finest provinces in the Russian empire, passes by Yaroslaf, Kosfoma, Nishnei, Novogorod, Kasan, Simbirsk, Saratof, Tzaritzin, and Astracan, and enters the Caspian Sea, by several mouths. This is supposed to be the largest river in Europe; and by means of it, the river Tverza, and a canal thence to the Neva, there is a navigable communication between the Caspian Sea and the Baltic.

Volhymia, a government of Russia, 920 m. long and 130 broad; bounded on the N. by Polesia, E. by Kiof, S. by Podolia, and W. by the kingdom of Poland. It consists chiefly of fertile plains, watered by a great number of rivers.

Vollenhoven, a town of the Netherlands, in Overijssel, with a castle; seated on the Zuyder Zee, 8 m. S. W. of Steenwich and 12 N. W. of Zwoll.

Volmar, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga, on the river Aa, 60 m. N. E. of Aiga.

Volney, p.t. Oswego Co. N. Y. 180 m. N. W. Albany. Pop. 3,629.

Volo, an ancient town of Greece, in Thessaly, with a citadel and a fort. It was taken, and almost ruined, in 1655, by the Venetians. It is seated on a gulf of the same name, where there is a good harbour, 30 m. S. E. of Larissa. Long. 22. 55. E., lat. 39. 21. N.

Volodimir, or Vladimir, a government of Russia, formerly a province of the government of Moscow. It contains an area of 19,500 sq. m. with about 1,000,000 of inhabitants. The soil is extremely fertile, and in the forests are innumerable swarms of bees.

Volodimir, the capital of the foregoing government, seated on the Kliasma, 110 m. E. by N. of Moscow.

Vologda, a government of Russia, divided into the two provinces of Vologda and Ustiug, and comprising an area of 149,000 sq. m. with about 660,000 inhabitants. It is a marshy country, full of forests, lakes, and rivers, and noted for its fine wool.

Vologda, the capital of the above province and an archbishop's see, has a magnificent cathedral, several churches, a castle, and a fortress. The principal trade is in hemp matting, leather and, talbaw. It is seated in a marsh, on the river Vologda, which flows into the Sukhona, 257 m. N. by E. of Moscow. Long. 39. 46. E., lat. 59. 20. N.

Volsk, a town of Russia, in the government of Saratof, situate on the Volga, 76 m. N. E. of Saratof.

Volta, a river of Guinea, which separates the Gold Coast from the Slave Coast, and enters the Atlantic Ocean.

Voltagio, a town of the Sardinian States, in the territory of Genoa, 15 m. N. by W. of Genoa.

Volterra, a walled town of Italy, in the grand duchy of Tuscany, containing several antiquities. It is the see of a bishop, and is seated on a mountain, 30 m. S. S. W. of Florence and 32 S. E. of Pisa.

Voltri, a town of the Sardinian States, in the territory of Genoa, near which the Austrians were defeated by the French in 1796. It is 6 m. W. of Genoa.

Volturnara, a town of Naples, in Capitanata, 20 m. W. of Lucera, and 25 N. E. of Naples.

Volturno, a river of Naples, which rises in the Appennines, passes by Isernia and Capua, and enters the gulf of Gaeta.

Voluntown, p.t. Windham Co. Conn. Pop. 1,304.

Volvic, a town of France department of Puy de Dome, near which are immense quarries, which furnish materials for the building of the adjacent towns, and for the statues in the churches. It is 6 m. N. of Clermont.

Voorheesville, p.v. Montgomery Co. N. Y.

Voornd, an island of the Netherlands, in S. Holland, between two mouths of the Meuse, 20 m. long and 5 broad. This island, with Goree and Overslackee, form the territory called Voornland which anciently belonged to Zealand. Briel is the capital.

Vorden, a town of Hanover, in the principality of Osnaburg, 20 m. N. N. E. of Osnaburg.

Vordon, a town of Poland, on the Vistula, where a toll is collected from ships going up and down the river. It is 15 m. S. S. W. of Culm.

Voringen, a town of Germany, in the principality of Hohenzollern, 10 m. S. E. of Hohenzollern.

Voronez, a government of Russia, bordering on the Ukraine, which it resembles in climate, soil, and productions. It comprises an area of 31,000 sq. m. with about 800,000 inhabitants.

Voronez, the capital of the above government and an archbishop's see, is seated on the river Voronez, near its junction with the Don, 230 m. S. S. E. of Moscow. Long. 39. 14. E., lat. 51. 36. N.

Vosges, a department of France, including the S. E. part of the former province of Lorraine, so called from a chain of mountains, formerly covered with wood, that separates this department from those of Upper Saone and Upper Rhine. It has an extent of 2,400 sq. m. with 340,000 inhabitants. Epinal is the capital.

Voughine, p.v. Chicot Co. Arkansas.

Vouille, a village of France, department of Vienne, where Clovis gained a battle in 507 against Alaric, king of the Visigoths, which extended the French empire from the Loire, to the Pyrenees, 10 m. W. of Poitiers.

Vourla, a town of Asia Minor, in Natolia, 30 m. W. by S. of Smyrna.

Vou-tchang, a city of China, capital of the province of Hou-quang, and the rendezvous, as it were, of all the commercial people in the empire. As every branch of trade is carried on here, its port, on the Kian-ku, is always crowded with vessels, the river being sometimes covered with them to the distance of two leagues. The beautiful crystal found in its mountains, the plentiful crops of fine tea, and the prodigious sale of the bamboo paper made here, contribute no less to make it famous than the continual influx of strangers. It is 655 m. S. of Peking. Long. 112. 25. E., lat. 30. 30. N.

Vouziers, a town of France, department of Ardennes, seated on the river Aisne, 32 m. E. N. E. of Rheims.

Vriezen-Veen, a town of the Netherlands, in Overijssel, 20 m. E. by S. of Zwolle.

Vukovar, a town of the Austrian states, in Slavonia, with a manufacture of silk, seated on the Danube, at the influx of the small river Yugo, which divides it into two parts. 21 m. S. E. of Eszek.

Vulturara, a town of Naples, in principato Ultra, 65 m. N. E. of Naples.

W

WAAG, a river of Hungary, which rises in the Carpathian mountains, flows by Leopoldstadt, and joins the Danube below Comorn.

Waal, a river of the Netherlands, being the S. branch from the Rhine below Emmerick. It flows W. through Gelderland, passes by Nimeguen, Tiel, Bommel, and Gorcum, and joins the Meuse at Briel.

Wabash, a river of the United States, in Indiana, which rises near some lakes to the W. of Lake Erie, and taking a S. S. W. course of 400 m. enters the Ohio 100 m. above the confluence of that river with the Mississippi. It is navigable for 340 m. and approaches within 9 m. of the navigable waters of Lake Erie.

Wabash, a county of Indiana. Elk Heart Plain is the capital. A county of Illinois. Pop. 2,109. Mount Carmel is the capital.

Wachenheim, a town of Bavaria, in the circle of the Rhine, 17 m. S. S. W. of Worms.

Wachtersbach, a town of Germany, in Watteravia, with a castle, in which the count of Isenburg-Wachtersbach resides. 20 m. E. N. E. of Hanau.

Wachusett, a mountain of Massachusetts in Princeton, Worcester Co. It is a detached eminence at a distance from any range of mountains and is 3,000 feet in height.

Waddington, p.t. St. Lawrence Co. N. Y. 250 m. N. W. Albany.

Wadesborough, p.v. Anson Co. N. C. 20 m. W. Fayetteville.

Willing River, p.t. Suffolk Co. N. Y.

Wadstena, a town of Sweden, in E. Gothland, with a castle built by Gustavus Vasa in 1544, and uninhabited by his son Magnus, who was insane. It is seated on the lake Wetter, 46 m. W. of Nordkoping. Long. 14. 53. E., lat. 58. 28. N.

Wadsworth, p.t. Madison Co. Ohio, 110 m. N. E. Columbus. Pop. 965.

Wageningen, a town of the Netherlands, in Gelderland, with a good trade in cattle and tobacco. It is seated on the Rhine, 12 m. W. of Arenheim.

Wagram, a town of Austria, 14 m. N. N. E. Vienna. Here Napoleon gained a splendid victory over the Austrians July, 6, 1809.

Wahren, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg, seated near the lake Calpin, 12 m. of Malchin and 27 W. N. W. of New Strelitz.

Waiblingen, a town of Germany, in the kingdom of Wurtemberg, on the river Rems, 7 m. E. N. E. of Stuttgart.

Waidhoben, Bairisch, a town of Austria, on the river Ips, 23 m. S. W. of St. Polten.

Waidhoben, Bohmisch, a town and castle of Austria, on the river Teya, 10 m. N. N. W. of Horn.

Waldborough, p.v. Callaway Co. Ken, 263 m. S. W. Frankfort.

Waigatz, or Vaigatch, an island and strait between Nova Zembla and Russia. Long. 93. 30. E., lat. 69. 30. N.

Wainfleet, a town in Lincolnshire, Eng. 131 m. N. by E. of London.

Waitsfield, p.t. Washington Co. Vt. Pop. 958.

Waitzen, a town of Hungary, and a bishop's see. A large annual fair is kept here. It has frequently been taken by the Turks, and was burnt by them in 1685. It is situate on the Danube, 98 m. E. S. E. of Presburg. Long. 19. 15. E., lat. 47. 45. N.

Wakitomika, p.t. Coshocton Co. Ohio. 60 m N. E. Columbus.

Wake, a county of N. Carolina. Pop. 20,417. Raleigh is the capital.

Wakefield, a town in W. Yorkshire, Eng. Here are considerable manufactures of woolen cloth and stuffs, and a hall for the sale of the goods; also a free grammar-school, which has several exhibitions to both the universities. It is situate in the heart of a rich and fertile district, 29 m. S. W. of York and 178 N. N. W. of London.

Wakefield, a township of Stafford Co. N. H. 50 m. N. W. Portsmouth. Pop. 1,470.

Wake Forest, p.v. Wake Co. N. C.

Wakulla, a small river of W. Florida, running into the Gulf of Mexico. The Wakulla Fountain which is the source of this river, is a large basin of water like a small lake, and so deep that it has been sounded with a line of 250 fathoms without reaching the bottom. The water is of a light blue color and almost as transparent as air. It has almost the coldness of ice water, even in the hottest of summer, and bubbles up from the bottom like a cauldron of boiling water. This spring is 12 m. from Tallahassee and 20 from the Gulf of Mexico.

Walachia, province of Turkey, 175 m. long and 125 broad; bounded on the N. by Transylvania. E. by Moldavia, S. by the river Danube which separates it from Bulgaria, and W. by Hungary. It is watered by numerous rivers, abounds in good horses and cattle, has mines of several kinds, and produces wine, oil, and all manner of European fruit. One of the most remarkable animals of this country is the Strepsiceros or Walachian sheep. Its area is estimated at 28,000 square miles; its population at 800,000. It was ceded to the Turks by the treaty of Belgrade in 1739. It is governed by a hospodar or prince who is a vassal of the empire, and holds his sovereignty by a firman of the grand signior. Bucharest is the capital.

Walcheren, an island of the Netherlands, the principal one of Zealand, and the most westerly, at the mouth of the Scheldt. It is 9 m long and 8 broad, and being low is subject to inundations, but has good arable and pasture lands. This island was taken by the British in July 1809, with a view to the destruction of the ships and arsenal at Antwerp; but a number of untoward circumstances first rendered the principal object of the expedition abortive, and then the pestilential nature of the island, at that particular season of the year, obliged the British to relinquish every advantage they had gained. The capital of this island, and of the whole province, is Middleburg.

Walcour, a town of the Netherlands, in the province of Namur, which was entirely destroyed by fire in 1615; seated on the Heura, 27 m. S. W. of Namur.

Waldburg, a castle of Germany, which gives name to a county, between the Danube and the Rer. It stands on a mountain, 7 m. N. of Wangen and 35 S. by W. of Ulm.

Waldeck, a principality of Germany, 30 miles long and 24 broad; bounded on the E. and S. by Hesse-Cassel, W. by the Prussian province of Westphalia, and N. by the principality of Paderborn. It consists of two counties, Pymont and Waldeck, the latter containing 424 sq. m. with 40,000 inhabitants, the former 31 sq. m. with 10,000 inhabitants. The country is mountainous and covered with woods; and has mines of iron, copper, quicksilver, and alum.

Waldeck, a town of Germany, in the county of the same name, with a castle, seated on the Steinbach, 6 m. S. E. of Corbach.

Walden, or Saffron Walden, a town in Essex, Eng. 42 m. N. by E. of London.

Walden, p.t. Caledonia Co. Vt. 74 m. N. E. Montpelier. Pop. 827. p.v. Orange Co. N. Y. 85 m. S. Albany. Here are large manufactures of broad-cloth, flannel and cotton.

Waldenburg, a town and castle of Saxony, situated on the Muldau. The old town, on the opposite side of the river, is famous for its brown and white earthen ware. It is 12 m. N. N. E. of Zwickau.

Waldenburg, a town of Wurtemberg, in the principality of Hohenlohe, with an ancient castle on a mountain, 6 m. E. by N. of Ohringen.

Waldenheim, a town of Saxony, with an ancient monastery, now converted into an orphan house and house of correction, in which various manufactures are carried on. It is situated on the Zschopa, 30 m. S. E. of Leipzig.

Waldmunchen, a town of Bavaria, on the river Schwarzra, 32 m. E. S. E. of Amberg.

Waldo, a county of Maine. Pop. 29,790. Belfast is the capital. A town in Waldo Co. Me. Pop. 534.

Waldoborough, p.t. Lincoln Co. Me. 22 m. E. Wiscasset. It has a good harbour and is a port of entry with a considerable coasting trade in lumber and lime. Pop. 3,113.

Waldassen, a town of Bavaria, near which is a rich Cistercian abbey, the abbot of which was formerly a prince of the empire. It is 44 m. N. E. of Amberg.

Waldshut, a strong town of Baden, in the circle of Wiesen, one of the four Forest Towns; seated on the Rhine, at the entrance of the Black Forest, 19 m. W. S. W. of Schaffhausen.

Waldstadt, a name given to the Swiss cantons of Lucern, Uri, Schwitz, and Underwalden. It signifies Forest Towns; these cantons containing a great number of forests. For the Waldstadt of Baden, see Forest Towns.

Waldstatter See, or Lake of the Four Cantons, one of the finest lakes in Switzerland. It consists of three principal branches, called the Lakes of Lucern, Schwitz, and Uri. The upper branch, or lake of Lucern, is in the form of a cross, the sides of which stretch from Kussnacht to Dullenwal, a village near Stantz. It is bounded towards the town by cultivated hills, sloping gradually to the water, contrasted on the opposite side by an enormous mass of barren and craggy rocks; Mount Pilate, one of the highest mountains in Switzerland, rising boldly from the lake. Towards the E. of this branch, the lake contracts into a narrow creek, scarcely a mile across. Soon after it again widens, and forms the second branch, or lake of Schwitz; on the W. side the canton of Underwalden, on the E. that of Schwitz. Here the mountains are more lofty, and infinitely varied; some covered to the very summits with verdure, others perpendicular and craggy. Near Brunnen commences the third branch, or lake of Uri, which takes a S. E. direction. It is deep and narrow, about 9 miles long, and bordered on both sides by rocks uncommonly wild and romantic, with forests of beech and pine growing down their sides to the very edge of the water. The river Reuss flows through this lake.

Wales, a principality in the W. of England, 150 m. long and 80 broad; bounded on the N. by the Irish Sea, W. by that sea, and St. George's Channel, S. by the Bristol Channel, and E. by the counties of Chester, Salop, Hereford, and Monmouth. It has an area of 5,200,000 acres, contained in 1821, 717,438 inhabitants, and sends 24 members to parliament. It is divided into N. and S. Wales, each containing six counties, namely, Anglesea, Carnarvon, Denbigh, Flint, Merioneth, and Montgomery, in N. Wales; Brecknock, Cardigan, Carmarthen, Glamorgan, Pembroke, and Radnor, in S. Wales. It is the country to which the ancient Britons fled, when Great Britain was invaded by the Saxons. They are now called Welsh, and continue to preserve their own language. They were long governed by independent kings, till in the reign of Edward I. their last prince, Llewelin, being vanquished and slain in the year 1283, the country was united to England. The natives submitted to the English dominion with extreme reluctance; and Edward, as a conciliatory means, promised to give them for their prince a Welshman by birth, and one who could speak no other language. This notice being received with joy, he invests in the principality his second son, Edward, then an infant, who had been born at Carnarvon. The death of his eldest son, Alphonso, happening soon after, young Edward became heir also of the English monarchy, and united both nations under one government; but some ages elapsed before the animosity which had long subsisted between them was totally extinguished. From the time of Edward II. the eldest son of the king of England has always been created prince of Wales. The general aspect of the country is bold, romantic, and mountainous, consisting of almost continued ranges of lofty mountains and impending craggs, intersected by numerous deep ravines, with extensive valleys, and affording endless views of wild mountain scenery. Agriculture is in a backward state, but the soil is by no means barren, producing all the necessaries of life; the cattle and sheep are numerous, but small, and it is particularly famous for goats. It is watered by many rivers, the principal of which and other particulars, are noted in the different counties.

Wales, New South, a name given to the E. coast of New Holland. It was first explored by captain Cook, in 1770; and a design was formed, in consequence of his recommendation, to settle a colony of convicts at Botany Bay. Captain Philip, being appointed governor of the intended settlement, sailed from Portsmouth, in May, 1787, with a detachment of marines, and 778 convicts, of whom 220 were women. He arrived at Botany Bay in January, 1788; but, subsequently, finding this bay very ineligible for a colony, he fixed upon Port Jackson, about 13 m. further to the N., and here a settlement was begun, to which he gave the name of Sydney cove. With respect to the country, a vast chain of lofty mountains, about 60 miles inland, runs nearly in a N. and S. direction further than the eye can reach. The general face of it is diversified with gentle risings and small winding valleys, covered, for the most part, with large spreading trees, which afford a succession of leaves in all seasons; and a variety of flowering shrubs, almost all new to a European, but of little fragrance, abound in those places which are free from trees. The climate appears not to be disagreeable; the heat is never excessive in summer, nor the cold intolerable in winter: storms of thunder and lightning are frequent. During the summer months, December, January, and February, the mean heat is about 80 degrees at noon, but it is greatly mitigated by a regular sea breeze. In the inland districts, to the E. of the mountains, the climate is about 5 degrees colder. The soil possesses every variety, from the sandy heath and the cold hungry clay to the fertile loam and the deep vegetable mould. In the interior a rich loam, resting on a substratum of fat clay, several feet in depth, is found even on the tops of some of the highest hills, which in general are not less fertile than the valleys. The alluvial lands on the banks of the Nepean and Hawkesbury are of the greatest fertility, being a rich vegetable mould many feet in depth, formed by depositions from these rivers during their inundations. Wheat and maize are extensively cultivated by the colony, and barley, oats, rye, &c., are also raised. Every species of culinary vegetable known in Britain is produced in New South Wales, and many of them attain a superior degree of perfection, though a few also degenerate. The fruits are excellent and of great variety: oranges, peaches, apricots, nectarines, grapes, pears, plums, pomegranates, raspberries, strawberries, melons, &c., attain the highest degree of maturity in the open air; while the pine apple may be produced by the aid of the common forcing glass. The price of provisions is however liable to great extremes, in consequence of the inundations of the Nepean and Hawkesbury, which sometimes destroy, in a moment, the brightest hopes of the farmers. The native quadrupeds are principally of the opossum kind, of which the most remarkable is the kangaroo. The native dogs are extremely fierce, and cannot be brought to the same degree of familiarity as those with which we are acquainted. There are also weasels and ant-eaters, with that singular animal the duck-billed platypus, in which the jaws of a quadruped are elongated into the complete bill of a bird. Horses and cattle have been introduced, and their increase throughout the colony has been very rapid. There are many beautiful birds of various kinds; among which the principal is a black swan, its wings edged with white, its bill tinged with red; and the ostrich or cassowary, which frequently reaches the height of seven feet or more. Several kinds of serpents, large spiders, and scolopendras, have also been met with; and three or four species of ants, particularly green ants, which build their nests upon trees in a very singular manner. There are likewise many curious fishes; though the finny tribe seem not to be so plentiful here as they generally are in higher latitudes. Some sharks have been seen in Port Jackson; and in the rivers and salt creeks there are alligators.

The Aborigines of New S. Wales are represented as, perhaps, the most miserable and savage race of men existing. They go entirely naked; and, though pleased at first with some ornaments that were given them, they soon threw them away as useless. It does not appear, however, that they are insensible of the benefits of clothing, or of some of the conveniences of which their new neighbours are possessed. Some of them, whom the colonists partly clothed, seemed to be pleased with the comfortable warmth they derived from it; and they all expressed a desire for iron tools. The color of the natives is rather a deep chocolate than a full black; but the filth with which their skin is covered prevents its true color from appearing. Their hair is generally clotted with a red gum, and they paint themselves with various colors: they will also sometimes ornament themselves with beads and shells, but make no use of the beautiful feathers of their birds. Most of the men want one of the fore teeth in the upper jaw, which appears to be a badge of honour among them, and it is common for the women to cut off two joints of the little finger. Of the cultivation of the ground they have no notion, nor can they be prevailed upon to eat our bread or dressed meat. Hence they depend entirely for subsistence on the fruits and roots they can gather, and the animals and fish they catch. They frequently set fire to the grass, in order to drive out the opossums, and other animals, from their retreats, and they have been observed to set decoys for quails. As all these resources must be precarious, it is no wonder that they are frequently distressed for provisions. Thus, in the summer, they would eat neither the shark nor the stingray, but, in winter, any thing was acceptable. They sometimes bake their provisions, by the help of hot stones, like the inhabitants of the islands in the Southern Ocean, but more frequently eat them raw. Among the fruits used by them is a kind of wild fig; and they eat also the kernels of a fruit resembling the pine-apple. The principal part of their subsistence, however, is fish. They sometimes strike the fish from the canoes with spears, sometimes catch them with hooks, and also make use of nets, which are generally made of the fibres of the flax plant, with very little preparation, and are strong and heavy: the lines of which they are composed being twisted like whipcord. Some of them, however, appear to be made of the fur of an animal, and others of cotton. Their hooks are made of the inside of a shell very much resembling the mother-of-pearl. Their canoes are nothing more than large pieces of bark tied up at both ends with vines; and, considering the slight texture of these vessels, the dexterity with which they are managed, and the boldness with which they venture out to sea in them, are wonderful. Their huts consist of pieces of bark laid together in the form of an oven, open at one end, very low, but long enough for a man to lie at full length; but they seem to depend more for shelter on the caverns with which the rocks abound. They possess a great power of imitation: they can imitate the songs and language of the Europeans almost instantaneously, much better than the latter can imitate theirs by long practice; and this talent is discernible in their sculptures, every where to be met with on the rocks: these represent men and other animals, and, though rude, are very surprising for people who have not the knowledge of constructing a comfortable habitation, or of making clothes. In person, they are active, vigorous, and stout, though generally lean. The women have sometimes been kept back with the most jealous sensibility, sometimes offered with the greatest familiarity. They have soft and pleasing voices; and seem not to be destitute of modesty. The men display great personal bravery on the appearance of any danger; but, with all their courage, they are much afraid of a musket. They certainly burn their dead; which perhaps, has given rise to the story of their being, cannibals. They seem very little given to thieving, in comparison with the inhabitants of most of the islands in the Southern Ocean; and they are very honest among themselves, leaving their spears and other implements on the beach, in perfect security of their remaining untouched. They are very expert at throwing their javelins, and will hit a mark at a considerable distance. Their number seems to be small, in comparison to the extent of the country.

The settlements of the British in New S. Wales at first extended only along Port Jackson and the Hawkesbury River; but they have since penetrated into the interior of the country. For a long period the Blue Mountains formed an impassable boundary to the E., but a carriage road has now been constructed across these mountains, to the distance of upwards of 100 m.; and the population is spreading in the valleys beyond them. In 1817 and 1818 two expeditions were fitted out to explore the course of the Lachlan and the Macquarrie to their termination, which was found to be in extensive swamps. The principal settlements in this quarter, besides the town of Sydney, which is the capital of the colony, are Paramatta, Windsor, Bathurst, and Liverpool. There is also a small settlement in the district of Coal River, about 60 m. northward of Port Jackson, where the town of Newcastle is situated. This is the place of transportation for criminals from Botany Bay, and contains about 500 of these incorrigible offenders, besides free settlers and troops. The population of the whole colony is supposed, at present, to amount to nearly 50,000.

Warsaw, the metropolis of the present kingdom of Poland, and formerly of the whole county of that name. It is built partly in a plain, and partly on a gentle rise from the Vistula; extending with the suburbs of Kraha and Praga, over a vast extent of ground, and containing above 100,000 inhabitants. The streets are spacious, but ill paved; the churches and public buildings large and magnificent; the palaces of the nobility numerous and splendid; but the greatest part of the houses, particularly in the suburbs, are mean and ill-constructed wooden hovels. The manufactures comprise woolen stuffs, carpeting, gold and silver wire, soap, tobacco, &c. Here are several wholesale mercantile houses, employed in the import of articles for the supply of the interior, and the export of Polish produce. Two great annual fairs have, since 1817, been established here, on the plan of those of Frankfort, Leipzig, &c. They are held in May and November, each continuing three weeks. In the beginning of 1784, the empress of Russia put a garrison into this city, in order to compel the Poles to acquiesce in the usurpation she had in view; but this garrison was soon expelled by the citizens. The king of Prussia besieged Warsaw in July, but was compelled to raise the siege in September. It was undertaken by the Russians, who, in November, took by storm the suburb of Praga, massacred the inhabitants, and nearly reduced it to ashes. The immediate consequence was the surrender of the city to the Russians, who in 1796, delivered it up to the king of Prussia. Towards the end of 1806, the French occupied this place; and, by the treaty of Tilsit, the city, with this part of Poland, was given to Saxony, to be held under the title of the duchy of Warsaw. The Russians, however overran this duchy in 1813, and took possession of the city of Warsaw. The Polish revolution of 1830 broke out at this place, and the Russian Grand Duke Constantine was driven from the city: but in 1831 Warsaw was again captured by the Russians which put an end to the insurrection. The city suffered severely by the pestilential cholera the same year, which was introduced from Asia by the Russian armies. Warsaw is 170 m. S. of Konigsberg and 180 E. N. E. of Breslau. Long. 21. 0. E., lat. 52. 14 N.

Warta, a river of Poland, which rises in the palatinate of Cracow, flows by Siradia and Poshnan, passes by Driessen and Landsberg in Brandenburg, and enters the Oder at Custrin.

Wartenberg, a town of Prussian Silesia, capital of a lordship of the same name, with a castle. In 1742 it was entirely reduced to ashes, except the old castle, which is now used as a brewhouse. It is 28 m. N. E. of Breslau.

Wartenberg, a town of Prussian Silesia, in the principality of Glogau, 20 m. N. W. of Glogau.

Warwick, a borough and the capital of Warwickshire, Eng. It was fortified with a wall, now in ruins; but has still a noble castle of the ancient earls of Warwick, inhabited by the present possessor of that title. The town was nearly destroyed by fire in 1694, but was subsequently rebuilt with greater regularity. The streets are spacious, and meet nearly in the centre of the town, 92 m. N. W. of London.

Warwick, p.t. Franklin Co. Mass. 80 m. N. W. Boston, with manufactures of glass. Pop. 1,150; p.t. Orange Co. N. Y. 70 m. N. W. New York. Pop. 5,013. Towns in Bucks and Lancaster Cos. Pa.; Cecil Co. Maryland, Tuscarawas Co. Ohio.

Warwick, a county of the E. District of Virginia. Pop. 1,570.

Warwickshire, a county of England, bounded on the N. by Derbyshire. The climate of this county is healthy, and the air mild and pleasant; its salubrity is increased by the great consumption of wood for the iron works, many parts being entirely cleared and converted to tillage and pasture. The N. part, called the Woodlands is divided from the S., called the Feldon by the river Avon; and the soil of both is in general rich and fertile. It produces corn, flax, wool, wool, cheese, coal, iron, and limestone; and its breeds of cattle and sheep are of a superior kind. The manufactures are various and important, comprising ribands, gauzes, and other silk fabrics, last ings and thread, and all descriptions of hardware. The capital is Warwick, but Birmingham is the largest town.

 Potosi is the capital; a county of Arkansas. Pop.
 2,181. Fayetteville is the capital; a county of the Dis. of Columbia. Pop. 30,250. Washington city is the capital.

Washington City, the seat of government of the United States, stands in the centre of the District of Columbia upon the north bank of the Potomac, 295 m. from the sea by the course of the river and bay. It occupies a spot between the river and one of its tributaries, called the East Branch. The city is about a mile and a half above the junction of the two streams, although the original plan embraces the whole extent below. The plan of the city combines regularity with variety, and is adapted to the variations of the surface, so that the spaces allotted to public buildings, occupy commanding positions, and the monotonous sameness of a rectangular design is avoided, while all its advantages are secured.
 The minor streets run at right angles, but the larger avenues diverge from several centres, intersecting the streets with various degrees of ob-liquity, and opening spaces for extensive squares.
 The smaller streets run N. and S. or E. and W. and are from 90 to 110 feet wide. The grand avenues are from 130 to 160 feet in width, and are planted with trees. Several of the largest unite at the hill on which the capitol is situated.
 These bear the names of the several states or the Union. The general appearance of Washington is that of the mere outline, or beginning of a great city; its tardy growth has disappointed the expectations of the original founders. The buildings of the city occupy three distinct groups like so many separate villages, divided from each other by vacant spaces. The chief edifices are situated in the neighbourhood of the Capitol, or at the Navy Yard, or in the Pennsylvania Avenue. The Capitol is a large and magnificent with a colonnade of pillars of breccia, beautifully polished; it is one of the most elegant halls in the world. The Senate Chamber is of the same shape, and 74 feet long. The Rotunda is 96 feet in diameter, and 96 feet high, to the top of the dome within. It is all of marble, and the floor is beautifully paved; the whole has a most grand and imposing effect. Several pieces of sculpture are placed in niches in the walls, representing events in American history. The sound of a single voice uttered in this apartment, is echoed from the dome above, with a rumbling like distant thunder. The National Library is contained in the Capitol, and embraces also a series of national paintings by Trumbull. The President's House is an elegant structure of freestone, 170 feet in front, and two stories in height, ornamented with an Ionic portico. It stands about a mile west of the capitol. It is surrounded with the offices of the heads of departments. At the patent office, is kept a collection of all the models of patent inventions in the country. The Navy Yard, on the East Branch, exhibits a monument to the American officers who fell in the war with Tripoli. There are few other buildings worthy of notice for their architecture. The office of the Department of State, is a large edifice of brick, with a portico in front, and there are two or three others of the same size and construction. There are two public free schools in the city. Two bridges cross the eastern branch, and one, the main stream of the Potomac, at Washington.

Columbian College, at this place was founded in 1821. It has 4 instructors and 50 students, the library has 4,000 volumes. The national library contains 16,000 volumes.

During the session of Congress the city is much crowded by visitors and public officers; but apart from its political consequence, the place has few attractions: the country in the neighbourhood has a poor soil and is thinly inhabited. A Navy Yard of the United States has been established here, and the river is navigable to the sea for ships of the line. The commerce of the place is inconsiderable. Washington is in lat. 38. 58. N.

Westmeath. See Mealh.

Westminster, a city in Middlesex, the residence of the monarch, the seat of the parliament and of the high courts of justice, and constituting, with London and Southwark, the metropolis of the British empire. On the dissolution of its abbey, in 1541, Henry VIII. erected it into a bishopric, appointing the whole of Middlesex (Fulham excepted) for the diocese. It had, however, only one prelate; for Edward VI. soon after dissolved it, and the Abbey is now only a collegiate church. Westminster, through courtesy, still bears the title of a city, and sends two members to parliament, who are chosen by its house-holders, there being no freemen nor incorporated companies. Besides the churches of the establishment, Westminster contains places of worship for dissenters of almost every denomination, and a Jew's synagogue. Among the modern improvements in this part of the metropolis is the erection of a wide street, or rather succession of streets, from Carlton palace on the S. to Portland Place on the N. The buildings are most magnificent, and it is probably without exception the finest street in Europe. In the city are two parish churches, St. Margaret and St. John; and seven in the liberties, namely, St. Clement, St. Mary, St. Paul, St. Martin, St. Ann, St. James, and St. George. The precinct of St. Martin-le-

Grand, though within the city of London, is under the jurisdiction of Westminster. See London.

Westmoreland, a county of the W. Dis. of Pennsylvania. Pop. 38,400. Greensburg is the capital. A county of the E. Dis. of Virginia. Pop. 1,411.

Westmoreland, an inland county of England bounded on the N. and N. W. by Cumberland, E. and S. E. by Yorkshire, and S. and S. W. by Lancashire. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 51,359. It is a region of lofty mountains, naked hills, dreary forests, and barren moors; but is watered by numerous rivers and several lakes. The soil of course is various; that on the mountains being very barren, while that in the valleys is fertile, producing good corn and grass, especially in the meadows near the rivers. In the hilly parts on the W. borders are some mines of copper, but the ore lies very deep. This county yields abundance of limestone and the finest blue slate; and many excellent hams are cured here. Its manufactures are a coarse woolen cloth, worsted stockings, flannels, tanned leather, and gunpowder. The principal rivers are the Eden, Lune, and Ken; and the chief lake is Winandermere, the largest in England. Appleby is the county town.

Westoven, a township of Chester Co. Pa.

Westphalia, one of the former circles of Germany, bounded on the E. by Lower Saxony, S. by Hesse, Wetteravia, and Treves, W. by the Netherlands, and N. by the German Ocean. The climate is cold, and there are a great many marshes, but the soil produces pastures and some corn. The horses are large, and the hogs in high esteem, especially the hams, known by the name of Westphalia hams. The principal rivers are the Weser, Ems, Lippe, and Roer. This circle contained the bishoprics of Munster, Liege, Paderborn, and Osunburg; the principalities of Emden or East Friesland, Meures, Minden and Verden; the duchies of Westphalia, Berg, Juliers, Cleve, Oldenburg, and part of the territory of the princes of Nassau; the counties of Mark, Ravensburg, Steinfurt, Tecklenburg, Lingen, Bethmeim, Diepholt, Hoya, Schouenburg, Spigelburg, Lippe, Ritberg, and other smaller ones; and several lordships and abbeys. In 1800 all the parts of this circle lying on the left bank of the Rhine, being full one-third of the whole territory, became united to France; and in 1808 the French emperor erected the remainder into a kingdom, in favour of his brother Jerome, and added to it the electorates of Hesse-Cassel and Hanover. Cassel was the capital. After the celebrated battle of Leipzig, in 1813, this new kingdom was overrun by the allies, and the government overthrown. The whole territory now belongs to Prussia, Hanover, and Oldenburg.

Westphalia, a province of the Prussian states, bounded W. by the Netherlands, and E. by Hanover and Hesse-Cassel. It is divided into the districts of Arensburg, Minden, and Munster, and contains an area of 8,300 sq. m. with about 1,000,000 of inhabitants. The soil in general is not fertile, but large quantities of flax are raised, and the rearing of cattle is carried to great extent. There are mines of lead, iron, and coal in the mountainous districts, and extensive salt works in different parts of the province.

Westphalia, a duchy of Germany, in the Prussian province of Westphalia, and government of Arensburg 40 m. long and 25 broad; bounded on the N. by the principalities of Munster and Osnaburg and the county of Lippe, W. by that of Mark, S. by the territories of Nassau, and E. by the counties of Witgenstein, Hartzfeld, Waldeck, and Hesse. It is a mountainous country, full of wood, but moderately fertile. It formerly belonged to the elector of Cologne, but was ceded to the prince of Hesse-Darmstadt in 1802, and made over to Prussia in 1814.

West Point, p.t. Orange Co. N. Y. on the W. bank of the Hudson, 58 m. above New York. The United States Military Academy at this place was established by Congress in 1802, for the instruction of young men destined for the army. The number of cadets is limited to 250, and in choosing among the applicants, the sons of revolutionary officers are allowed the first claim, and the children of the deceased officers of the last war, the second. The age of the pupils on admission must be between 14 and 22. The professors and instructors are 30 in number; each of the cadets costs the government 336 dollars annually. They are required to encamp 6 or 8 weeks during the year. The course of study is completed in four years, and includes French, drawing, natural and experimental philosophy, chemistry, mineralogy, geography, history, ethics, national law, mathematics and the whole science of strategy, tactics, artillery and engineering. The annual expense of the institution is 115,000 dollars.

There are 5 large stone buildings, and 6 of brick. The site they occupy is very beautiful and commanding, being a level 188 feet above the river. Close to the shore stands a white marble monument, bearing the name of Kosciusko. In another part is an obelisk to the memory of Col. Wood, one of the pupils who fell at Fort Erie.

Wetter, a lake of Sweden, in Gothland, S. E. of the lake Wenner. It is 100 m. in length, and in some places 20 in breadth. Above 40 small streams enter this lake, and its only outlet is the river Motala, which flows E. by Nordkoping into the Baltic.

Wetteravia, or Wateraw, a name originally applied to a district of Germany, lying on the banks of the river Wetter, but now so extended as to denote all the country between the Lahn, the Rhine, and the Maine.

Wettin, a town of Prussian Saxony, in the duchy of Magdeburg, with a castle on a mountain; seated on the Saal, over which is a ferry, 9 m. N. N. W. of Halle.

Wettingen, a town of Switzerland, in the county of Baden, celebrated for its wooden bridge, 240 feet long, of a single arch over the river Limmat. It is 1 m. S. of Baden.

Wetzlar, a town of Germany, in Wetteravia. capital of a county of the same name. It is surrounded by ditches and walls flanked with towers, and is seated at the confluence of the Lahn, Disle and Dillen, 30 m. N. of Frankfort. Long. 8. 37 E., lat. 50. 33. N.

Wetvelsburg, a town and citadel of Westphalia. in the principality of Paderborn, 9 m. S. of Paderborn.

Wexford, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, 47 m. long and 30 broad; bounded on the N. by Wicklow, E. by St. George's Channel, S. by the Atlantic Ocean, W. by Waterford and Kilkenny, and N. W. by Catherlough. It contains 142 parishes, has two boroughs, and sends four members to parliament. The surface is mountainous, but the soil in general is fertile in corn and grass. The principal rivers are the Barrow and Slaney.

Wexford, a borough of Ireland, and capital of the foregoing county. It has a spacious harbour at the mouth of the Slaney, on a bay of St. George's Channel, but the water is not deep enough for large vessels. Much woolen cloth is manufactured here and in the neighbourhood. The inhabitants are estimated at 9,000. It is 33 m. E. N. E. of Waterford and 60 S. of Dublin. Long. 6. 30. W., lat. 52. 22. N.

Wexio, a town of Sweden, in Smaland, seated on the lake Helga, which contains a group of woody islands. It is a bishop's see, though small, and is 50 m. W. of Calmar.

Weybridge, a village in Surrey, Eng. seated on the Wey, near its entrance into the Thames, 2 m. E. of Chertsey. Here is Woburn Farm, the plantations of which were the first specimen in England of the ornamented farm.

Weybridge, a township of Addison Co. Vt. Pop. 850.

Weyhill, a village in Hampshire, Eng. famous for an annual fair for all kinds of cattle, leather, hops, cheese, and pedlary. It is one of the largest fairs in England, lasting 10 days. 3 m. W. of Andover.

Weymes, a town of Scotland, in Fifeshire, with a harbour, whence much coal and salt are exported. It stands on the Frith of Forth, 4 m. N. E. of Kilkaldy and 12 S. by W. of Cnpar.

The great Cumberland road strikes the Ohio at this place and makes it a great thoroughfare for emigrants from the Atlantic states. The town is well built and has a very flourishing trade and considerable manufactures. Pop. 5,221.

Wheeling, townships of Belmont and Guernsey Cos. Ohio.

Whelock, p.t. Caledonia Co. Vt. Pop. 834.

Wherside, the highest mountain in England, situate on the N. W. part of Yorkshire, amid other mountains, and about 6 miles to the N. of that called Ingleborough. Its summit is 4,050 feet above the level of the sea. Near the top are four or five tarns or small lakes. Its base contains several spacious caverns, of which the principal are Yordas, Gatekirk, and Greenside caves.

Whidah, a country of Guinea, on the Slave Coast, extending about 10 miles along the Atlantic, and 12 miles inland. Europeans who have been in this country extol it as the most beautiful in the world, and assert that spring and autumn reign perpetually in alternate succession. The country is so populous that one single village contains as many inhabitants as some entire kingdoms on the coast of Guinea. The people, in their manners, have been compared to the Chinese; the same persevering industry, ceremonious civility, jealous affection for their women, thievish inclinations in trade, prevail in both countries. Bows, arrows, assagays, and clubs, are the principal weapons of the Whidanese. They have no distinction of hours, days, weeks, or stated periods; and yet, without pen, ink, or the assistance of artificial arithmetic, they calculate any thing with great accuracy. They are said to have a faint idea of a Supreme Being, to whom they attribute omnipotence, and consider him as the Creator of the universe. He is, they say, too highly exalted to have any concern about his creatures; and the government of the world he leaves to the fetiches, to whom, therefore, they apply as the mediators between God and them. These fetiches are divided into three classes: snakes, tall trees, and the sea; and sometimes they add a fourth, namely, the chief river of the kingdom, the Euphrates. The deified snakes are about a yard long, amazingly tame and familiar; and no insult or injury can be offered to them by a native, under pain of death. Here are oxen, cows, goats, sheep, hogs, turkeys, ducks, and hens; also elephants, buffaloes, tigers, several kinds of deer, and a sort of hares. The fruits are citrons, lemons, oranges, bananas, tamarinds, &c., and there are vast numbers of palm-trees from which much wine is made. The trade consists chiefly of elephants' teeth, wax and honey, and the principal manufactures are cloths, umbrellas, baskets, pitchers for pito or beer, plates and dishes of wood, gourds finely ornamented, white and blue paper, &c. In 1727 the king of Dahomey reduced this country to the state of a dependent province. Xavier, or Sabi, is the capital.

Whitby, a sea-port in N. Yorkshire, Eng. It is seated on the German Ocean, at the mouth of the Esk, 48 m. N. N. E. of York and 243 N. of London.

White Mountains, a range of mountains in the northern part of New Hampshire, nearly in the centre of the county of Coos. They are the highest in the United States, east of the Rocky Mountain chain, and are celebrated for their grand and beautiful scenery. These mountains extend about 20 m. from S. W. to N. E. being the more elevated parts of a range extending many miles in that direction. Their base is 8 or 10 m. broad; and situated about 25 m. S. E. from Lancaster, 70 N. of Concord, 82 N. by W. from Portsmouth; and in lat. 44. 15, long. 71. 20. W. Although distant more than 60. m. from the nearest part of the coast, their snow-white summits are distinctly visible many leagues at sea, and along the coast of Maine. Their great elevation has always rendered them interesting, both to our ancestors, and to the aboriginal inhabitants of the country. As early as 1632, they were visited by Neal, Jocelyn and Field, who gave romantic accounts of their adventures, and of the extent and grandeur of the mountains which they called the Crystal Hills. Since that time, these regions have been repeatedly explored by hunters, and by men of science. Mount Washington is 6,428 feet above the level of the sea, 5,850 above the river at Lancaster, and 4,781 above Crawford's, the nearest dwelling to the summit. This mountain is easily known by its superior elevation, and its being the southern of the three highest peaks. The heights of the oth er peaks above the Connecticut at Lancaster, are as follows;

Mount Adams, - - - - -	5,353 feet.
“ Jefferson, - - - - -	5,251
“ Madison, - - - - -	5,039
“ Monroe, - - - - -	4,932
“ Franklin, - - - - -	4,470
“ Pleasant, - - - - -	4,339

Mount Adams is known by its sharp terminating peak, and being the second N. of Washington. Jefferson is situated between these two. Madison is the eastern peak of the range. Worroc is the first to the S. of Washington. Franklin is the second S. and is known by its level surface. Pleasant is known by its conical shape, and being the third S. of Washington. In passing from the Notch to the highest summit, the traveller crosses the summits of Mounts Pleasant, Franklin and Monroe. In accomplishing this, he must pass through a forest, and cross several ravines. These are neither wide nor deep, nor are they discovered at a great distance; for the trees fill them up exactly even with the mountain on each side, and their branches interlock with each other in such a manner, that it is very difficult to pass through them, and they are so stiff and thick as almost to support a man's weight. Mount Pleasant is easily ascended. Its top, to the extent of 5 or 6 acres, is smooth, and gradually slopes away in every direction from its centre. It even has a verdant appearance, as it is every where covered with short grass, which grows in little tufts to the height of four or five inches. Among these tufts, mountain flowers are thinly scattered, which add life and beauty to the scene. The prospect from this summit is beautiful: to the N. the eye is dazzled with the splendour of Mount Washington; N. W. are seen the settlements in Jefferson; W. the courses of the Amonoosuck, as though delineated on a map; S. W. the Mooshelock and Haystack are discovered; S. Chocorua peak; S. E. the settlement and mountains in Bartlett; E. only dark mountains and forests.

On descending this mountain, a small patch of water is found at its base: from which the ascent is gradual to the summit of Mount Franklin. After crossing this mountain, you pass over the E. pinnacle of Mount Monroe, and soon find yourself on a plain of some extent, at the foot of Mount Washington. Here is a fine resting-place, on the margin of a beautiful sheet of water, of an oval form, covering about 3-4 of an acre. The waters are pleasant to the taste, and deep. Not a living creature is to be seen in the waters, at this height on the hills; nor do vegetables of any kind grow in or around them, to obscure the clear rocky or gravelly bottom on which they rest. A small spring discharges itself into this pond at its south-east angle. Another pond, of about 2-3 its size, lies N. W. of this. Directly before you, the pinnacle of Mount Washington rises with majestic grandeur, like an immense pyramid, or some vast Kremlin in this magnificent city of mountains. The pinnacle is elevated about 1,500 feet above the plain, and is composed principally of huge rocks of granite and gneiss piled together, presenting a variety of colors and forms. In ascending, you must pass enormous masses of loose stones; but a walk of half an hour will generally carry you to the summit. The view from this point is wonderfully grand and picturesque. Innumerable mountains, lakes, ponds rivers towns and villages meet the delighted eye, and the dim Atlantic stretches its waters along the eastern horizon. To the N. is seen the lofty summits of Adams and Jefferson; and to the east a little detached from the range stands Mount Madison. Mount Washington is supported on the N. by a high ridge, which extends to Mount Jefferson; on the N. E. by a large grassy plain, terminating in a vast spur extending far away in that direction; E. by a promontory, which breaks off abruptly at St. Anthony's Nose; S. and S. E. by a grassy plain, in summer, of more than 40 acres.

At the southeastern extremity of this plain, a ridge commences, which slopes gracefully away towards the vale of the Saco; upon which at short distances from each other, arise rocks, resembling, in some places, towers; in others representing the various orders of architecture. It would be vain in us to attempt a description of the varied wonders which here astonish and delight the beholder. To those who have visited these mountains, our descriptions would be tame and uninteresting; and he who has never ascended their hoary summits, cannot realize the extent and magnificence of the scene. These mountains are decidedly of primitive formation. Nothing of volcanic origin has ever yet been discovered on the most diligent research. They have for ages, probably, exhibited the same unvarying aspect. No minerals are here found of much rarity or value. The rock which most abounds, is schistus, intermixed with greenstone, mica, granite and gneiss. The three highest peaks are composed entirely of fragments of rocks heaped together in confusion, but pretty firmly fixed in their situations.

During nine or ten months of the year, the summits of the mountains are covered with snow and ice, giving them a bright and dazzling appearance. On every side are long and winding gullies, deepening in their descent to the plains below. Here some of the finest rivers of New England originate. The Saco flows from the E. side of the mountains; the branches of the Amonoosuggin from the N.; the Amonoosuck and other tributaries of the Connecticut from the W.; and the Pemigewasset from the S., its fountain being near that of the Saco. The sides of the hills are in many parts covered with soil; but this is very superficial in all cases, and every spot, that can be reached by running water, is left destitute of every thing but rocks and pebbles, of which likewise the river-bottoms are exclusively composed. In these cold and elevated regions, the period for the growth of vegetables is extremely brief; the mountains must be forever sterile. Moss and lichens may be found near the summits, but of meagre and scanty growth—looking as if they had wandered from their proper zone below, into these realms of barren desolation.

The Notch of the White Mountains, is a name appropriated to a very narrow defile extending two miles in length between two huge cliffs apparently rent asunder by some vast convulsion of nature, probably that of the deluge. The entrance of the chasim is formed by two rocks standing perpendicular at the distance of 22 feet from each other; one about 20 feet in height, the other about 12. The road from Lancaster to Portland passes through this notch, following the course of the head stream of the Saco. The scenery at this place is exceedingly beautiful and grand. The mountain otherwise a continued range, is here cloven quite down to its base, opening a passage for the waters of the Saco. The gap is so narrow, that space has with difficulty been found for the road. About half a mile from the entrance of the chasm, is seen a most beautiful cascade, issuing from a mountain on the right, about 800 feet above the subjacent valley, and about 2 miles distant. The stream passes over a series of rocks almost perpendicular, with a course so little broken as to preserve the appearance of a uniform current, and yet so far disturbed as to be perfectly white. This beautiful stream, which passes down a stupendous precipice, is called by Dwight the Silver Cascade. It is one of the most beautiful in the world. At the distance of three fourths of a mile from the entrance of the chasm is a brook, called the Flume, which falls from a height of 240 or 250 feet over three precipices—down the two first in a single current, and over the last in three, which unite again at the bottom in a small basin formed by the hand of nature in the rocks. The water is pure and transparent, and it would be impossible for a brook of its size to be modded into more diversified or delightful forms.

The more elevated parts of these mountains are occasionally subject to avalanches, or slides of earth, which sweep suddenly down their sides and occasion great damage. A serious calamity of this sort occurred at the Notch in August 1826, to a family of the name of Willey, who occupied a dwelling in the narrowest part of the defile many miles from any other human habitation. At midnight during a furious storm of rain, the mountain broke loose above them, and poured down in a torrent of earth, rocks, and trees. The family, aroused by the noise, immediately fled from the house, but were overtaken by the avalanche and swept to destruction. The roads and bridges along the valley were destroyed, the streams choked up, and heaps of earth, rocks and trees exhibited a frightful picture of desolation.

Till within a few years these mountains were seldom visited except by a few hunters and an occasional traveller, and the beauties of these wild and sequestered spots were as little known to the world as those of the Vale of Chamouni, before the discovery of that unrivalled spot in the last century. Latterly, the fame of the White Mountain scenery has drawn the attention of all the lovers of the picturesque in our country, and the mountains are now visited every summer by travellers from all parts of the United States. Tolerable accommodations may be found at Crawford's. Visitors who wish to view the sunrise from Mount Washington, pass the night at the Camp, 7 miles above, where the steepest ascent of the mountain begins.

The only places susceptible of cultivation in the heart of the mountains, are the little meadows inhabited by the Crawfords, the Notch, and Willey Meadows; and there the interval of warm weather is so short in the year, that few vegetables can arrive at maturity, with all the rapidity of growth which distinguishes such cold regions. To those who are fond of field sports, the forests and rivers afford every advantage, during the brief summer which visits the valleys. Various kinds of wild birds and game are to be found in the woods, besides bears, wild cats, and deer. The moose and buffalo were formerly abundant among the mountains; and it is scarcely thirty years since they were killed in great numbers, merely for their hides and tallow; as the latter still are in the deserts beyond the Mississippi. Deer are common in the woods, and frequently are killed by the hunters. Sometimes they come boldly down into the little meadow before Crawford's house, and quietly graze with the cattle. The black bears are occasionally seen in the more unfrequented places; but they will always endeavour to avoid a man. A large species of elk, here known by the name of the Cariboo, has made its appearance in the White Mountains within a few years; but they are still very scarce in this part of the country.

Whitehaven, a sea-port in Cumberland, Eng. It is seated on a creek of the Irish Sea, on the N. end of a great hill, washed by the tide on the W. side, where there is a large whitish rock, and a strong stone wall that secures the harbour. Near it are excellent coal mines, some of which run a considerable way under the sea, and are the chief source of its wealth. It is 41 m. S. W. of Carlisle and 320 N. N. W. of London. Long 3. 35. W., lat. 54. 25. N.

Whitehorn, a borough of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, near the bay of Wigton. It is a place of great antiquity, having been a Roman station and the first bishopric in Scotland. 8 m. W of Wigton.

Whitesable, a village on the coast of Kent, Eng. 7 m. N. N. W. of Canterbury.

Whitsuntide Island, one of the New Hebrides in the S. Pacific, 30 m. long and 8 broad, discovered by captain Wallis, on the Whitsunday, 1767 Long. 168. 20. E., lat. 15. 44. S.

Whittlebury Forest, a forest in the S. part of Northamptonshire, Eng. 9 m. long and 3 broad.

Wiburg, or Viborg, an extensive district of Russia, in the government of Finland. It was ceded by the Swedes to the Russians, partly by the peace of Nystadt in 1721, and partly by the treaty of Abo in 1743. Besides pastures, the country produces rye, oats, and barley, but not sufficient for the inhabitants.

Wiburg, a fortified sea-port of Russia, capital of the foregoing district, and a bishop's see, with a strong citadel. The houses are almost entirely built of stone. The chief exports are planks, tallow, pitch, and tar. The surrounding country is pleasant; and near it, at Imatra, is the famous cataract of the Woxa, which makes a noise more stunning than that of the Rhine at Lauffen. Wiburg stands on the N. E. point of the gulf of Finland, 100 m. N. N. W. of Petersburg. Long. 29. 10. E., lat. 60. 56. N.

Wiburg, a city of Denmark, in N. Jutland, capital of a diocese of the same name, and the seat of the chief court of justice in the province. In 1726 the cathedral, a church, the town-house, and the bishop's palace, were destroyed by fire; but they have all been magnificently rebuilt. It is seated on a lake, in a peninsula, 120 m. N. of Sleswiek. Long. 9. 50. E., lat. 56. 20. N.

Wick, a borough of Scotland, and the capital of Caithness-shire, with a harbour on an inlet of the German Ocean, at the mouth of a river of the same name. Much kelp is made here, but the fisheries are the chief object of importance. It is 55 m. N. E. of Dornoch. Long. 2. 51. W., lat. 58. 21. N.

Wick, a fortified town of the Netherlands, in the duchy of Limburg, seated on the Meuse, opposite Maestricht, with which it communicates by a bridge.

Wick Duerstede, a town of Prussian Westphalia, with two castles, 12 m. N. of Juliers.

Wickford, p.t. Washington Co. R. I. 24 m. S. Providence.

Wicklow, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 36 m. long and 25 broad; bounded on the N. by Dublin, E. by the Irish Sea, S. by Wexford, W. by Catherlough and Kildare, and N. W. by Kildare. It is divided into 58 parishes, has about 111,000 inhabitants, and sends two members to parliament. It is very mountainous and woody, interspersed with rocks and bogs; but the valleys are fertile and well cultivated, and watered by numerous small rivers.

Wicklow, the capital of the foregoing county, is seated on the Irish Sea, with a narrow harbour, at the mouth of the river Leitrim 26 m. S. S. E. of Dublin. Long. 6. 12. W., lat. 52. 58. N.

Wicomico, p.v. Northumberland Co. Va.

Wickwar, a decayed town in Gloucestershire, Eng. 111 W. of London.

Widdin, a fortified town of Bulgaria, and an archbishop's see. It has often been taken and retaken by the Austrians and Turks; and is seated on the Danube, 100 m. N. by W. of Sossa and 140 E. S. E. of Belgrade. Long. 24. 27 E., lat. 44. 12. N.

Wied, a county of Germany, at the conflux of the rivers Wied and Rhine. It is composed of two parts, the Upper County, or Wied-Runkel, and the Lower County, or Wied-Nieuwied.

Wied, a town of Germany, in the lower county of Wied, 9 m. N. N. W. of Coblentz.

Wielun, a town of Prussian Poland, with a good castle, 16 m. S. of Siradia.

Wielitska, a village of Austrian Poland, in Galicia, celebrated for its salt mines, which extend under the whole town, and to a considerable distance on each side. In these mines are several small chapels, excavated in the salt; and many of the inhabitants reside chiefly in the mines. 8 m. S. E. of Cracow.

Wiesensteig, a town of Wurtemberg, with a castle; seated on the Fils, 16 m. W. N. W. of Ulm and 25 E. S. E. of Stuttgart.

Wiesenthal, a town of Saxony, in Meissen, with manufactures of iron, steel, and fire-arms, and a considerable trade in leather. It stands on a rivulet of the same name, on the frontiers of Bohemia, 15 m. N. by E. of Carlsbad.

Wigan, a borough in Lancashire, Eng. 39 m. S. of Lancaster and 196 N. N. W. of London.

Wight, an island in the English Channel, on the S. coast of Hampshire, from which it is separated by a narrow strait. It is about 21 m. in length and 13 in breadth, and is nearly divided into two equal parts by the river Mede, or Cowes, which, rising in the southern angle, enters at the northern into the channel, opposite the mouth of Southampton bay. The S. coast is bordered with very steep cliffs of chalk and free-stone, hollowed into caverns in various parts. The W. side is fenced with ridges of rocks, of which the most remarkable are those called the Needles. Between the island and the main are various sand banks, especially off the E. part, where is the safe road of St. Helens. Across the island from E to W. runs a ridge of hills, forming a tract of fine downs, with a chalky or marly soil, which feeds a great number of rabbits and fine fleeced sheep. To the N. of this ridge the land is chiefly pasture; to the S. of it is a rich arable country, producing great crops of corn. The variety of prospects which this island affords, its mild air, and the neat manner in which the fields are laid out, render it a very delightful spot. It is devoted almost entirely to husbandry, and has no manufactures of any consequence. Among its products are to be reckoned a pure white pipe-clay, and a fine white crystalline sand, of the latter of which great quantities are exported for the use of the glass-works in various parts. The other articles of export are wheat, flour, barley, malt, and salt. Its principal town is Newport; it likewise contains the boroughs of Newton and Yarmouth.

Wigton, a town in Cumberland, Eng. with manufactures of linen and cotton; also an extensive calico-printing establishment, and a silk hat manufactory. 304 N. N. W. of London.

Wilmanstrand, town of Russia in the govern ment of Finland, near which an obstinate battle was fought, in 1741, between 3,000 Swedes and 16,000 Russians, when the former were obliged at length to yield to superiority of numbers. It is seated on the S. side of the lake Saima, 40 m. N. N. W. of Wiburg and 100 N. N. W. of Petersburg.

Wilna, p.v. Jefferson Co. N. Y. 176 m. N. W. Albany. Pop. 1,602.

Wilna, a government of Russia, comprising the N. part of Lithuania, and containing an area of 2,300 square miles, with about 1,000,000 of inhabitants.

Wilna, a town of Russia, capital of the foregoing government, and a bishop's see, with a university, an ancient castle, and a royal palace. It stands on several little eminences, and has two considerable suburbs, called Antokollo and Rudaiska. Here are upwards of 40 churches; and the magnificent one belonging to the castle has a very rich treasury. In 1748 a dreadful conflagration destroyed 13 churches, and in 1749 another fire happened by lightning, which consumed six churches; besides these, the Jews synagogue, the council-house, 33 palaces, numerous stone edifices, and other buildings were destroyed. The churches have been rebuilt, and some of them in a more elegant manner than before; but the city has not recovered its former grandeur. Wilna was taken by the Russians in 1794, and, with its territory, annexed to that empire. The French took possession of it in 1812, but evacuated it the same year. It is seated on the Vilia, 180 m. E. of Königsberg and 240 N.E. of Warsaw. Long. 25. 28. E., lat. 54. 41. N.

Wilsowitz, a town of the Austrian states, in Moravia, 15 m. E. N. E. of Hradisch.

Wilton, a borough in Wiltshire 85 m. W. by S. of London.

Wiltshire, a county of England, 53 miles long and 38 broad; bounded on the E. by Berkshire and Hampshire. The number of inhabitants in 1821 was 222,157. The air is sharp on the hills in winter, but is mild during that season in the vales. The land in the N. part is generally hilly and woody, but affords excellent pasture for cattle, and here is made the Wiltshire cheese so much esteemed. In the S. the soil is rich and fertile. In the middle it chiefly consists of downs, that afford the best pasture for sheep; and in the valleys, which divide the downs, are corn-fields and rich meadows. Its principal commodities are sheep, wool, wood, and stone; of this last there are excellent quarries on the bank of the Nadder, where some of the stones are 23 yards in length, and four in thickness, without a flaw. The chief manufactures are the different branches of the clothing-trade. Salisbury is the capital.

Wimbledon, a village in Surrey, Eng. on an elevated heath, 7 m. S. W. of London. On the S. W. angle of the common is a circular encampment, including seven acres; the trench very deep and perfect. In the village are copper mills a manufacture for printing calicoes, and another of japan ware.

Wimborn, or Wimborn Minster, a town in Dorsetshire, Eng. It had a monastery, in which were interred the W. Saxon kings Etheldred and Sigeforth, and queen Ethelburga. Its noble church, called the Minster, was formerly collegiate. 100 m. S. of London.

Wimmis, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, seated on the Sibnen, 18 m. S. of Bern.

Wimpfen, a town of Germany, in Hesse-Darmstadt, consisting properly of two towns, called Wipfen on the Hill, and Wimpfen in the Vale. A salt work was established here in 1761. It is seated on the Neckar, 8 m. N. of Heilbron and 22 E. of Heidelberg.

There are some mineral springs in the neighbourhood, and the town is much frequented in summer by people from the lower country.

Winchester, p.t. Litchfield Co. Conn. Pop. 1,765. Guernsey and Ohio Co. Randolph Co. Ind. Clarke Co. Ken., Franklin Co. Ten. and Wayne Co. Mississippi.

Winchester, a city in Hampshire, Eng. It is one mile and a half in circumference, and has 8 churches, besides the cathedral, in which were interred several Saxon kings and queens, whose bones were collected by bishop Fox, put into small gilded coffins, and placed on a wall in the S. side of the choir. In this cathedral is the marble coffin of William Rufus. In the vicinity is St. Mary's College, founded by William of Wykeham; and contiguous to it is a spacious quadrangular edifice for commoners or gentlemen not on the foundation. At the S. end of the city is the hospital of St. Cross, founded by a bishop of this see, for a master, nine poor brethren, and four out-pensioners. All travellers who call at this hospital have a right to demand some bread and beer, which is always brought to them. 62 m. W. by N. of London.

Windau, a sea-port of Russia, in the government of Courland, with a castle. The exports are pitch, tar, wax, &c., and some ships are built here. It stands at the mouth of a river of the same name, in the Baltic, 86 m. N. W. of Mittau and 100 N. by E. of Memel. Long. 21. 50. E., lat 57. 15. N.

Windermere, or Winandermere, the most extensive lake in England, lying between Westmorland and Lancashire. It extends 15 m. from N to S., but is not more than a mile broad. It is fa mous for its fine char, and abundance of trout, perch, pike, and eel. Its principal feeders are the rivers Rothay and Brathay, and its outlet the river Leven. This lake is intersected by several promontories, and spotted with islands. Among these, the Holme, or Great Island, an oblong tract of 30 acres, crosses the lake in an oblong line, surrounded by a number of inferior isles, finely wooded.

Windlingen, a town of the kingdom of Wurtemberg, seated on the Lauter, 12 m. S. E. of Stuttgart.

Windsbach, a town and castle of Germany, in the district of Anspach, on the Rednitz, 10 m. S. E. of Anspach.

Windsheim, a town of Germany, in Bavaria, surrounded with ramparts which serve for a promenade. It is seated on the Aisch, 30 m. S. E. of Wurtzburg and 32 S. S. W. of Bamberg.

Windsor, a borough in Berkshire, Eng. seated on an eminence, on the Thames, with a market on Saturday. It has been a royal demesne ever since the time of William the Conqueror, who received it from the hands of the abbot of Westminster, in exchange for lands in Essex. The picturesque beauty of its scenery, its noble forest, and the interesting historical associations connected with the vicinity, all combine to confer upon it peculiar attractions; but it owes its chief celebrity to its magnificent castle, the favorite residence of a long line of kings. This castle stands upon a high hill, which rises from the town by a gentle ascent; and its fine terrace, faced with a rampart of free-stone, 1,870 feet in length, is one of the noblest walks in Europe, with respect to strength, grandeur, and prospects. It was built originally by William the Conqueror, and enlarged by Henry I. Edward III. (who was born in it) caused the greater part of the edifice to be taken down and rebuilt in its present form. Great additions were made to it by Edward IV., Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Elizabeth. Charles II. enlarged the windows and made them regular, furnished the royal apartments with paintings, enlarged the terrace walk on the N. side, and carried it round the E. and S. sides. After the accession of the present house of Brunswick, and in particular during the reign of George III. splendid improvements were made; and under his late majesty George IV., it assumed its present grand and magnificent appearance. The castle is divided into two large courts, separated from each other by the round tower allotted for the residence of the governor. On the N. side of the upper courts are the state apartments, on the E. the private apartments of his late majesty, and on the S. the suite of rooms set apart for the officers of state. In the centre of the court is an equestrian statue of Charles II. The royal apartments are adorned with a splendid collection of paintings, chiefly formed by the late king, and the royal chapel is embellished with a variety of superb carvings, by the celebrated Gibbons. In the lower ward of the castle is St. George's chapel, an elegant and highly finished structure, of pointed architecture, began by Edward III. in 1737, in honor of the order of the greater. On the S. side of the town is the great park, which is 14 m. in circumference. From that part of the castle called the round tower, the eye embraces one of the most noble and extensive prospects in England; for not fewer than 12 counties may be discerned with the naked eye; while the landscape presents every combination of picturesque beauty. Windsor is 22 m. W. London.

Windsor, a county of Vermont. Pop. 40,632. Windsor is the capital.

Windsor, p.t. Windsor Co. Vt. on the Connecticut. 61 m. S. Montpelier, and 112 N. W. Boston. It has a handsome thriving town with considerable trade. Pop. 3,134; p.t. Kennebec Co. Me. Winnicza, a town of Austrian Poland, with a castle; seated on the river Bog, 35 m. N. of Bracklau.

Winipeg, a lake of Upper Canada, N. W. lake Superior. It is 210 m. long and from 50 to 100 broad, and exhibits a body of water next in size to Lake Superior. It receives the waters of several small lakes in every direction, and contains a number of small islands. The lands on its banks produce vast quantities of wild rice, and the sugar-tree in great plenty.

Winnipisogee, r. N. H., which runs from lake Winnipisogee into the Merrimack, S. of the Sanbornton.

Winnipisogee, a lake of N. Hampshire in Strafford Co., surrounded by the townships of Centre harbour, Moultonborough, Tuftonborough, Wolfborough, Alton, Guilford, and Meredith. Long. 71. 5. to 71. 25. W., lat. 43. 29. to 43. 44. N. It is about 23 m. long, from S. E. to N. W., and about 10, where widest broad. It receives the waters of several small streams, but is supplied chiefly by subjacent springs, and its waters are conveyed off by the river Winnipisogee, which joins the western branch of the Merrimack, at the S. W. corner of Sanbornton, opposite Salisbury, near Webster's falls. It is 472 feet above the level of the ocean, and 232 above the Merrimack, at the junction of their waters; and in some places it is unfathomable by any means in the possession of the inhabitants. It abounds in fish, and its waters are remarkably pure, but little, if at all info-rior to those of lake George, N. Y. It is of a very irregular form: in the N. W. it divides into 3 branches, or large bays, and in the S. E. is a long arm, called Merrymeeting Bay. Several large promontories intrude into the lake; the principal of which are Meredith neck, Moultonborough neck, and Tuftonborough neck. It is bordered in various parts by hills and mountains; on the N. W. is Red Mountain, on the N. Ossipee, on the S. Mount Major, and Gunstock mountain. The lake contains a great multitude of islands said to amount to 365; some of them large enough for farms of considerable extent, and are of beautiful appearance. The prospect of the lake and its environs is enchanting.

The following description of the appearance of the lake as seen from the summit of Red mountain is given by Dr. Dwight.—“Immediately at the foot of the height, on which we stood, and in the bottom of the immense valley below, spread south-eastward the waters of the Winnepesaukee in complete view; except that one or two of its arms were partially concealed by intervening peninsulas. A finer object of the same nature was perhaps never seen. The lakes, which I had visited in my northern and western excursions, were all of them undivided masses bordered by shores comparatively straight. This was, centrally, a vast column, if I may be allowed the term, 23 m. in length and from 6 to 8 in breadth, shooting out with inimitable beauty, a succession of arms, some of them not inferior in length to the whole breadth of the lake. These were fashioned with every elegance of figure, bordered with the most beautiful winding shores, and studded with a multitude of islands. Their relative positions, also, could scarcely be more happy.

“Many of the islands are large, exquisitely fashioned, and arranged in a manner not less singular than pleasing. As they met the eye, when surveyed from this summit, they were set in groups on both sides of the great channel, and left this vast field of water unoccupied between them. Their length was universally at right angles to that of the lake, and they appeared as if several chain of hills originally crossing the country in that direction, had by some convulsion been merged in the water so low, that no part of them was left visible, except the oblong segments of their summits. Of those, which, by their size and situation, were most conspicuous, I counted 45, without attempting to enumerate the smaller ones, or such as were obscured. The points, which intrude into this lake are widely different from those of lake George; bold, masculine bluffs, impinging directly upon the water. These, in several instances, were spacious peninsulas, fitting to become rich and delightful residences of man, often elevated into handsome hills, and sloping gracefully into the lake.”

Winnisborough, p.v. Fairfield Dis. S. C. 30 m. N. Columbus.

Winschoten, a fortified town of the Netherlands in Groningen. Here, in 1568, was fought the first battle between the revolted Dutch and the Spaniards, who were defeated by Lewis, brother to the prince of Orange. It is 6 m. S. of Dolbart Bay and 19 E. S. E. of Groningen.

Worcester, one of the most ancient and respectable cities of England, the capital of Worcester-shire, and a bishop's see. It contains 11 churches besides the cathedral, also a number of meeting-houses for various sectaries as well as Roman Catholics. Edgar's Tower, a strong portal, is part of its ancient castle; here are also three grammar-schools, seven hospitals, a public infirmary, and a well contrived quay. Worcester is governed by a mayor, carries on a considerable trade in hops, carpets, and gloves, has a large manufacture of elegant china-ware, manufactures of fine lace, an extensive iron foundry, distillery, &c., and contains about 19,000 inhabitants. Here Cromwell, in 1651, obtained a victory over the Scotch army, which had marched into England to reinstate Charles II., who, after this defeat, escaped with great difficulty into France. Worcester is seated on the Severn, 36 m. N. N. E. of Bristol and 111 W. N. W. of London. Long. 2. 0. W., lat. 52. 9. N.

Worcestershire, a county of England, 44 m. long and 24 broad; bounded on the N. by Shropshire and Staffordshire, E. by Warwickshire, S. E. and S. by Gloucestershire, and W. by Herefordshire. It contains 613,240 acres, is divided into five hundreds and 152 parishes, has one city and 11 market-towns, and sends nine members to parliament. In 1821 the number of inhabitants was 184,424. The soil in the vales and meadows is very rich, particularly the vale of Evesham, which is styled the granary of these parts. The hills have generally an easy ascent, except the Malvern Hills in the S. W. part of the county, which feed large flocks of sheep. The other hills are the Licky, near Bromsgrove, towards the N.; and the Bredon Hills, towards the S. E. Here are plenty of fruits of most sorts, especially pears, which are in many places found growing in the hedges. The commerce and manufactures are considerable. The chief exports are coal, corn, hops, cloth, cheese, cider, perry, and salt. The principal rivers are the Severn, Teme, and Avon.

Wurtemberg, a kingdom of Germany, bounded E. by Bavaria and W. by Baden, and comprising an area of 8,000 sq. m., with 1,536,000 inhabitants. It is one of the most populous and fertile countries in Germany, though there are many mountains and woods. It produces plenty of pasture, corn, fruit, and a great deal of Neckar wine—so called from the river Neckar, which runs through the kingdom. There are also mines and salt springs, and much game. This country was erected into a kingdom by Napoleon in 1805; and he made considerable additions to it by the territories taken from Austria. In 1813 the allies, having engaged to serve the king in his various acquisitions, received his support in the invasion of France. Stuttgart is the capital.

Wurtzburg, a district of Bavaria, in the circle of Lower Maine, comprehending a great part of Franconia. It is 65 m. long and 50 broad, and is bounded on the N. by Henneberg, E. by Bamberg, S. by Anspach, Hohenlohe, and Mergentheim, and W. by Wertheim, Mentz, and Fulda. The soil is very fertile, and produces more corn and wine than the inhabitants consume. This territory was formerly a bishopric, and its sovereignty was one of the greatest ecclesiastic princes of the empire; but it was given as a principality to the elector of Bavaria in 1803; and by the treaty of Presburg, in 1805, it was ceded to the archduke Ferdinand, whose electoral title was transferred from Salzburg to this place. In 1814, however, it was again transferred to Bavaria, in exchange for the Tyrol, when the archduke Ferdinand was reinstated in his Tuscan dominions.

Wurtzburg, a fortified city of Bavaria, capital of the circle of Lower Maine, with a magnificent palace, a university, an arsenal, and a handsome hospital. The fortress stands on an eminence, and communicates with the city by a stone bridge. Besides the cathedral, there are several collegiate and parish churches, colleges, abbeys, and convents. Here is a cannon and bell foundry; also cloth and stuff manufactures, established in the house of correction. Wurtzburg was taken by the French in 1796 and again in 1800. It is seated on the Maine, 40 m. W. S. W. of Bamberg and 65 E. S. E. of Frankfort. Long. 10. 14. E., lat. 49. 46. N.

Wycomb or High Wycomb a borough in Buckinghamshire Eng. A Roman tessellated pavement was discovered in an adjacent meadow in 1744. 31 m. W. N. W. of London.

Wye, a town in Kent, Eng. 55 m. S. E. of London.

Wye, a river of Wales, which issues from Plynlimmon hill, in the S. part of Montgomeryshire, very near the source of the Severn. It crosses the N. E. corner of Radnorshire, giving name to the town of Rhyadergowy (fall of the Wye) where it is precipitated in a cataract. Then flowing between this county and Brecknockshire, it enters Herefordshire, passing by Hay to Hereford, a few m. below which it receives the Lug; it then flows by Ross and Monmouth, and, separating the counties of Monmouth and Gloucester, it enters the Severn below Chepstow. This river is navigable almost to Hay, and a canal forms a communication between it and the Severn from Hereford to Gloucester.

Yonne, a department of France, containing part of the former provinces of Burgundy and Champagne, and comprising an area of 2,900 square miles, with 350,000 inhabitants. The climate is temperate, and the soil fertile in corn, hemp, flax, wine, and fruits. It receives its name from a river which rises in the department of Nièvre, flows by Chateau-Chinon, Clameci, Auxerre, Joigny, and Sens, and joins the Seine at Montereau. Auxerre is the capital.

York, a city, the capital of Yorkshire, Eng. and an archbishop's see. It is the Eboracum of the Romans, and many of their coffins, urns, coins, &c., have been found here. It has always been considered as the capital of the North, and, in point of rank, as the second city in the kingdom; but is now surpassed in wealth and populousness by many of the more modern trading towns. York contains about 20,000 inhabitants. The cathedral of St. Peter, generally called the Minster, is reckoned the largest and most magnificent Gothic structure in the universe. The E. window, which is said hardly to have its equal for tracery, painting, and preservation, was the work of John Thornton, a glazier, of Conventry, in 1405. This beautiful edifice sustained considerable injury from fire, occasioned by a frantic incendiary, in 1829, but it is expected that the magnificence of the county will soon restore it to its original splendor. Besides the cathedral, York contains but 20 churches in use, though in the reign of Henry V. it had 44 parish churches, 17 chapels, and nine religious houses. Here are also a number of meeting houses for dissenters and Catholics. The city is divided by the Ouse into two parts, united by a stone bridge of five arches, the centre one 81 feet wide. The river is navigable to this city for vessels of 70 tons burden, although it is 60 miles from the sea. The castle is a noble structure, and was formerly a place of great strength, but is now used as a county prison. Near it, on an artificial mount, is Clifford's Tower, a round shell said by some to have been raised by William the Conqueror, but others deem it a Roman work. It was used as a garrison in the civil wars, and till the year 1623, when the magazine blowing up reduced it to its present form. York is a county of itself, governed by a lord mayor; the prefix of lord being given by Richard II.; and its county includes Ainsty Liberty, in which are 35 villages and namlets. The guildhall, built in 1466, is a grand structure, supported by two rows of oak pillars, each pillar a single tree. The corporation built a mansion-house in 1728, for the lord mayor; and among the other public buildings are a noble assembly house, designed by the earl of Burlington, an elegant court-house on the right of the castle, a theatre royal, a county hospital, and an asylum for lunatics. York is 70 m. S. by E. of Durham, 190 S. S. E. of Edinburgh, and 195 N. by W. of London. Long. 1. 7. W., lat. 53. 59. N.

York, a city of Upper Canada, and the seat of government for that province. It is situate on the N. W. side of Lake Ontario, and has an excellent harbour, formed by a long peninsula, which embraces a basin of water sufficiently large to contain a considerable fleet. On the extremity of the peninsula called Gibraltar Point are stores and blockhouses, which command the entrance of the harbour; and on the mainland, opposite this point, is the garrison. The front of the city is a mile and a half in length, and it contains several handsome squares, particularly one open to the harbour. It is 45 m. N. N. W. of Fort Niagara and 140 W. by S. of Kingston. Long. 79. 36. W., lat. 43. 35. N.

York, a county of Maine. Pop. 51,710. Alfred is the capital. A county of the E. Dis. of Pennsylvania. Pop. 42,658. York is the capital. A county of the E. Dis. of Virginia. Pop. 5,354. Yorktown is the capital. A District of S. Carolina. Pop. 17,785.

York, p.t. York Co. Me. 10 m. N. E. Portsmouth. It is one of the oldest towns in the state and has some coasting and fishery business. Pop. 3,455; p.t. Livingston Co. N. Y. Pop. 2,636; p.t. Yorkshire, the largest county of England, bounded on the N. by Westmoreland and Durham E. by the German Ocean, S. by Lincolnshire Nottinghamshire, and Derbyshire, S. W. by Cheshire, W. by Lancashire, and N. W. by Westmoreland. It extends 80 m. from N. to S., and 115 from E. to W., and contains 3,847,420 acres. From its great extent it has been divided into three parts, called the North, East, and West ridings; and subdivided into 26 wapentakes: it has one city, 60 market-towns, and upwards of 560 parishes, and sends 30 members to parliament. The air and soil of this extensive county vary extremely. The E. riding is less healthy than the others; but this inconvenience decreases in proportion as the county recedes from the sea. On the hilly parts of this riding, especially in what is called the York Wolds, the soil is generally barren, dry, and sandy but great numbers of lean sheep are sold here, and sent into other parts to be fattened. The W. riding, which is much the largest, enjoys a sharp but healthy air and the land on the western side is hilly, stony and not very fruitful; but the intermediate valleys consist of much good arable ground, and pasture for the largest cattle. It also produces iron, coal, lime, jet, alum, horses, and goats. Here the clothing manufactures principally flourish. The N. riding, in general, exceeds the other two in the salubrity of the air. The worst parts breed lean cattle; but, on the sides of the hills, in the valleys, and in the plains, it produces good corn and rich pastures. Richmondshire, on the N. W. of this riding, was formerly a county of itself; here many lead mines are worked to great advantage. In Yorkshire, likewise, are the districts of Holderness, on the borders of the Humber, Cleveland on the confines of Durham, and Craven on the borders of Westmoreland and Lancashire. In this last district are three of the highest hills in England, named Wharfedale, Ingleborough, and Pennycant, which form a sort of triangle from their tops, at the distance of 5, 6, and 8 m. while their monstrous bases nearly unite.

Yot-thou, a city of China, of the first rank, in Hou-quang, and one of the richest cities in the empire; seated on the river Kian-ku, and on the lake Tong-ting, which is more than 70 leagues in circuit. 700 m. S. by W. of Peking. Long. 112. 35. E., lat. 29. 23. N.

Youghall, a borough and sea-port of Ireland, in the county of Cork, with a commodious harbour and a well defended quay. It has a manufacture of earthen ware, and is seated on the side of a hill, on a bay of its name, 28 m. E. by N. of Cork. Long. 3. 10. W., lat. 51. 49. N.

Youghogeny, a river of Pennsylvania, flowing into the Monongahela 18 m. above Pittsburg.

Zafra, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, with a castle, 20 m. S. W. of Medina.

Zagara, a mountain of Greece, in Livadia, one of the tops of Mount Parnassus. It was the ancient Helicon, from which issued the fountain Hippocrene, and was sacred to the Muses, who had here a temple.

Zaghara, a town of Negroland, in Bornou, on the river Pittree, 170 m. S. E. of Bornou.

Zahara or the Great Desert, a vast country of Africa, 1,900 miles in length by 840 in breadth; bounded on the N. by Barbary, E. by Fezzan and Cassina, S. by Negroland and Foulî, and W. by the Atlantic Ocean. The air is very hot but not unwholesome to the natives. The soil is generally sandy and barren; but there are verdant valleys in which water either springs or stagnates, and it is here and there interspersed with spots of astonishing fertility, which are crowded with inhabitants. Here grows the acacia, a species of mi-mosa which produces the gum arabic. These fertile spots in the desert are called oases, or islands, bearing some resemblance to islands in the sea; and they abound most in the northern and eastern parts; but the smaller ones are not always permanent; for a furious wind from the desert, bringing along with it an immense quantity of sand, sometimes overwhelms an oasis, and reduces it to barrenness. These oases are formed into a number of states, governed by petty princes; and those of which some intelligence has been obtained are noticed in this work in their proper places. The inhabitants consisting of various tribes, are wild and ignorant; and the Mahometan religion is professed throughout the country, unless where they approach the country of the Negroes. They maintain towards each other the maxims of apparent hostility, but a Christian is every where odious. Their language is chiefly a dialect of the Arabic; and their only intercourse with other nations is carried on with the caravans which periodically traverse these immense deserts. The Zahara abounds in antelopes, wild boars, leopards, apes, ostriches, and serpents. There are few horses and beeves; but many sheep, goats, and camels.

Zahara, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a citadel; seated on a craggy rock, 42 m. S. E. of Seville.

Zahna, a town of Prussian Saxony, 6 m. N. E. of Wittenberg.

Zaina, a town of Algiers, in the province of Constantina, supposed, from some considerable ruins, to have been the ancient city of Zama. It is 23 m. S. E. of Seteef and 46 S. W. of Constantina.

Zaine, a river of Barbary, which separates the kingdoms of Algiers and Tunis, and enters the Mediterranean at the island of Tabarca

Zaire, a river of Congo, which rises in the kingdom of Matamba, flows N. to the extreme borders of Congo, where it turns to the W., then separates the kingdoms of Loango and Congo Proper, and enters the Atlantic Ocean below Soyno, Zalamea, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 12 m. N. of Niebla and 38 W. N. W. of Seville.

Zalamea, a town of Spain in Estremadura, anciently called Iapa. It contains many vestiges of its former splendor, and is 38 m. S. E. of Merida.

Zamora, a strong town of Spain, in Leon and a bishop's see. In its environs fine turquoise stones are found. It is seated on a hill, on the river Duero, over which is a bridge, 32 m. N. by W. of Salamanca and 146 N. W. of Madrid. Long. 5. 56. W., lat. 41. 50. N.

Zamora, a town of Quito, in the neighbourhood of which are rich mines of gold. It is seated near the Andes, 230 m. S. of Quito. Long. 78. 20. W., lat. 4. 6. S.

Zamora, a town of Mexico, in Guadalaxara, 40 m. S. E. of Guadalaxara. Long. 103. 30. W., lat. 20. 52. N.

Zanora, a town of Algiers, in the province of Constantina, 250 m. W. of Hamamet. Long. 6. 25. E., lat. 36. 20. N.

Zamoski, a town of Poland, with a citadel, a cathedral, and several other churches. It is 37 m. S. S. W. of Chelm and 44. W. N. W. of Betz.

Zampago, a town of Mexico, seated on a small lake, 30 m. N. of Mexico.

Zane, a township of Logan Co. Ohio. Pop. 608.

Zanesfield, p.t. Logan Co. Ohio. 47 m. N. W. Columbus.

Zanesville, p.t. Muskingum Co. Ohio, on the Muskingum. Pop. 3,056. It is a very flourishing town with manufactures of glass, paper, woolen, iron, oil, and several mills. The great Cumberland road passes directly through the town.

Zanfara, a kingdom of Negroland, to the S. of Zegzeg, between Cassina and Bornou. The inhabitants are tall in stature, of very black complexion, with broad faces, and savage dispositions. The capital, of the same name, stands on a river that forms a lake N. of Ghana and then flows through that city into the Niger. It is 230 m. N. E. of Ghana and 450 W. S. W. of Bornou. Long. 16. 0. E., lat. 18. 30. N.

Zanguebar, a country on the E. coast of Africa, between 3. N. and 9. S. lat. It includes several petty kingdoms, in which the Portuguese have settlements. The inhabitants are all blacks, with curly woolly hair; and, except those converted by the Portuguese, are either Mahomedans or pagans, the latter much the more numerous. The principal territories are Jubo, Melinda, Mombaza, and Quiloa. The Portuguese trade for slaves, ivory, gold, ostriches' feathers, wax, and drugs. The productions are much the same as in the other parts of Africa, between the tropics.

Zante, an island in the Mediterranean, forming part of the Ionian republic. It is situate near the coast of the Morea, 17 m. S. of the island of Cephalonia, and is 14 m. long and 8 broad. Its principal riches consist in currants, which are cultivated in a large plain, under the shelter of mountains. Here are also the finest peaches in the world, with other choice fruits, and excellent wine and oil. The natives speak both Greek and Italian, though there are a very few Roman Catholics among them; but they have a bishop as well as the Greeks. Pop. 50,000.

Zante, the capital of the foregoing island, is pleasantly situated on an eminence on the E. side of the island, at the bottom of a small bay. The houses are built partly of brick, and partly of wood, and seldom more than one or two stories in height, on account of the frequency of earthquakes; the last visitation of this kind was in 1820, when several hundreds of houses were overthrown. The harbour is capacious and is protected by a mole. 12 m. W. of Cape Tornese, in the Morea. Pop. 20,000.

Zanzibar, an island in the Indian Sea, on the coast of Zanguebar, between the islands of Pemba and Monsia. It abounds in sugar canes and citrons. The inhabitants are Mahometan Arabs, and are governed by a sheik appointed by the imam of Mascat. Long. 41. 0. E., lat. 6. 0. S.

Zara, a city of the Austrian states, capital of a circle of the same name, and of the whole of Austrian Dalmatia, with a harbour. It is situated in a plain, upon a small peninsula, joined to the continent by an isthmus of about 25 paces broad. On the side of the citadel it is very well fortified. Near the church, which the Greeks called St. Helia, are two handsome fluted columns of the Corinthian order, said to have been part of the temple of Juno. This place was formerly more considerable than at present, the number of the inhabitants being now not above 8,000. The circle contains an area of 2,150 square miles, with 100,000 inhabitants. There are very fine paintings in the churches, done by the best masters; and they pretend to have the body of Simeon, brought from Judea, and kept in a shrine with a crust 1 before it. Zara is seated on the gulf of Venice 80 m. S. W. of Jaicza, and 150 S. E. of Venice. Long. 16. 6. E., lat. 44. 30. N.

Zareng, a town of Persia, in the province of Segestan. It is celebrated for its beautiful porcelain, and is seated on the Hirmund, 350 m. E. of Ispahan. Long. 61. 10. E., lat. 32. 28. N.

Zaril, a town of Greece, in the Morea, 22 m. E. of Misitra.

Zamate, a town in the Morea, seated on an eminence 20 m. S. W. of Misitra.

Zarnowitz, a town of Prussia, in Pomerelia, on a bay of the Baltic, 33 m. N. N. W. of Dantzic.

Zaslav, a town of Poland, in Volhymia, seated on the Horia, 30 m. N. N. W. of Constantinow.

Zatmar, a strong town of Hungary, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on a small lake, formed by the river Sames, 50 m. E. by S. of Tockay, and 130 E. of Bana. Long. 22. 34. E., lat. 47. 50. N.

Zator, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Cracow, with a castle; seated on an eminence near the river Vistula, 20 m. S. W. of Cracow and 50 S. E. of Ratibon.

Zaweh, a town of Persia, in the province of Khorasan, situate on the Tedjen, 20 m. from the Caspian Sea, and 80 N. of Mesched.

Zbaras, a town of Austrian Poland, 28 m. E. of Zborow and 68 N. by W of Kamienieck.

Zborow, a town of Austrian Poland, in the circle of Lemburg. Here, in 1649, John Casimir, king of Poland, with 20,000 men, was attacked by 110,000 Cossacks and Tartars, for three days successively, but defended himself so bravely that the latter consented to terms of accommodation. Zborow is 52 m. E. by S. of Lemburg. Long. 25. 46. E., lat. 49. 46. N.

Zealand, or Zealand, an island of Denmark, of a triangular form, 230 m. in circumference, and the largest of the isles belonging to the king of Denmark. It lies at the entrance of the Baltic, having the Categat on the N., the Sound on the E., and the Great Belt on the W. The coast is much intersected by large bays; and within the country are several lakes, which as well as the rivers, abound in fish. It is exceedingly fertile, producing grain of all sorts with excellent pasture and in most parts plenty of wood. It is particularly famous for its breed of horses. Copenhagen is the capital of this island and of the whole kingdom.

Zealand, a province of Holland comprising the ancient county of Zealand and Dutch Flanders bounded on the N. by the isles of Holland, E. by Brabant, S. by Flanders, and W. by the German Ocean. It is composed of several islands, the principal of which are Walcheren, Schowen, N. and S. Beveland, Tolen, Duyveland, and Wolfersdike. The surface is generally level and lies so low that the inhabitants are obliged to defend themselves from encroachments of the sea by vast dykes, which are kept up at great expense. The river Scheldt forms the most of these islands, and the soil of them is fruitful. The province carries on considerable trade in corn, madder, flax salt meat, linen yarn, rapeseed, oil, &c. The greater part of the inhabitants are Calvinists, but there are also many Catholics and Lutherans, and some Mennonite Baptists. The principal towns are Middleburg and Flushing.

Zealand, New, in the Pacific Ocean, was discovered by Tasman in 1642. He traversed the eastern coast from lat. 34. to 43. S. and entered a strait; but, being attacked by the natives soon after he came to an anchor, he did not go ashore. From the time of Tasman the whole country except that part of the coast which was seen by him, remained altogether unknown, and was by many supposed to make part of a southern continent, till 1770, when it was circumnavigated by captain Cook, who found it to consist of two large islands, separated by the strait above mentioned, which is four leagues broad, and to which he gave his own name. Along the coast there are many small islands; and it is indented by deep bays, affording excellent shelter for shipping and abundant supplies of wood and water. There are also several rivers capable of receiving large vessels, and in which the spring-tide rises nearly ten feet perpendicularly. Of the two islands, the southernmost, called by the natives Tavai, or Tovy Poenamoo, is for the most part mountainous and barren. As far inland as the eye can reach, nothing appears but mountains of stupendous height, consisting of rocks that are totally naked, except where they are covered with snow, but the land bordering on the sea-coast is thickly clothed with wood, almost down to the water's edge. The northernmost island, called Eaeino-mauwe, has a much better appearance. It is, indeed, not only hilly, but mountainous; yet even the hills and mountains are covered with wood; and every valley has a rivulet of excellent water.

The soil of these valleys, and the plains, of which there are many overgrown with wood, is in general light, but fertile; and it is supposed that every kind of European grain, plants, and fruits, would flourish here with the utmost luxuriance. The whole extent of the two islands is estimated by Mr Nicholas, who visited them in 1814 and 1815, at 62,160 sq. m. or 39,782,400 sq. acres. The winters are milder than in England, and the summers not hotter, though more equally warm. There are forests of vast extent, full of the straightest and largest timber, fit for building of any kind. The only native quadrupeds are dogs and rats: the former are domestic, and for food; the latter, though not numerous, are also eaten. The birds, like the vegetables, are almost entirely peculiar to the country. The creeks swarm with fish, which are equally delicious with those of Europe. The rocks are furnished with great quantities of excellent muscles, one sort of which measures above a foot in length, and with great variety of other shell-fish. The men are stout and fleshy, but not corpulent, and are exceedingly vigorous and active. The women in general are smaller than the men, and are chiefly distinguished by the softness of their voices. The bodies of both sexes are marked with black stains, called amoco, which is the same as tattooing at Otaheite. Their dress is also the same with that of the natives of that island. Their houses are miserable lodgings; and their only furniture consists in a few small baskets, in which they put their fishing-hooks and other trifles. Their food consists chiefly of fish, with which, instead of bread, they eat the root of a kind of fern, which they search over the fire, and then beat with a stick, till the bark or dry outside falls off. Besides their dogs, they also contrive to kill birds; and in most parts of the northern island they have sweet potatoes, cocoas, and yams; but in the southern nothing is raised by cultivation. Their cookery consists wholly in roasting and baking, which last is performed in the same manner as at Otaheite. The women eat in common with the men, and but little subordination or distinction of rank is observed among them.

From Cape Kidnappers, in lat. 39. 43., for upwards of 80 leagues to the northward, the people acknowledge one sovereign, called Teratu, and under him several subordinate chiefs, who probably administer justice; but whether his authority or hereditary or delegated is uncertain. This part of the coast is by far the most populous; tillage, weaving, and the other arts of peace, being here best known and most practised. The canoes are more decorated, the plantations more numerous, and the clothes and carving finer, than any where else. In other parts the inhabitants are scattered along the coast, in single families, or in large tribes, in a state of perpetual hostility with each other. For such continual wars, and the inhuman banquet that is the consequence of victory, among people in other respects mild and gentle, perhaps no better reason can be assigned than that what at first originated in necessity has been perpetuated by habit, and exasperated by revenge

In the year 1814 several missionary stations were established in New Zealand, for the purpose of civilizing the ignorant natives, and instructing them in the Christian religion. In 1819 the settlements were visited by Mr. Marsden, when a tract of land, consisting of 13,000 acres, was purchased from one of the chiefs, and the missionaries were settled on it. According to the latest accounts, they still continue to struggle against the obstacles opposed to their progress from the ferocity and superstition of the natives. Among other enterprises they have succeeded in reducing the language of New Zealand to writing, and have constructed a grammar for the benefit of such new missionaries as may be inclined to enter on this field of labor. Several New Zealanders who were brought to New Holland, and had there an opportunity of witnessing the arts and improvements of civilized life, have since rendered great service to the missions.

Zebid, a city of Arabia, in the province of Yemen. It was once very considerable, but its walls are demolished, and the present buildings scarcely occupy the half of its ancient extent. It is seated on a river, 16 m. from the Red Sea, and 140 N. of Mocha. Long. 44. 23. E., lat. 15. 10. N.

Zebu, or Sebu, one of the Philippine Islands between those of Leyta and Negros. It is 149 m. long and 30 broad, and has a town of the same name, on the E. coast. Long. 122. 30. E., lat. 10. 36. N.

Zossen, a town and castle of Brandenburg, situate on the Notte, 19 m. S. of Berlin.

Zout-Pan, a curious salt lake, in the country of the Hottentots, lying a few m. N. of Pointe Pardon, in a plain much above the level of the sea, and between 3 and 4 m. in circumference. At some seasons of the year it is formed into an entire mass of fine white salt, with a hard crust resembling ice.

Zoran, a town of the kingdom of Tunis, famous for the dyeing scarlet caps and the bleaching of linen, 36 m. S. W. of Tunis.

Zuckmantel, a town of Austrian Silesia, and a bishop's see. It has mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron, and is 15 m. S. of Neisse.

Zuecla, a town of the kingdom of Fezzan, situate in a district of remarkable fertility. The remnants of ancient buildings, the number and size of the cisterns, and the construction of the vaulted caves, intended perhaps as repositories for corn, exhibit wonderful vestiges of its ancient splendor. It is 60 m. E. N. E. of Mourzook. Long. 16. 34. E., lat. 27. 59. N.

Zug, a small canton of Switzerland, containing an area of 120 sq. m., bounded on the E. and N. by Zurich, W. by Lucern, and S. by Schwytz. It is rich in pastureage, has plenty of various kinds of stone fruit, as well as walnuts and chestnuts, and wine of a very acid flavor. The inhabitants estimated at 15,500, are Roman Catholics.

Zug, the capital of the foregoing canton, contains several handsome churches, a good town-house, &c., and is seated on a lake of its name, 12 m. N. W. of Schwytz. Long. 8. 24. E., lat. 47. 4. N.

Zuider Zee, a great bay of the German Ocean, which extends from N. to S. in Holland, between the provinces of Friesland, Overijssel, Gelderland and North Holland.

Zulauf, or Salny, a town of Prussian Silesia, 5 m. S. W. of Militsch.

Zullichau, a town of Prussia in the province of Brandenburg, with a castle which stands without the walls of the town, and has a rampart and ditches. The suburbs contain more houses than the town itself, and among them is a large orphan house, to which is annexed a school, an academy, &c. Here are good manufactures, and the vicinity produces much corn and wine. In 1759 a battle was fought near this town between the Prussians and Russians in which the former were defeated. It is situate in a plain, near the Oder, 24 m. E. by N. of Crossen. Long. 15. 52. E., lat. 52. 9. N.

Zulpha, or Jufa, a town of Persia, almost close to Ispahan, to which it is a sort of suburb, and separated from it by the river Sanderon. It was peopled by a colony of Armenians, brought hither by Shah Abbas, and contains several churches and monasteries.

Zulz, a town of Austrian Silesia, in the principality of Oppeln, 14 m. E. by S. of Neisse and 26 S. S. W. of Oppeln.

Zulz, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, on the river Inn, 26 m. S. E. of Coire.

Zumampa, a town of Tucuman, on the river Dolco, 110 m. S. S. E. of St. Jago del Estero.

Zumaya, a town of Biscay, near the coast. 51 m. W. by S. of St. Sebastian.

Zumpango, a town of Mexico, 100 m. N. by E. of Acapulco and 105 S. of Mexico.

Zurich, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N. by Schaffhausen, E. by Thurgaw and the county of Tockenburg, S. by Glaris, Schwytz, and Zug, and W. by Lucern and the county of Baden. Zurich was admitted a member of the Helvetic confederacy in 1351, and obtained the privilege of being the first canton in rank; it is also the most considerable in extent both of territory and power, next to that of Bern, having an area of 950 sq. m., with upwards of 180,000 inhabitants. It abounds in wine and excellent pasture; but the supply of corn is not sufficient for interior consumption. The inhabitants are all Calvinists; and two-thirds of them derive their livelihood by spinning thread and silk, and making linen for the manufacture of the town.

Zurich, a city of Switzerland, capital of the foregoing canton, stands at the northern extremity of the lake of Zurich, and occupies both sides of the rapid and transparent Limat, which issues from that lake and divides the town into two unequal parts, communicating by three bridges. It was formerly an imperial city, and is one of the best built in this country, but the streets are narrow and the houses high. Zurich was the first town in Switzerland that separated from the church of Rome. Among its charitable foundations are an orphan-house, an hospital for incurables, that for the sick of all nations, which usually contains between 600 and 700 patients, and the Almosen-Amt, or foundation for the poor, which puts out children as apprentices, and distributes money, clothes, and books, to poor persons, not of the town only, but of the canton, to the amount of upwards of £5,000 a year. The inhabitants carry on manufactures of muslins, cottons, linens, and silk handkerchiefs. It is 35 m. S. W. of Constance, 40 S. E. of Basil, and 55 N. E. of Bern. Long. 8. 32. E., lat. 47. 20. N.

Zurich, a lake of Switzerland, 24 m. long and 4 broad. The adjacent country is finely cultivated and well peopled; and the S. part of the lake appears bounded by the stupendous mountains of Schwytz and Glarus. The scenery is picturesque, lively and diversified. The river Limmat runs through the whole length of this lake to Zurich.

Zurita, a town of Spain, in New Castile, with a castle, seated on the Tagus, 38 m. E. of Madrid.

Zurz, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, seated on the Inn, 20 m. N. N. W. of Bormio.

* * * PENITENTIARIES. In the description of Wetherfield, an account of the penitentiary of Connecticut, was inadvertently omitted. This establishment is on the plan of the Auburn prison, in New York, and its discipline is of the same general description. The system is very complete, and by the moral education of its inmates, great improvement in their characters and manners is gradually effected. The Auburn prison has been occupied about twelve years. Service is performed in its chapel on the Sabbath, and a Sunday School is in successful operation. In the year ending September 1831, the labor of the convicts more than covered the expenditures of the establishment. Number of convicts Dec. 1, 1831, 646. The prison at Sing Sing is essentially on the same plan.

BANKING AND MONIED

INSTITUTIONS.

The Bank of Amsterdam was established in 1609, and is a bank merely of deposit and transfer: it neither makes, loans, nor circulates bills.

The Bank of Hamburg was established in 1619. The amount of its deposit, varies from 10 to 15 millions of dollars.

The Bank of England is one of deposit, discount and circulation. It was established in 1694, and its original capital was £1,200,000, which in 1781 had been increased to 11,642,400. The amount of loans to the government has increased with the capital of the bank. It appears by some recent discussions in Parliament, that the gross returns to the bank, from its transactions with the government, are £1,390,898 per annum, the National debt being 860 millions.

The Bank of France was established in 1803, by the union of three private banking institutions of Paris, with a capital of 45,000,000 francs. This like the Bank of England, is a bank of deposit, discount and circulation. The bank has coined, from 1820 to 1828 about 118,400,000 francs. The amount of bullion and coin in the coffers of the bank at the same time was 240,000,000 francs. The number of shares was 69,000.

Of the other banks of Europe, that of Genoa was once the most considerable. Some of the other principal banks of Europe are those of Altona, Berlin, Copenhagen, Madrid, Naples, Christiana, Rome, Rotterdam, Stockholm, Stuttgard, Vienna, and the Imperial banks of Russia.

The Bank of the United States, at Philadelphia, has 25 branches at the following places.

Portland,	Utica,	Norfolk,	New Orleans
Portsmouth,	Buffalo,	Fayetteville,	Nashville,
Burlington,	Pittsburg,	Charleston,	Lexington,

A BRIEF COMMERCIAL DICTIONARY.

ABACIA, a kind of hemp or flax, made from the fibrous part of an Indian plantain; the white makes very fine cloth, but the gray is used for cordage and cables.

Abrotanizies, a kind of coral like southern wood, whence it takes its name, according to Clusius. It is found on rocks in the bottom of the sea.

Acacia, a species of mimosa, Egyptian thorn. The flowers of this plant are used, by the Chinese, to produce that yellow color, which we see in their silks and stuffs. Gum Arabic is produced from a species of acacia.

Achia, a sort of cane which grows in the East Indies, is pickled green, and sent to Europe in stone or earthen jars.

Acori, or Blue Coral, is fished up on the coast of Africa, from Rio-del-re to the river of the Camarones, where the Dutch traffic for it.

Adamant, an ancient name for the diamond. It is also used for a very hard species of iron, and for the magnet or loadstone.

Adamantine Spar, a stone of peculiar hardness, approaching to that of the diamond. It will cut glass easily and mark rock crystal. It is found in China and India, and, as M. Pini alleges, in Italy.

Adatis, a fine Bengal muslin, 13 yards to the piece.

Adenos, a kind of cotton, otherwise called marina cotton. It comes from Aleppo by the way of Marseilles.

Astuary, in geography, denotes an arm of the sea which runs a good way within land.

Afoune, or Flanne, a kind of flax, which comes from Egypt by way of Marseilles and Leghorn.

Agate, a genus of semi-pellucid gems, which takes its name from the river Achates, on the banks of which it is found. These gems are composed of crystal, colored by a large quantity of earth. Agates are arranged according to the different colors of their grounds; white, reddish, yellow and green. Of these there are many varieties, some of them having natural representations of animals, trees, letters, &c. No country affords finer agates, or in greater abundance, than Germany. They are also found in France, Great Britain, Sicily, Siberia and the East Indies. Agates may be stained artificially by a solution of silver in nitric acid, and afterwards exposing the part to the sun.

Agio, a bank term in Holland, expressing the difference between money, bank money, or current money and cash. It is synonymous with premium, when the bank money is worth more than the same nominal amount of the current coin, and with discount, when its value is less.

Agris, a stone which serves instead of current coin, among the Issinias, a nation of Africa, on the coast of Guinea, where the river Asbin runs, near the Gold Coast; it is of a greenish blue color, without any lustre, hard, but does not take a good polish; they give its weight in gold for it.

Alabaster, a kind of stone resembling marble, but softer. It is of various colors, but the white shining alabaster is most common; it is used by sculptors, for the formation of small statues, vases, columns, &c. It is found in many parts of England, especially in Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire.

Alcanna, a drug used in dyeing, which comes from Egypt and other parts of the Levant.

Alcohol, is a name applied to highly rectified spirit of wine. When pure, it is perfectly the same whether obtained from brandy, wine, or any other fluid which has undergone the spirituous fermentation. It is a light, transparent, colorless liquid, of a sharp, penetrating, agreeable smell, and of a warm, stimulating taste. It is extremely inflammable, and burns with a pale blue flame, scarcely visible in bright daylight. Alcohol is used in medicine and the arts for a variety of purposes.

Alder, a tree according to the classification of botanists of the birch kind. It is common in Europe and Asia, and the United States of America. The wood of the alder is in great demand for machinery, and is peculiarly adapted for all kinds of work which are to be kept constantly in water. With the addition of coppers, the bark yields a black dye, used to a considerable extent in coloring cotton.

Ale, a fermented liquor, obtained from an infusion of malt; differing from strong beer chiefly in having a less proportion of hops. The duties on beer and ale make a principal branch of the revenues in England.

Alkalies, a class of saline substances, possessing in general the following properties: they have an acrid taste; they change the blue juices of vegetables to a green, and the yellow to a brown color; and render oil miscible with water. They are mainly characterized, however, by a power of combining with acids so as to impair the activity of the latter and form neutral salts.

Alkanet, a dyeing drug, which grows naturally in the Levant. The root imparts an elegant red color to oily substances, and improves the color of mahogany.

Allspice. See Pimento.

Almagra, a fine deep-red ochre, with some admixture of purple, very heavy, of a dense, yet friable structure, and rough dusty surface. It is used in painting, and in medicine as an astringent.

Almonds, a kind of medicinal fruit, contained in a hard shell, which is enclosed in a tough cottony skin. Almonds are of two kinds, sweet and bitter: the Jordan almond is of the first quality; next the Valencia (a smaller sort of about half the price), and the inferior almonds are from Barbary, whence principally come the bitter ones. From the port of Malaga in Spain come the finest almonds, both in the shell and kernel. In medicinal cases, the oil from almonds is found useful; and that extracted from the bitter one, if dropped into the ear, proves effectual against deafness. Almonds are imported in casks, boxes, and serons.

Aloes, the inspissated juice of the plant aloe, produced in many of the hot climates. It is brought from Jamaica and Barbadoes, in both of which islands large quantities are prepared, and generally conveyed in the shells or skins of large gourds. The medicinal properties of aloes have been long known.

Aloes Wood, the product of a tree growing in China, and some of the Indian islands.

Alquicon, or Arquifou, a sort of leaden ore, which, when broken, looks like antimony. It is used by potters to give a green vanish to their works.

Alum, a mineral substance composed of a peculiar earth termed alumine, and sulphuric acid; that sold under the name of common alum, contains a portion of potash and ammonia. Most of the alum to be met with is artificially prepared. Native alum, which contains a greater quantity of aluminous earth and a portion of iron, is found at Götting in Austria, in Carinthia, in the clefts and caverns on Stromboli, the Solfataro near Naples, the grotto of San Germano, Hiseeno, and other places in Italy. It is found in the United States in mica-slate rocks. Alum is extremely useful for dyeing and other purposes; its importance, in the arts, is very great and its annual consumption is immense.

Amber, a pellucid and very hard in flammable substance, of a fragrant smell, and possessed of a resinous lustre. Its natural color is a fine pale yellow, but it is often made white and sometimes black; by friction it becomes strongly electric. It is found in masses from the size of a coarse sand to that of a man's head, and occurs in beds of bituminous wood situated upon the shores of the Adriatic seas; also in Poland, France, Italy and Denmark. More recently it has been found in the United States, at Cape Sable in Maryland. Amber frequently contains flies and other insects, curiously preserved: it is manufactured into beads, crosses, and other ornaments.

Ambergris, a substance found floating in the sea near the coasts of various tropical countries, and also taken from the intestines of the spermaceti whale, where it is supposed to originate. Its color is a yellowish or blackish white; its odor is very agreeable, and hence arises its only use. In the state of an alcoholic solution, it is added to lavender-water, tooth-powder, &c. to which it communicates its fragrance. Ambergris is chiefly found in the Atlantic Ocean, on the seacoast of Brazil, of the E. Indies, China, Japan and the Molucca islands; but much of it comes from the Bahama islands.

Amber Seed, a small odoriferous seed used as a perfume. It is sometimes brought from Egypt, but is likewise imported from Martinico.

Amethyst, a gem of a purple color which, in its purest state, is of the same hardness and at least of equal value with the ruby or sapphire. It is found in the E. and W. Indies, and in several parts of Europe.

Ammonia, an alkaline substance, which, in a state of purity, is in form of a gas, of a very pungent smell, extremely volatile. It may be obtained from all animal bodies in a state of putrefaction, and is found native in combination with muriatic acid, in crystallized masses, called sal ammoniac, in the neighborhood of volcanoes, in some of the mountains of Tartary and Thibet, and in the waters of some of the lakes in Tuscany. This salt is applied to many useful purposes; a considerable portion of it is consumed by dyers, copersmiths, tanners, &c.

Anath, or Anatto, a kind of buff-colored dye, which has acquired the name of Nanken, from Nanking in China, whence the calico so colored first came. It is brought from Brazil.

Anchor, in maritime affairs, is a very large and heavy iron instrument, with a double hook at one end, and a ring at the other, by which it is fastened to a cable. It is cast into the bottom of the sea, or rivers, where taking its hold, it keeps ships from being drawn away by the wind, tide, or current. There are several kinds of anchors: 1. The sheet anchor, which is the largest, and is never used but in violent storms, to hinder the ship from being driven ashore. 2. The two bowers, which are used for ships to ride in a harbor. 3. The stream anchor. 4. The grapnel.

Anchovies, the name of a small fish commonly in the Mediterranean. It is much used in sauces from the excellence of its flavor.

And, the plant from which indigo is made.

Aninga, a root which grows in the Antilles islands, and is used for refining sugar.

Anise, a small seed of an oblong shape. It is cultivated in Germany, but the best comes from Spain.

Antimony, a bluish-white, brittle metal, of a scaly or foliated texture. It is used as an ingredient in the manufacture of pewter, and type-metal. There are mines of antimony in Germany and many parts of France.

Aquafortis, nitric acid in a diluted state. It is much used by dyers, calico-printers, &c.

Arauco, a silver ore found only in Potosi, and in the single mine there of Catamito.

Arb, a nominal money used in accounts in India, equal to five shillings sterling.

Argol, tartar or the lees of wine used by dyers.

Arquifoux, a sort of lead ore, used by potters to give their works a green varnish.

Arrack, a spirituous liquor imported from the E. Indies, used as a dram and in punch.

Arrowroot, a kind of starch manufactured from the roots of a plant which is cultivated in the E. and W. Indies.

Arsenic, a metal of very common occurrence, being found in combination with nearly all of the metals in their native ores. It is usually seen in white, glassy, translucent masses, to which form it is reduced by fusion from a powdery state. It is one of the most virulent poisons known, not only when taken into the stomach, but when applied to a wound, or even when its vapor is inspired.

Asbestos, a kind of mineral substance, of a woolly texture, endowed with the property of resisting fire.

Ash, a well-known tree, the timber of which is useful in making implements of husbandry and for other purposes.

Asparagus, an esculent plant, the heads of which are useful for the table and the roots in medicine.

Assafetida, a resinous gum of an extremely powerful odor, procured from the root of a large umbelliferous plant, which grows in the mountains of some parts of Persia.

Auton, a sort of bark which resembles cinnamon, but is paler and thicker. It comes from the Levant, and is an ingredient in the carmine dye.

BAIZE, a sort of coarse, open, woollen stuff, having a long nap, sometimes frizzed and sometimes not. It is manufactured to a great extent in different parts of England.

Bamboo, a plant which multiplies very much by its root, whence springs a ramous or brachy tuft, after the manner of the European reeds. The Indian bamboo is the largest kind of cane that is known.

Bandannas, silk handkerchiefs, generally red spotted with white, manufactured in the E. Indies.

Bariga, a species of raw silk brought from the E. Indies.

Barilla, the name of a sea plant which grows very plentifully on the coast of Spain. It abounds with soda; and the impure ashes of the plant, containing that salt in great abundance, form an important article of commerce. The ashes themselves are commonly called barilla.

Bark, Peruvian, the produce of a tree, which is the spontaneous growth of many parts of S. America, but more particularly of Peru. This valuable medicine was first introduced into Europe by the Jesuits, whence it was formerly called Jesuit's bark.

Barley, a sort of grain very well known, principally used for making beer.

Barnacles, a kind of shell-fish in the W. Indies, which penetrate into the bottoms of vessels, and sometimes injure them so materially as to give the sheathing the appearance of a honey-comb.

Barometer, a machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere.

Bazaar, a place for trade among the eastern nations.

Beaver, an amphibious animal, formerly common in England, but now extirpated. It abounds in N. America, where the skins make a considerable article of exportation.

Beech, one of our handsomest forest trees, common in almost all the N. England and middle states.

Beer, a generic term for drink extracted from malt. It may be extracted from most kinds of grain after having undergone the process of malting.

Bergamot, the name of a fragrant essence extracted from a species of citron.

Beryl, a pellucid gem of a bluish-green color, found in the E. Indies and about the gold mines of Peru, and especially in Siberia and Tartary. Its value is trifling compared with the ruby, topaz, &c.

Birch, a forest tree, easily known by its smooth appearance and silvery color of its bark.

Bismuth, a considerable heavy metal, of a much harder and firmer texture than antimony. It causes the metals that are difficult of fusion to melt with a much smaller degree of fire than they otherwise would do.

Black Lead, a mineral found in great abundance in Cumberland, England, as also in many parts of Spain, particularly in the neighborhood of Malaga. It is used in the manufacture of pencils, also for blackening the front of stoves, grates, &c.

Bombazine, a kind of silk stuff originally manufactured at Milan, but now extensively in G. Britain.

Brass, a substance of a greenish color, brought from the E. Indies in great masses: it is used as a flux for metals.

Bosphorus, in geography, a narrow strait or arm of the sea.

Bur-wood, is a yellowish, hard, and solid wood, and takes a good polish. It is used in works of sculpture, and in instruments of music, such as flutes, nagelets, &c.

Brandy, a spirituous and inflammable liquor, extracted from wine and other liquors, and likewise from the husks of grapes by distillation. Brandy is prepared in many of the wine countries of Europe, and with peculiar excellence in Languedoc, in Anjou, and other parts of the south of France, whence is the Cognac brandy.

Brass, a fictitious metal, made of copper and zinc in proper proportions.

Brazil-Wood, so called because it came first from Brazil, a province in S. America. It is of a red color, and very heavy. It is much used in turned work, and takes a good polish; but is chiefly used in dying.

Brazil-otto, the worst species of Brazil-wood: it comes from the Antilles islands.

Bristles, the strong hair standing on the back of a hog or wild boar. They are imported principally from Russia.

Buckram, a sort of coarse cloth, made of hemp hemmed, calendered and dyed several colors.

Buckshot, a grain which is native of Africa, but so hardy that it will flourish in almost any country. It is extensively cultivated in different parts of the U. States, and from the flour an excellent article of food is produced.

Buffalo, or Bison, a wild bull, found to large herds in different parts of America. The hides are exported in large quantities.

Bulbs, the roots of several sorts of flowers, as tulips, hyacinths, &c., of which large quantities are imported from Holland.

Bullion, uncoined gold or silver in the mass.

CACHALOT, a large fish of the whale species, from the brain of which spermæci is extracted.

Cajuput Oil, the volatile oil obtained from the leaves of the cajuput-tree, which is common on the mountains of Amboyna, and the other Molucca islands. It is of a green color, very limpid, lighter than water, of a strong smell resembling camphor, and of a pungent taste.

Calabar Skin, the Siberian squirrel skin used in making muffs, tippets, &c.

Calamanco, a woollen stuff principally manufactured in the Netherlands but also in England.

Calico, a cotton cloth, which derives its name from Calicut, a city of India, from which it was first brought. The art of calico-printing is supposed to have been practised in India more than 2,000 years, though it was not introduced into England till the year 1676.

Cambrie, a species of very fine white linen, first made at Cambry, in French Flanders, whence it derives its appellation.

Camel, a large beast of burden, used throughout all the eastern countries.

Camlet, a plain stuff, composed of a warp and woof, which is manufactured on a loom, with two treadles, as linens are. Camlets are of different kinds, as goats' hair, wool, silk camlets.

Camphor, a white, resinous production, of peculiar and powerful smell, extracted from trees which grow in the islands of the E. Indies and in China.

Canal, a kind of artificial river, made for the convenience of water carriage.

Cantharides, flies of a shining green color, found adhering to certain kinds of trees in Spain, Italy and the southern part of France. They are commonly called Spanish flies, and are of extensive use in medicine.

Canvas, a very clean unbleached cloth of hemp or flax, woven very regularly in little squares.

Cape, a promontory or headland, running out with a point into the sea.

Capers, the full grown buds of a low shrub generally growing out of the joints of old walls or fissures of rocks in the warm climates of Europe.

Carbon, a substance which has been found to exist in a state of absolute purity in the diamond. It is the base of common charcoal, which is an oxide of carbon.

Carbuncle, a precious stone of the ruby kind, of a very rich, glowing blood-red color.

Casavilla, the bark of a tree growing plentifully in the Bahama islands, of a fragrant smell, and moderately bitter taste.

Cassada, a mealy substance, derived from the root of a plant called Magnoe, a native of the W. Indies. From the pure flour of cassada is formed the substance called tapera.

Cassia, the bark of a tree, which grows in the E. and W. Indies and in China. It is thicker and coarser than cinnamon, but of a similar taste. It is mostly imported from China.

Caster Oil, an oil extracted from the seeds of a plant which grows in the E. and W. Indies, and in the U. States. Its uses in medicine are well known.

Cedar, a tree common in America, the wood of which is of a reddish color, and incorruptible.

Chestnut, a handsome forest tree producing a sweet and soft-shelled fruit.

Chints, a fine printed calico first manufactured in the E. Indies, but imitated in other countries.

Chocolate, a kind of paste, or cake, prepared chiefly from the cacao-nut, a production of the W. Indies and S. America.

Chronometer, a timepiece of a peculiar construction, at present much used by navigators in determining the longitude at sea.

Cider, a liquor extracted from the juice of apples, and forming a considerable portion of agricultural produce in this country.

Cinolia, the name of the earth of which tobacco-pipes are made. It is found in different parts of England.

Cinnamon, the under bark of the branches of a tree of the bay tribe, which is chiefly found in the island of Ceylon, but which grows in Malabar and other parts of the E. Indies.

Citron, an agreeable fruit resembling a lemon in color, taste and smell. It comes to us preserved or candied from Madeira.

Civet, a perfume taken from the civet-cat.

Clove, the unexpanded flower-bud of an East Indian tree, somewhat resembling the laurel in its height, and in the shape of its leaves.

Coal, a combustible substance composed chiefly of carbon and bitumen. That which contains much bitumen is highly inflammable, and burns with a bright flame: the anthracite, in which the carbon predominates, burns less vividly. Numerous varieties of coal exist: it abounds in almost every country, and inexhaustible mines are found in different parts of the U. States.

Coal, a metal found in the form of an ore, in Saxony, Sweden, and some parts of England.

Cochineal, a drug, in many respects approaching to the nature of kermes. It is brought to us from Mexico, where it is collected in immense quantities, being a species of insect which affords a deep crimson dye. Cochineal is also raised in Peru and several other parts of Spanish America, and becomes every year an article of greater importance to the commerce of that country.

Cocoa-Nut, a woody fruit, of an oval shape, covered with a fibrous husk, and lined internally with a white, firm and fleshy kernel. It is a native of Africa, the E. and W. Indies, and S. America.

Cod, a well known fish that is caught in immense quantities on the banks of Newfoundland, and the other sandbanks that lie off the coasts of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, and N. England.

Coffee, the berries of a shrub common in Arabia Felix. The best coffee is imported from Mocha in the Red Sea. That next in esteem is raised in Java and the E. Indies; and that of lowest price is raised in the W. Indies and Brazil.

Copal, a substance of great importance as a varnish, obtained from the rhus copallinum, a tree in N. America.

Copper, a metal, next to iron in specific gravity, but lighter than gold, silver or lead. It is found in N. and S. America, in most European countries, and in Africa and Japan.

Copperas, a name given to the sulphate of green vitriol, used in dyeing black.

Coral, a marine zoophyte that becomes after removal from the water as hard as a stone, and of a fine red color. It is found in the Mediterranean and in the Ethiopic Ocean, about Cape Negro.

Cardage, a term used in general for all sorts of cord, made use of in rigging ships.

Cork, the bark of a species of oak which grows in Spain, Portugal and on the French side of the Pyrenean mountains.

Cornelian, a precious stone of which there are three kinds, red, yellow and white. The finest cornelians are those of the E. Indies; but very beautiful ones are found in many parts of Europe.

Cotton, a soft downy substance found on the gossypium or cotton-tree. It is separated from the seeds of the plant by a mill, and then spun and prepared for all sorts of fine work, as stockings, quilts, &c. Cotton was found indigenous in America. North and S. America, Egypt and India produce most of the cotton consumed, and the greater part is manufactured in England and the U. States. The cotton-gin is a machine invented by Mr. Whitney, an American, for the purpose of cleansing cotton.

Crape, a light, transparent stuff, like gauze, made of raw silk, gummed and twisted on the mill, and woven without crossing. It is manufactured in France and various parts of G. Britain.

Cream of Tartar, a combination of tartaric acid with potash. It comes to us from Leghorn, and other parts of Italy.

Crystal, the name of a very large class of fossils, hard, pellucid, and naturally colorless.

Currants, a smaller kind of grapes, brought principally from Zante and Cephalonia.

Curcuma, a plant which is native of India. The root communicates a beautiful but perishable yellow dye, with alum.

Cypress, the cypress tree is a dark colored evergreen, which grows abundantly in the western parts of the U. States. The name of this tree is derived from the island of Cyprus, in the Mediterranean, where it still grows in great luxuriance.

DAMASK, an ingeniously manufactured stuff, the ground of which is bright and glossy, with vines, flowers, and figures interwoven. It is made in France and other countries of Europe; and is also brought from India and China.

Dates, the fruit of the date palm, a tree inhabiting the north of Africa, and which is also cultivated in Italy and Spain. This fruit is an oval, soft, fleshy drupe, having a very hard stone, with a longitudinal furrow on one side, and when fresh, possesses a delicious perfume and taste.

Diamond, a precious stone which has been known from the remotest ages. It is the hardest of all bodies; the best tempered steel makes no impression on it. The first water in diamonds means the greatest purity and perfection of their complexion, which ought to be that of the purest water. Diamond-mines are found chiefly in the E. Indies; and in Brazil, in S. America.

Diaper, a sort of fine flowered linen commonly used in table-cloths, napkins, &c.

Dimity, a species of cross-barred stuff entirely composed of cotton, similar in fabric to fustian.

Dock, in maritime affairs, is an artificial basin, by the side of a harbor, made convenient either for the building or repairing of ships. It is of two sorts: 1. Dry dock, where the water is kept out by great flood-gates, till the ship is built or repaired, when the gates are opened, and the water let in to float and launch her. 2. Wet docks, a place into which the ship may be hauled, out of the tide's way, and so dock herself, or seek for herself a place to lie in.

Down, the fine feathers from the breasts of several birds, particularly that of the duck kind. That of the elder duck is the most valuable.

Doeb, a sort of thick woollen cloth, woven purposely for great coats.

Dragon's Blood, a gummy resinous substance, which is brought from the E. Indies. A portion of dragon's blood in spirit of wine is used for staining marble, to which it gives a red tinge.

Drawback, in commerce, an allowance made to merchants on the reexportation of certain goods, which in some cases consists of the whole, in others of a part, of the duties which have been paid upon the importation.

Drug, in a commercial sense, is applied to every article of a medicinal nature, such as gums, jalap, senna, &c.

Duck, a sort of strong brown cloth used chiefly by sail-makers. The best comes from Russia.

EBONY WOOD, is brought from the Indies, exceedingly hard, and heavy, susceptible of a very fine polish. The best is a jet black, free of veins and rind, very massive, astringent, and of an acrid, pungent taste.

Embargo, an arrest on ships or merchandise, by public authority.

Emerald, one of the most beautiful of all the class of colored gems; which perfect its color is a pure green. Emeralds are found in the E. Indies and in many parts of America; they are also met with in Silesia, Bohemia and other parts of Europe.

Emery, in natural history, a rich iron ore found in large masses, extremely hard and very heavy. It is imported from the island of Naxos, where it exists in great abundance, and is also found in many parts of Europe.

Ermine, a valuable fur which is obtained from a species of weasel, abounding in all the cold countries, especially Russia, Norway and Lapland. The fur is short, soft, and silky, and is in great request. The common weasel of the United States is white in winter, and is the proper ermine of Europe.

Ether, a very volatile fluid produced by the distillation of alcohol with an acid.

FEATHERS, make a considerable article of commerce, being principally used for plumes, ornaments, filling of beds, writing-pens, &c. Eider down is imported from Denmark; the ducks that supply it being inhabitants of Hudson's Bay, Greenland, Iceland, Norway and N. America.

Felucca, a little vessel with oars, frequent in the Mediterranean.

Figs, the best are those which come from Turkey, packed in cases. Many are brought from Faro of a small and inferior kind, also from the south of France. Vast quantities are exported from Spain and Portugal.

Flannel, a kind of slight, loose, woollen stuff, composed of a wool and warp, and woven on a loom with two treadles, after the manner of baize. The flannels of England and of Wales are most esteemed.

Flax, a plant which is cultivated principally for the fibres yielded by the bark, of which linen cloth is made. The seeds yield an oil well known in commerce, under the name of linseed oil. Flax is now extensively cultivated in the U. States, and its various products have become with us important articles of commerce.

Flour, the meal of wheat-corn, finely ground and sifted.

Fossil, in chemistry, denotes, in general, all things dug out of the earth, either native or extraneous.

Fox-Skins, an article of considerable export from N. America, employed in the making of muffs, tippets, &c.

Fuller's Earth, a species of clay, of a grayish ash-colored brown, in all degrees from very pale to almost black, and it has generally something of a greenish cast. It is used by fullers to take grease out of their cloth before they apply the soap.

Fur, the skins of quadrupeds, which are dressed with alum without depriving them of their hair; the skins chiefly used are those of the sable, ermine, bear, beaver, hare, &c. They are principally exported from N. America and Russia.

Fustian, a kind of cotton stuff, which seems as if it was waled or ribbed on one side; the principal manufacture of this article is carried on at Manchester, in England, and its neighborhood.

Fustic, a yellow wood, used in dyeing, principally brought from the islands of Barbadoes, Tobago, &c. The color it yields is a fine golden yellow.

GALANGAL, a root which is brought from China. It is an excellent stomachic.

Galbanum, a gum issuing from the stem of an umbelliferous plant, growing in Persia and many parts of Africa.

Galton, a sort of ship employed in Spain, in the commerce of the W. Indies.

Galloon, a narrow, thick kind of ferret or lace, used to edge or border clothes, sometimes made of wool or thread, and at others of gold or silver, but commonly of mohair or silk.

Galls, are tumors, produced by the punctures of insects on several species of the oak tree. Other trees are liable to the same accidents, and produce galls of various forms and sizes, but those of the oak only are used in medicine, and for the purposes of dyeing and making ink. The galls which come from Aleppo are the most valuable.

Gamboge, a gum-resin, of a deep yellow or orange color, brought chiefly from Cambodia in the E. Indies.

Garuel, a very beautiful gem of a red color, with an admixture of blue.

Gas, among chemists, a term made use of to denote all the aerial and permanently elastic fluids, except the atmospheric air.

Gauze, a very slight, thin, open kind of stuff, made of silk, sometimes of thread, there are also figured gauzes, and some with gold or silver flowers on a silk ground; the latter come to us principally from China.

Geneva, or Gia, an ordinary malt spirit, distilled a second time, with the addition of Juniper berries. Holland is noted for distilling the finest Geneva.

Genlian, a plant of the mountainous parts of Germany, the roots of which are used in medicine.

Ginger, a knotty, flattish root, of a fibrous substance and of a pale or yellowish color. It grows in moist places in various parts of tropical Asia and the E. Indies, and has been cultivated to some extent in the W. Indies, particularly in Jamaica.

Ginseng, a plant, the root of which has long been celebrated among the Chinese, entering into the composition of almost every medicine used by the higher classes. It was formerly supposed to grow exclusively in Chinese Tartary; but it has now been long known that this plant is also a native of N. America, in the vicinity of the Alleghany mountains.

Glass, a transparent, brittle, factitious body, produced by the action of fire upon a fixed salt and sand, or stone, that readily melts. It is manufactured in almost every country.

Gold, a metal of a yellow color, in specific gravity next to platinum, possessing great lustre, malleability, and ductility. Europe is mostly supplied with gold from Chili and Peru in S. America; though a small quantity is likewise imported from China and the coast of Africa. In the U. States, gold mines abound in Virginia, N. Carolina, Georgia, and other southern states, and have been worked to a considerable extent.

Goltschut, a sort of money, or rather a small ingot of gold which comes from China

Grain, signifies the fruit or seed growing in a spike or ear, in which sense it comprehends every species of corn, as wheat, rye, barley, oats, &c.

Grampus, a fish of the whale kind.

Grapes, a well known fruit produced from the vine. It is of various colors when ripe, but the principal are the green and purple. We import vast quantities of green grapes from Malaga and other parts of Spain.

Guaiacum, a medicinal wood, extremely hard and solid, of a dense, compact texture and a yellowish color. The bark is also used in medicine; and there is a substance sold under the name of gum guaiacum, which is used for a similar purpose. We obtain guaiacum principally from the W. Indies and S. America.

Gum Arabic, a substance which exudes from the Egyptian acacia, and is brought chiefly from the Levant.

Gum Elastic, or Caoutchouc. This substance, usually termed India rubber, is prepared from the juice of a tree growing in Cayenne, and other parts of S. America.

Gunpowder, a composition of nitre, sulphur, and charcoal, mixed together and granulated.

Gypsum, or Plaster-Stone, native sulphate of lime. It is found in different parts of Europe and America.

HARTSHORN, the entire horns of the male deer as separated from the head. The chemical analysis of hartshorn yields a water highly impregnated with a volatile salt, which is called spirit of hartshorn.

Hellebore, a genus of plants allied to and resembling the ranunculaceae. There are ten species. By distillation a poisonous oil may be obtained from the root.

Hemp, a plant which grows wild in the E. Indies and some parts of America, and is valuable for the various uses of its seed and the fibres of its bark;—the latter being made into cordage, ropes, cables and cloth of every quality. Though cultivated to some extent in the U. States, it still forms a large article of import from Europe, and particularly from Russia.

Hides, the skins of beasts; particularly applied to those of large cattle, as bullocks, cows, &c. Those from S. America are in best repute.

Hock, a German wine of exquisite flavor when old. The best comes from Frankfort on the Maine.

Hops, a plant which is a native of Europe, Siberia, and N. America. It is used principally in the manufacture of beer, and is raised extensively both in England and the U. States.

Horsehound, a biabate plant, with whitish, cottony leaves and stem, now naturalized in the U. States, and growing on the banks of ponds, &c. Its juice imparts a permanent dye to wool, silk and linen, and is of use in pulmonary complaints.

Hungary Water, so called from a queen of Hungary, is made by distilling in balneo, fresh-gathered flowers of rosemary, two pounds, rectified spirits of wine, two quarts.

Hyacinth, a pellucid gem of a red color with a mixture of yellow.

Hydromel, a fermented liquor, made of honey and water.

Hydrometer, an instrument used for determining the specific gravities of liquids.

ICELAND MOSS, a species of lichen growing in the arctic regions of Europe, and also abundant in the Alpine region of the White mountains of N. Hampshire. It is an article of commerce, and often employed in pharmacy, in the composition of pectoral lozenges, syrups &c.

Indigo, a dye prepared from the leaves and small branches of the Indigofera tinctoria. It is cultivated in N. and S. America and both the Indies. A bastard sort of indigo may be obtained from the isatis tinctoria or wood.

Ingot, a mass of gold or silver from the mines, melted and cast into a sort of mould, but neither coined nor wrought.

Iodine, a substance which may be obtained from a variety of sea-weeds and fungi, and in great abundance from kelp. It is a deadly poison.

Ipecacuanha, a drug brought from S. America, and much used in medicine.

Iridium, a metal discovered in the ore of platinum, by M. Tennant. It is of a white color, brittle, and difficult of fusion.

Iron, the most valuable of all metals. It is common to all parts of the United States and most of the countries of the globe. We import much iron from England and Sweden.

Iron Wood, a species of wood of a reddish cast, so called on account of its corroding as that metal does, and its being remarkably hard and ponderous. The tree which produces it grows principally in the W. Indies, S. America and some parts of Asia.

Isinglass, a gelatinous substance made from certain fish found in the Danube, and the rivers of Muscovy. It is brought chiefly from Russia.

Ivory, the substance of the tusk of the elephant. It is usually brought from the coasts of Africa. The ivory of India is apt to lose its color, and turn yellow; that of Achem and Ceylon is the most esteemed.

JADE, a species of Jasper.

Jalap, a root so called from being principally brought from the environs of Malaxa. It is much employed in medicine.

Japanning, the art of varnishing and painting ornaments on wood, metals, &c., in the same manner as is done by the natives of Japan.

Jasper, a stone found in the E. Indies and China, and an ingredient in the composition of many mountains. It occurs usually in large amorphous masses, and its colors are various. It is used in the formation of seals, and when polished is very beautiful.

Jazel, a precious stone of a fine blue color, found in the E. Indies.

Jet, a black, inflammable, bituminous substance, susceptible of a good polish, and becoming electrical by rubbing. It occurs in different parts of Europe, and is found at South Hadley, Mass., in the coal formation.

Jujubes, the fruit of a tree which grows in Languedoc, Provence, the islands of Hieres, in several parts of Italy, and in India and Persia. It is chiefly used in medicine, nearly for the same purposes as the common fig; a paste is prepared from it, which is of efficacy in pulmonary complaints.

KALI, a genus of marine plants, which are burnt to procure alkali.

Kelp, the lowest piece of timber in a ship, running her whole length, from the lower part of her stem to the lower part of her stern-post.

Kelp, the catenated ashes of a plant called by the same name. The preparation of kelp is carried on to a great extent in Scotland and Ireland.

Kermes, an insect of the genus called, in natural history, coxus. It is principally used in dyeing, on account of its imparting a fine scarlet or crimson color. It is found in abundance in France and Spain, and large quantities are brought from the Levant.

Kersun, a species of coarse woolen stuff, usually woven in rills.

Adel In naval architecture, a vessel with two masts, usually applied to one carrying bombs, or rather mortars.

Kiffeki, a mineral dug up near Konie in Natolia, and employed in forming the bowls of Turkish tobacco-pipes.

Kupfernickel, a sulphate of nickel, and generally compounded of nickel, arsenic, and sulphate of iron.

LABRADOR STONE, a beautiful stone brought from the coast of Labrador. Its color is commonly of a light or of a deep gray, frequently blackish; but when held in certain positions to the light, it exhibits varieties of beautiful internal colors, chiefly green and blue.

Lac, or Gum Lac, the product of the coccus laca, an insect, which deposits its eggs on the branches of a tree called Bihar in Assam. Lac possesses the properties of a resin, and is the basis of many varnishes, and of the finest kinds of sealing-wax. The best is amber-colored and transparent.

Lace, a species of net-work, made of silk, thread, or cotton. The best laces come from Holland.

Lacker, a varnish applied to brass, tin, and other metals, to improve their color.

Lacmus, a plant which yields a yellow dye-stuff: it is a species of moss, and comes from France, Holland and the islands of Candia and Teneriffe.

Lapis Lazuli, a sort of stone from which that celebrated color, ultramarine, is made. It is found in many parts, but that of Asia and Africa is superior.

Leeward, among seamen, the left-hand side of the ship, when you stand with your face towards the head.

Latitude, the distance of any place from the equator, measured upon the meridian in degrees, minutes, and seconds: all places lying under the equator are said to have no latitude; and all others to have north or south latitude, according to their situation with respect to the equator. The complement of latitude is the difference between the latitude itself and 90°, or as much as the place itself is distant from the pole; and this complement is always equal to the elevation of the equator above the horizon of the place. The elevation of the pole of any place is equal to the latitude itself.

Lava, the fused stony substance which issues from volcanoes.

Lavender, a fragrant plant, native of the S. of Europe, and now commonly cultivated in our gardens. The water drawn from the flowers by distillation is an agreeable perfume.

Lawn, a sort of clear or open worked cambric, manufactured in France and Flanders; also in Scotland and the N. of Ireland.

Lazaretto, a public building, hospital or pest-house, for the reception of those afflicted with contagious disorders. The Lazaretto of Marseilles is the finest in the world.

Lead, one of the perfect metals. It is of a dull white, inclining to a blue color; and although the least ductile and sonorous, it is the heaviest of metallic bodies, excepting mercury, gold and platinum. It is found abundantly in different parts of Europe and in N. and S. America. The lead mines of Missouri are very productive.

Lee, an epithet to distinguish that half of the horizon, to which the wind is directed from the other part whence it arises, which latter is called to windward.

Lemnian Earth, a clay of a pale red color, which has its name from the island of Lemnos, where it is dug. When genuine, it is a good medicine in some diseases.

Lemons, the fruit of the lemon-tree, growing in great abundance in Sicily, Spain and Portugal. The ports of Lisbon and Malaga are the principal shipping-places of lemons; the shipping of fruit from these places commences about the middle of September, and continues until the February following, after which time the article becomes scarce and dear. The lemons of the Bermuda islands are large and of a delicious flavor. The island of Zante abounds in lemons of a great size. Lemons are invariably shipped while their color is green, and they generally become quite yellow ere they reach this country.

Lentisk, the tree which produces the resin called mastich. It grows in the S. of Europe.

Lichen, or Livertwort, a species of moss found in different parts of France, and in the Canary and Cape de Verd islands. It is useful in dying, and also as a food or medicine.

Light-House, a tower on an eminence upon the seacoast, or at the entrance of some port or river, for the direction of ships in dark nights, by means of an illumination.

Lignum Vitæ, a species of wood of great utility both for turnery and in pharmacy. The tree which produces it grows in most of the W. India islands, but especially in Hayti and Saint Croix.

Lime, one of those earthy substances, which exist in every part of the world. It is found purest in limestone, marble and chalk. None of these substances are lime, but are capable of becoming so by burning in a white heat. Lime may also be obtained by burning calcareous spars, or by dissolving oyster shells in muriatic acid.

Limes, a species of lemon, which grows plentifully in the W. Indies, and is also to be met with in the S. of Europe.

Linea, a cloth of very extensive use made of flax. The chief countries in which it is manufactured are Russia, Germany, Switzerland, Flanders, Holland, Scotland and Ireland. The flaxseed is chiefly procured from America.

Linsaywoolsey, a coarse cloth made of flax, or hemp, and wool mixed, and much worn by the peasantry of Scotland, Wales, &c.

Liquid Amber, a resinous juice, flowing from a large tree, which grows in Virginia, Mexico, and other parts of America.

Liquorice, a root which grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany, and is cultivated in England. Bayonne and Saragossa in Spain supply the best. The inspissated juice of the liquorice-root is exported in rolls, or cakes, usually covered with bay leaves from Spain and Holland.

Lisbon Wine, a white wine, of a fine sweet flavor, which usually comes from the city of that name.

Litharge, an oxide of lead.

Lithia, an alkali in the mineral called petalite.

Lithography, the art of printing from stone.

Lode, or Lode, in mining, a word used especially in the tin-mines, for any regular vein or course, whether metallic or not, but most commonly lead means a metallic vein.

Lodestone, a hard mineral body of a dark gray color with a metallic lustre, and possessed of the property of attracting iron. This singular substance has likewise the wonderful property of turning to the pole when suspended, and left at liberty to move freely. Upon this remarkable circumstance the mariner's compass depends, an instrument which gives us such advantages over the ancients. The natural lodestone has the quality of communicating its properties to iron and steel. It is found in considerable masses in the N. of Europe, China, Siam, and the Philippine isles.

Logwood, a hard and compact wood of a fine grain and so heavy as to sink in water. Its predominant color is red, tinged with orange, yellow, and black.

Its chief use is for dying. This wood is likewise called India, Jamaica and Campeachy wood, from the places where it grows most plentifully.

Longitude, in navigation, the distance of a ship or place, east or west, from another, reckoned in degrees from the equator. It has become a conventional usage to reckon longitude from Greenwich, near London.

Lugeter, a sort of vessel usually heavily built, and rigged with a square sail.

Lumber, in the coasting trade, means stowage-wood and small timber; as spars, joists, boards, planks, shingles, hoops, staves, &c. Maine exports vast quantities of lumber.

Lustring, or Lutestring, a species of light, shining silk.

Lycopodium, the fine dust of lycopodium or club-moss, is sometimes called on account of its great inflammability, vegetable sulphur. It is common in mountainous places and in forests of fir-trees; and when strewed in the air takes fire from a candle and burns like a flash of lightning. It is used in thea tres.

MACE, one of the exterior coverings of the nutmeg. It is a warm aromatic, and usually comes from the E. Indies, in glass or porcelain vessels.

Mackerel, a fish, native of the European and American seas, generally appearing at stated seasons, and swarming in vast shoals round particular coasts.

Madder, the root of the rubia tinctorum, a substance extensively employed in dying. It grows most abundantly in Holland.

Madeira, a well known white wine, deriving its name from the island where it is made.

Magnesia, a white and spongy substance usually obtained by the decomposition of the sulphate of magnesia. It is much used in medicine.

Mahogany, the timber of a tree, which is one of the warmest parts of America, and grows in many of the W. India islands. It is hard, takes a fine polish, and answers better than any other sort of wood, in all kinds of cabinet ware.

Maze, a kind of Indian corn, extensively cultivated in the U. States, and used for making bread, &c.

Malachite, a green carbonate of copper.

Malt, a term applied to grain prepared after a particular manner, for brewing the various kinds of beer.

Manganese, a brilliant metal, of a darkish white color, very brittle, of considerable hardness, and difficult of fusion. It is found in America and various parts of Europe.

Manna, a substance obtained from several vegetables: but the ash, the larch, and the alhagi afford it in the largest quantities. The best manna comes from Sicily.

Marble, a kind of stone of various colors, composed chiefly of lime, found in great masses, and dug out of pits and quarries. It abounds in Mass. and other parts of the U. States, and in all the countries of Europe.

Marle, an earthy substance of several varieties, useful as a manure.

Marmots, likewise called Alpine mice, are rather bigger than the rabbit, and are valuable on account of their skins. They abound in Europe, Kautschatka and America.

Marten, an animal of a dark tawny color, with a white throat and a bushy tail. Its general length is about a foot and a half, and it is prized for its skin. The finest marten skins are obtained in N. America, Russia, Norway, and the Levant.

Massicot, white lead calcined over a moderate fire.

Mastic, a resin obtained from the lesser turpentine tree and the lentiscus

MON

It comes from Turkey and the isle of Chio.

Mead, an agreeable beverage made chiefly of honey and water.

Mechacuan, a root of a plant of the convolvulus kind, brought from the province of Mechacuan in S. America.

Mercury, a metallic substance, fluid at the common temperature, having the appearance and brilliancy of melted silver. It is found in Spain, Germany, China and S. America.

Mezzatinta, a kind of graving so named, as nearly resembling paint, the word importing half-painted.

Mica, a stone which forms the essential part of many mountains, and consists of a great number of thin laminae adhering to each other, sometimes of a very large size. It has long been employed as a substitute for glass.

Minium, in the arts, red lead or oxide of lead.

Mirobolans, a small purgative fruit of considerable utility in pharmacy, and brought from India.

Mohair, the soft and silvery hairs of the Mohair goat, which is a native of Angora. It is woven into camlets and other manufactures.

Molasses, the gross fluid matter that remains of sugar after crystallizing.

Money, the following table embraces an account of the principal foreign monies, with their values in British sterling.

N. B. That c stands for Copper; s for Silver; g for Gold; and those marked * are imaginary, as the Pound sterling of England.

Moresco, a kind of carving, painting, &c., done in the manner of the Moors.

Morocco, a fine kind of leather prepared of the skin of an animal of the goat kind, and imported from the Levant, Barbary, &c.

Murphine, an alkali salt obtained from opium.

Mosaic, an assemblage of little pieces of glass, marble, precious stones, &c., of various colors, cut square, and cemented on a ground of stucco.

Mother of Pearl, the shell of a muscle, dwelling in the ocean of either Indies.

Muscadine, a rich wine of the growth of Provence, Languedoc and other parts of France.

Musk, a substance found in a bag, situated in the umbilical region of the moschus muciferous, and used as a perume. It is also obtained from the civet or musk cat.

Musk-Seed, the seed of a plant which grows in the W. Indies, and yields an odor precisely like real musk.

Muslin, a fine, thin sort of cotton cloth, which bears a downy nap on its surface. The best comes from India.

Must, the juice of the grape previous to fermentation.

Myrrh, a gum resin, brought from the E. Indies and from Smyrna and Aleppo.

NANKKEEN, or Nanking, a species of cotton cloth closely woven. It takes its name from a city in China, where the reddish thread of which the stuff is made is spun.

Naptha, an oil, which issues out of white, yellow, or black clays, in Persia and Media.

Ncap Tides, those tides which happen when the moon is in the first and last quarters, being low, when compared to spring tides.

Nephritic Wood, a wood of a very dense and compact texture, brought from New Spain. It is a diuretic.

Nicaragua Wood, a dye-wood of a very bright red color, brought from Nicaragua.

Nickel, a semi-metal, found commonly in mines of cobalt.

Nixia, a root of a pale brown color, and of an acrid, astringent taste. It is collected on the mountains of Corea.

Nutmeg, the kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach. The best nutmegs are brought from the E. Indies in stone jars. The round nutmeg is preferred to that which is oblong.

Nuz Vonica, the seed of the official strychnos, a native of the E. Indies. It is among the most powerful poisons of the narcotic kind.

OAKUM, old ropes untwisted, and pulled out into loose hemp, in order to be used in caulking the seams of ships, &c.

Ochres, combination of earths with the oxide of iron; they are of various colors, and are principally employed as pigments.

Offing, that part of the sea a good distance from shore, where there is deep water, and no need of a pilot to conduct the ship.

Olive, a fruit which yields a large quantity of oil, the produce of the olea, olive-tree. It is a native of the southern parts of Europe, and is cultivated in great quantities in the S. of France, Italy and Portugal. Olives have an acrid, bitter and disagreeable taste; pickled they prove more palatable. The Lucca olives, which are smaller than the others, have the weakest taste; the Spanish, or larger, the strongest; the Provence, which are of a middling size, are generally the most esteemed.

Opiz, one of the semi-pellucid gems, with variously colored zones, but none red. It is found in the E. Indies and different parts of America.

Opal, a stone of the quartz family, found in many parts of Europe, especially in Hungary. When first dug out of the earth it is soft, but it hardens and diminishes in bulk by exposure to the air.

Opium, is obtained from the white oppy, a plant which is extensively cultivated in Turkey and India. It is a powerful narcotic.

Opobalsamum, the juice of a tree called Celsap. It resembles myrrh, and is poison taken internally.

Opodeldoc, a solution of soap in alcohol, with the addition of camphor and volatile oils.

Opopanax, a resin obtained from a plant growing in the Levant.

Oranges, the fruit of the orange-tree, which flourishes in the S. of Europe and the U. States, and in both the Indies. Great quantities of oranges are imported from Seville. The island of Malta furnishes oranges of a fine flavor; and they also come to great perfection in the W. Indies and the Azores.

Orchilla Weed, a whitish moss, yielding a rich purple tincture, used for dyeing. It is found in the islands of the Archipelago, and also in those near the African coast.

Orduance, a general name for all sorts of great gums used in war.

Origanum, oil obtained from the leaves of the wild marjoram. It is a cure for the chillsains.

Orpiment, a semi-metal, usually found in copper mines.

Orris, a sweet scented powder, produced by pulverizing a root of the same name. The root is white, and is brought from Florence, in the neighborhood of which city it grows spontaneously.

Orlean Iron, a particular sort of bars of iron, made for the manufacture of wire.

Ormium, a metal of a dark blue color, which exists in platina.

Osnaburgh, a coarse linen cloth manufactured in the city of that name.

Ostrich Feathers, the fine feathers of the ostrich. They are brought from Africa, particularly the coast of Barbary.

Ota, or Ottar of Roses, the essential oil of roses. It comes to us under this name from Bengal.

Oxygen, a simple substance, which can only be obtained in combination with other bodies or in a state of gas.

PALENDAR, a kind of coasting vessel.

Palladium, a metal of a white color, which exists in the ores of platina.

Palm Oil, an oil obtained from the nuts of a tree, which grows in most parts of Asia, Africa and America, more especially on the coast of Guinea, in the Cape de Verd islands, and in Jamaica and Barbadoes.

Panjoia, a species of crystal.

Paranthine, a stone of a variety of colors, found in Norway.

Parchment, the skin of sheep or goats prepared so as to render it proper for writing upon, &c. The best parchment is made in France.

Pareira Brava, a root of a dark color, which comes from Brazil, and is used in medicine.

Pargasite, a mineral of a green color and transparent, lately found near Abo.

Parian Marble, the white marble from the island of Paros, used to this day for carving statues, &c.

Paul, the Indian fax.

Pearl Ashes, a kind of fixed alkaline salt, prepared by mixing the ashes of burnt wood with water, evaporating the clear ley, and calcining them in an oven moderately hot. Pearl ashes are chiefly prepared in N. America, Russia and Hungary.

Pearls, hard, white, shining bodies, usually round, found in various kinds of testaceous fishes. The fish, in which the largest and finest pearls are produced, is the E. India pearl-oyster. The most remarkable pearl fisheries of America are in the Gulf of Mexico and along the coast of Granada.

Pekoe, a species of Bohem tea.

Penguin, a fruit very common in the W. Indies, of a sharp, acid flavor.

Pennants, or Pendants, those streamers of a ship, ending in points.

Pepper, an aromatic berry, of a hot, dry quality, chiefly used in seasoning articles of food. The pepper plant flourishes in the islands of Java, Sumatra and Ceylon, and more particularly on the Malabar coast.

Perry, a beverage made from pears.

Petrol, a mineral oil, or species of bitumen, supposed to issue from the clefts of rocks, and found floating on the waters of certain springs. It is obtained in hot countries, and is used externally in paralytic cases, &c.

Peucet, a factitious metal, the basis of which is tin

Phosphorus, a simple substance, much resembling wax in consistence, of a faint straw color, and highly combustible. It was discovered by a German chemist, named Brandt, about 160 years since, and the preparation was long kept a secret.

Picul, the Chinese quintal of 100 pounds.

Pilchards, a species of fish, similar to the herring.

Pimento, the berries of a tree, which grows spontaneously and in great abundance in the island of Jamaica. It is usually imported in bags and casks, and is similar in smell and taste to cloves, juniper-berries, cinnamon, and pepper, or rather a peculiar mixture somewhat akin to them, whence its name of allspice.

Punchbeck a name given to one of the many imitations of gold. It is made by melting yellow copper in various proportions with red copper.

Pine Apple, the fruit of a plant which grows spontaneously in S. America, Africa and the Indies.

Pink, a vessel used at sea, masted and rigged like other ships, only that it is built with a round stern.

Pinnace, a small vessel used at sea, with a square stern, chiefly employed as a scout for intelligence, and for landing of men, &c.

Pistachio, the fruit of the pistachia terebinthus, a kind of turpentine tree. It grows naturally in Arabia, Persia and Syria; also in Sicily, whence the nuts are usually brought.

Pitch, a tenacious oily substance drawn chiefly from pines and firs; or it is more properly tar, inspissated by boiling it over a slow fire.

Plaid, a striped or variegated stuff, manufactured principally in Scotland.

Planks, thick strong boards, cut from various kinds of wood, especially pine, oak and fir.

Plaster of Paris, the sulphate of lime, after being calcined.

Platina, the heaviest of all metals; it is met with in some abundance in S. America and in Russia, where it has been coined into money. Its color is that of the purest silver.

Plumbago, black lead.

Plush, a kind of stuff composed chiefly of wool and goats' or camels' hair.

Pomegranat, a medicinal fruit, like an apple or quince, full of seeds, enclosed within a reddish pulp. It grows in Spain, Italy and France, and S. America.

Poppy, a well known plant of several species. That which produces opium is the white official poppy.

Porcelain, a fine kind of earthenware, chiefly manufactured in China, and thence called China ware.

Porphyry, includes those stones which contain either felspar, schorl, quartz, mica, or crystals of any kind. It is found of different colors, and occurs in nearly every country.

Port, the name of a red wine, so called from Oporto, whence immense quantities of the article are exported.

Potash, an alkaline salt, chiefly procured by lixiviation from the ashes of burnt wood, and other vegetable substances.

Pounce, gum-sanderach, pounded and sifted very fine.

Proa, in navigation, is a name given to a vessel used in the South Seas. In its construction, the head and stern are alike, but the sides are different; the side intended to be always the lee side being flat, and the windward side made rounding.

Prunes, plums dried in the sunshine or in an oven. The best come from France.

Pumice-Stone, a light, rough and porous stone, which is found in the greatest abundance in the island of Ipari.

Pyrites, a genus of inflammable substances, composed of sulphur, which as dissolved, or saturated itself with metals.

Pyrops, a mineral found in Bohemia, of a deep red color, which passes to orange, when exposed to the sun.

Pyrophorus, an artificial product, prepared from alum by calcination, with the addition of various inflammable substances.

Pyrotechnics, the art of making fireworks.

QUADRANT, a mathematical instrument, of great use in navigation, or taking the altitudes of the sun, stars, &c.

Quarantine, a detention which ships undergo, when suspected of having on board persons or goods infected with contagion. The usual quarantine is 40 days.

Quartz, a mineral of the flint genus, which is divided into five sub-species.

Quassia, a tree growing in S. America and the W. Indies, the root, bark and wood of which are used in medicine, and by brewers to give a bitter taste to their beer. It received its name from Quassi, a negro of Surinam, who discovered its virtues.

Quercitron Bark, the bark of a species of oak growing in Mass. and other parts of N. America. It is used for dying yellow.

RAGWORT, a native perennial plant growing by roadsides, and flowering from July to August. It imparts a fine green color to wool.

Raisins, grapes prepared by suffering them to remain on the vine till they are perfectly ripe, and then drying them in the sun or by the heat of an oven. The names by which raisins are distinguished among traders, are the following, and the order in which they are placed denotes their relative value, the first being the most esteemed; viz. Muscates, sun or solis, bloom or jar, Belvedere, Denia or Malaga, Sultana, Lipari, and Smyrna, black and red. The best of these kinds are imported in boxes and jars, and the inferior in mats. Spain supplies great quantities of this article; and Malaga is the port whence they are chiefly exported. Calabria furnishes the finest of any part of Italy.

Rape-Seed, the seed of the napus stativa, from which a useful oil is extracted.

Ratafia, a fine spirituous liquor, prepared in France from the kernels of cherries, apricots, &c.

Rateen, a thick woollen stuff, manufactured chiefly in France, Holland and Italy.

Rattans, the small shoots or branches of the sugar-cane, brought from the E. and W. Indies.

Reddle, an ore of iron in the state of red oxide, commonly used as a pigment.

Resin, a viscid juice oozing from several vegetable productions, as the pine, the fir, &c. That of fir is known by the name of rosin.

Rhapontic, a medicinal root resembling rhubarb. It comes from Smyrna.

Rhuaium, or Rose Wood, a wood or root brought from the Canary islands.

Rhubarb, a plant of which there are seven species. The yellowish root which is used in medicine comes principally from China.

Rice, a plant very much resembling wheat in shape, color and leaves. It is cultivated to great extent in Asia as well as in the southern parts of the U. States.

Ries-Hemp, the best sort of hemp, cleaned from all impurities.

Rouge, a red color obtained from the plant ca. hamus, a native of Egypt and the Levant.

Ruby, a genus of precious stones of various colors, found in the E. Indies and in Brazil.

Rum, a well known spirituous liquor, made from the sugar-cane.

Rye, a useful species of grain produced from a plant which is a native of the island of Candia.

SABLE, an animal valued for its fur. The best skins come from Siberia, Hudson's bay and Canada.

Sagathe, a slight woollen stuff, sometimes mixed with a little silk.

Sago, the produce of an oriental tree, which grows in great abundance in the Moluccas and the coast of Malabar. It is also brought from the W. Indies. It forms an agreeable jelly, and is a useful article of diet.

Salt, a mineral body, readily soluble in water, and tasting sharp or pungent on the tongue. The salt obtained from the waters of the sea is called bay salt; so named from being first made in the bay of St. Uhes, in Portugal. We export much salt from the West Indies. Rock salt is obtained in great abundance from the mines in Poland and Hungary.

Sanders, an odoriferous wood, brought from the Indies.

Sapan, a species of wood, similar to the Brazil wood, and used for the same purposes. The tree which produces it is found in S. America, Japan, and Cochinchina.

Sapphire, a genus of precious stones, of a blue color, and the hardest of all except the ruby and diamond.

Sarcenet, a kind of fine, thin woven, plain silk.

Sardines, a species of fish of the herring kind; anchovies.

Sardonyx, a precious stone, consisting of a mixture of the chalcedony and cornelian.

Sarsaparilla, the root of a plant growing in most parts of America. The flower is yellow, mixed with red.

Sassafras, the root of a tree, which is a native of N. America, and grows plentifully in Florida.

Satin, a soft, closely-woven silk, with a glossy surface. The chief seats of this manufacture are Lyons, Genoa and Florence.

Sae-root, a plant employed by dyers to impart a yellow color.

Scammony, the produce of a species of convolvulus, or creeper plant; which grows wild in the vales between Nazareth and Mount Carmel. It is used in medicine as a purgative.

Scapolite, a mineral of a pearl color, found in Norway.

Scriveillas, the small elephants' teeth, or pieces of them, which are not sold singly but in parcels.

Scna, or Senna, the leaf of a shrubby plant cultivated in Persia, Syria and Arabia, and much used in medicine as a useful cathartic.

Serge, a woollen stuff manufactured in a loom.

Seron, of almonds, is the quantity of 200 weight; of indigo, the same.

Shag, a woollen stuff smooth on one side and velvety on the other.

Shagrin, a kind of grained leather, prepared, as is supposed, of the skin of a species of squalus, or horned fish, called the shagreen, or shagrain, and used in covering books, &c. It is imported from Constantinople and some parts of Poland.

Shalloon, a slight woollen stuff, which derives its name from the town of Chalons, where it was first manufactured.

Shammy, a kind of leather, soft and pliant. The real shammy is prepared of the skin of the chamois-goat, whence its name.

Shawls, a species of fine woollen handkerchief, forming an article of female dress. The finest shawls come from the E. Indies. The province of Cachemire is the grand seat of the manufacture of the beautiful shawls which bear its name.

Shellac, a kind of lac, which has undergone a purification in a particular manner.

Sherry, a Spanish wine, made in the vicinity of Xeres, whence its name. The Sherry wines are shipped mostly from Cadiz.

Silk, a very soft, fine, bright thread, the work of an insect, called the hombyx, or the silk-worm. The silk imported into this country is chiefly the produce of Italy, France, Turkey and the E. Indies. Attention has recently been directed to the culture of silk in the U. States, and it will doubtless in time become an important article of manufacture in the country.

Silver, a metal of a fine white color, without either taste or smell. The most considerable silver mines are at Potosi in S. America, Kunsberg in Norway, Annaberg in Austria, the Hartz, &c.

Sloop, a sort of small ship or vessel, usually with one mast.

Smack, a small vessel, usually carrying a single mast, and employed in fishing.

Smalt, a species of glass, of a dark blue color.

Snake-Root, a medicinal root growing principally in Virginia and the southern states.

Soda, an alkaline salt, principally obtained from the ashes of marine plants.

Soy, an extract from a sort of bean growing in China. It is used as a stimulant sauce.

Spermaceti, a fat substance obtained from the brains of a species of whale.

Spongia, a plant of a porous texture, common in the Mediterranean and other seas, where it adheres in large masses to rocks, stones, shells, &c. It comes chiefly from Aleppo and Smyrna.

Squill, a plant with a large bulbous root, growing spontaneously on the sandy shores of Spain and the Levant. It is used in medicine.

Steel, iron refined in the fire with certain ingredients, that render it white and impart to it a harder and finer grain than that of the original metal.

Storax, the most fragrant of the solid resins. It is obtained from a tree, which grows most plentifully in Cilicia, Syria, and Pamphilia; and is also met with in America.

Stucco, a generic term, comprehending all the different kinds of coverings, drawings, or coatings for walls.

Sugar, a solid, sweet substance, obtained from the sugar-cane. It is extensively manufactured in the E. and W. Indies, Louisiana and S. America.

Sulphur, or Brimstone, a hard, brittle, inflammable substance, of an opaque yellow color.

Sumach, a shrub which grows naturally in the U. S., Syria, Spain and Portugal; in the two last it is cultivated with great care; and great quantities are also exported from Sicily. Its shoots are reduced to powder, and prepared for the purposes of dyeing, tanning, &c.

Suviel, a small cannon, much used on board merchant-ships as a weapon of defence.

TABBY, a kind of ricen silk.

Tacamahaca, a solid resinous substance, used in pharmacy, brought from New Spain and the island of Madagascar.

Taffety, a fine, smooth, silken stuff, remarkable for its gloss.

Talc, a species of mineral, of which there are three varieties. It abounds in the mountains of Tyrol and Salzburg.

Tamarinds, the fruit of the tamarindus India. It is a pod resembling a beanpod, including several hard seeds, with a dark colored viscid pulp, of a pleasant acid taste; the E. India tamarinds are longer than the W. India; the former containing six or seven seeds each, the latter rarely above three or four.

Tammy, a species of woollen stuff manufactured in England.

Taonbac, or Yombagua, a mixture of gold and copper.

Tapieca, a name given to white sago

Tea, the dried leaves of the tea-plant, a commodity in general use in Europe, America and Asia. The tea-plant is a native of Japan, China and Touquin. It attains the greatest perfection in the regions of Nanking, in commerce, eight principal sorts of tea are distinguished, three of green and five of bohea. The three sorts of green tea are, 1. The Imperial or Bloom tea. 2. The Haisven or Hyson, so called from the name of an Indian merchant, who first brought it into Europe. 3. The Singlo, or Songlo. The five sorts of Bohea tea are, 1. The Souchong. 2. The Sumlo, Camho or Campoi. 3. The Congou. 4. The Peko. 5. The Bohea.

The first gathering commences at the end of February, or beginning of March. The leaves are then small, tender, and unfolded, and not above three or four days old; these are called ficht-sian or "tea in powder," because it is pulverised; it is also called sometimes bloom tea. It is sold in China at 20d. or 2s. per pound. The laborers employed in collecting it, do not pull the leaves by handfuls, but pick them up one by one, and take every precaution that they may not break them. However long and tedious this labor may appear, they gather from four, to ten, or fifteen, pounds per day.

The second crop is gathered about the end of March, or beginning of April. At this season part of their leaves have attained their full growth, and the rest are not above half their size. This difference does not, however, prevent them from being all gathered indiscriminately. They are afterwards picked, and sorted into different parcels, according to their age and size. The youngest, which are carefully separated from the rest, are often sold for leaves of the first crop. Tea gathered at this season is called too-sian, or "Chinese Tea," because the people of Japan infuse it, and drink it after the Chinese manner.

The third crop is gathered at the end of May, or in the month of June. The leaves are then very numerous and thick, and have acquired their full growth. This kind of tea, which is called ben-sian, is the coarsest of all, and is reserved for the common people. Some of the Japanese collect their tea only at two seasons of the year, which correspond to the second, and third, already mentioned; others confine themselves to one general gathering of their crop, towards the month of June; however, they always form afterwards different assortments of their leaves.

The finest and most celebrated tea of Japan, is that which grows near Ud-si, a small village situated close to the sea, and not far distant from Meaco. In the district of this village is a mountain, extremely well adapted for the culture of fine tea. It is enclosed by hedges and ditches, to prevent all access to it. The tea-shrubs that grow on this mountain, are planted in regular order, and are divided by different avenues and alleys. The care of this place is intrusted to people, who are ordered to guard the leaves from dust, and to defend them from the inclemency of the weather. Before collecting the tea, it is said, they abstain from every kind of gross food for some weeks, that their breath and perspiration may not injure the leaves, which they do not touch but with very fine gloves.

Teak, or Tek: Wood, the produce of a tree growing in Ava and Pegu and on the coast of Malabar, is employed in the construction of the vessels fitted out at Bombay, Madras, and Calcutta. The importance of the traffic to which this wood is put, may readily be conceived, when it is asserted, that the total burden of the vessels belonging to Calcutta, which are formed of it, amounts to 40,000 tons. This is the only species of wood which can be advantageously employed in the construction of the large Bengal-ese vessels; for it has been ascertained, that the indigenous wood of Bengal is scarcely serviceable at all in the Indian seas.

Tent, a strong, sweet-flavored red wine, made in the province of Andalusia.

Tiffan, a sort of transparent gauze, stiffened with gum and pressed.

Tin, a metal of a fine white color, a slight disagreeable taste, and emitting a peculiar smell when rubbed. There are considerable tin-mines on the Malabar coast, in the island of Sauda, in Spain, and in the Spanish West Indies. The tin-mines of Cornwall, Eng., are the most productive.

Tobacco, a plant, the leaves of which form an extensive branch of commerce. It is cultivated in the E. Indies and Africa, though little is exported thence. In the Levant, Salonica is the grand market for this commodity. The tobacco of Dalmatia and Croatia is of a good quality; and the plant is successfully raised in other parts of Europe. N. America indubitably yields the finest tobacco in the world; Virginia and Maryland producing it in the greatest abundance and of the best quality.

Tortoise-Shell, the shell of the testaceous animal called a tortoise.

Trade Winds, certain winds which regularly blow in ascertained directions for given periods, in different parts of the world; and are taken advantage of in the course of commerce and navigation. They prevail especially in the Indian seas.

Train Oil, a general name for different sorts of fish oil.

Turmeric, a root used in dyeing yellow. It comes from the E. Indies.

Turson, a valuable dyeing drug, prepared near Montpellier.

Turpentine, a resinous juice extracted from several species of trees.

Turquoise, a mineral of a pale sky-blue color.

ULTRAMARINE, a very fine blue powder, made from the blue parts of lapis lazuli.

Usquebaugh, a strong compound liquor, chiefly taken by way of dram; it is made in the highest perfection at Drogheda in Ireland, and is similar to whisky.

VALONIA, a plant brought from Italy and the Levant, and used as a dyeing ingredient.

Vanilla, a plant whose aromatic pods are used in the manufacture of chocolate. It comes from S. America and the Indies.

Velvet, a rich kind of silk stuff covered on the outside with a close, short, fine and soft nap. Florence and Genoa are most noted for the manufacture of this article.

Verdigris, an acetate of copper used as a pigment.

Vermicelli, an Italian preparation of flour, used in soups, broths, &c.

Vidonia, a white wine, the produce of the island of Teneriffe.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, are used to ascertain the quantities of any article or commodity, according to its nature.

Weight, in a commercial sense, denotes a body, legally defined, appointed to be put in the balance against other bodies, whose momentum is required.

The word measure, taken in a similar sense, can require no definition. The original standards appear to have been pointed out by the size and proportions of the human frame; and these natural measures are still used when artificial measures cannot be conveniently resorted to; thus the fathom of a well-proportioned man is supposed equal to his height or stature; the pace, one half of his stature; the cubit, one fourth; the foot, one sixth, and the span, one eighth. The hand is reckoned one third of the foot, and the breadth of the thumb one twelfth.

Standards of weights and measures were held sacred by the ancients, and a uniformity was strictly observed in many countries of Asia. Among the Romans there was but one weight and one measure; every town and city throughout their vast empire having a standard, which was an exact copy of the archetype kept in the capitol, and therefore called capitulum.

In latter times, from various abuses and a diversity of usages, a variety of weights and measures have obtained, and do at present prevail, in the various countries of Europe and the other parts of the world. There is, however, with few exceptions, a similarity in the systems of all countries, which seems to indicate a common origin. Thus the foot, which is the general unit for measures, is duodecimally divided; and the pound, which is the unit for weights, is divided either into twelve or sixteen ounces, &c. In almost every nation, there are two descriptions of weights, one for the precious metals, and the other for common articles; such are the Troy and Avoirdupois weights in England.

Standards generally signify any measure or weight of acknowledged authority, by which others of the same denomination are to be compared and adjusted. They are distinguished into arbitrary standards, and invariable standards from nature. The former are universally adopted except in France; and the latter are intended to correct or to restore them, if lost.

The origin of the old standards of weight or capacity is not certainly known; but those of linear measures may be inferred, from their names, to have been taken from some part of the human frame, as noticed above. Hence the foot, the hand, the span, the nail, the cubit or elbow, the ulna, aune, or arm, the fathom, the pace, &c. The inch, in some places, is determined by barley-corns; but in others, it is called the thumb. The finger, too, is reckoned as two-thirds of an inch.

The foot is the most general unit for measures as the pound is for weights; and both are mostly divided into the same number of equal parts, and their divisions were anciently called by the same name, uncia, which signifies a twelfth part of the whole. Hence the inch was called the uncia pedis, and the ounce the uncia libra.

As measures derived in the manner described, must vary with the different sizes of men, the standards, formed of some durable substance, have been taken from the foot, or arm, of some distinguished person. Thus the Saxon yard, or girth, the modern yard, is said to have been adjusted by the arm of king Henry I. It is supposed, that, from a similar reason, the old French foot has been called  pied de roi.

The following list embraces some of the principal foreign weights and measures.

In Turkey, at Smyrna, &c., they use the batman, or batman, containing six aces, the aceo weighing three pounds four-fifths English. They have another batman much less, consisting, as the former, of six aces; but the aceo only containing 15 ounces English; 14 aces of the first kind make the Turkish quintal.

At Cairo, Alexandretta, Altop, and Alexandria, they use the rotto, rotton, or rotto; at Cairo, and other parts of Egypt, it is 144 drachms, being above an English pound weight.

At Aleppo there are three sorts of rottos: the first 720 drachms making about seven pounds English, and used in weighing cottons, gails and other arge commodities; the second is 624 drachms, used for all silks but white ones, which are weighed by the third rotto of 700 drachms.

At Seyda the rotto is 600 drachms. The other parts of the Levant, not here named, use some of these weights, particularly the occo or ocqua, the rotoli, and rotto.

The Chinese weights are the piece, for large commodities; it is divided into 100 catis, or catis, though some say 125; the cati into 16 taels, or taels, each tael equivalent to 1 1/3 of an ounce English, or the weight of one rial and one twelfth, and containing 12 mas, or masses; and each mas 10 condrams. So that the Chinese piece amounts to 137 pounds English avoirdupois, and the tai to one pound, eight ounces. The piece for silk contains 66 catis and three carats; the bahar, bakaire, or barr, contains 336 catis.

Tonpian has also the same weights, measures, &c., as China.

Japan has only one weight, viz., the catt, which, however, is different from that of China, as containing 20 taels.

At Sarat, Agra, and throughout the states which composed the kingdom of the Great Mogul, they use the man, or maund, whereof they have two kinds; the king's man, or king's weight, and the man simply; the first used for the weighing of common provisions, containing 40 seers or seres, and each seer just a Paris pound.

The common man, used in the weighing of merchandise, consists likewise of 40 seers; but each seer is only estimated at 12 Paris ounces, or three-fourths of the other seer.

The man may be looked on as the common weight of the East Indies, though under some difference of name, or rather of pronunciation, it being called mas at Cambaya; and in other places, maïn and maun. The seer is properly the Indian pound, and of universal use; the like may be said of the bahar, tael, and catti above-mentioned.

At Siam the weights are the piece containing two shans, or catis; but the Siamese catti is only half the Japanese, the latter containing 20 taels, and the former only 10; though some make the Chinese catti only 16 taels, and the Siamese 8. The tael contains four baats, or ricals, each about a Paris ounce; the coat four selings, or mayons; the mayon two fouangs; the fouang four payes; he paye two clams; the sompaye half a fouang. It is to be observed, that these are the names of their coins as well as weights; silver and gold being commodities there sold, as other things, by their weights.

In the island of Java and particularly at Bantam, they use the gantan, equal to nearly three Dutch pounds.

In Golconda, at Visapour, and Goa, they have the furatelle, containing one pound, 14 ounces, English; the mangalis, or mangelin, for weighing diamonds and precious stones, weighing at Goa five grains, at Golconda, &c., five and a half grains. They have also the rotolo, containing fourteen and a quarter ounces English; the metriool, containing the sixth part of an ounce; the wall for piastres and ducats, containing the 73d part of a rial.

In Persia they use two kinds of batmans, or mans; the one called cahi, or cheray, which is the king's weight; and the other batman of Tauris. The first weighs thirteen pounds, ten ounces, English; the second six and a half pounds; its divisions are the ratel, or a sixteenth; the derhem, or drachm, which is the fiftieth; the meschal, which is half the derhem; the dung, which is the sixth part of the meschal, being equivalent to six carat-grains; and lastly, the grain, which is the one fourth part of the dung. They have also the rakie, which exceeds a little our ounce; the sah-cheray, equal to the 1170th part of the derham; and the to-man, used to weigh out large payments of money without telling; its weight is that of fifty abassis.

African Weights.

As to the weights of Africa, there are few places that have any, except Egypt, and the countries bordering on the Mediterranean, whose weights have been already enumerated among those of the ports of the Levant. The island of Madagascar, indeed, has weights, but none that exceed the drachm, nor are they used for any thing but gold and silver.

Foreign Measures.

The standard in Holland, Flanders, Sweden, a good part of Germany, many of the Haese Towns, as Dantzic, and Hamburg, and at Geneva, Frankfort, &c., is the ell; but the ell in all these places differs from the Paris ell. In Holland it contains one Paris foot, eleven lines, or four-sevenths of the Paris ell. The Flanders ell contains two feet, one inch, five and a half lines, or seven-twelfths of the Paris ell. The ell of Germany, Brabant, &c., is equal to that of Flanders.

The Italian measure is the braccio, brace, or fathom. This obtains in the states of Modena, Venice, Florence, Luca, Milan, Mantua, Bologna, &c., but is of different lengths. At Venice it contains one Paris foot, eleven inches, three lines, or eight-fifteenths of the Paris ell. At Bologna, Modena, and Mantua, the brace is the same as at Venice. At Luca it contains one Paris foot, nine inches, ten lines, or half a Paris ell. At Florence it contains one foot, nine inches, four lines, or 49-hundredths of a Paris ell. At Milan, the brace for measuring silks is one Paris foot, seven inches, four lines, or four-ninths of a Paris ell; that for woollen cloths is the same with the ell of Holland. At Bergama, the brace is one foot, seven inches, six lines, or five-ninths of a Paris ell. The usual measure at Naples, however, is the canna, containing six feet, ten inches, and two lines, or one Paris ell and fifteen-seventeenths.

The Spanish measure is the vara, or yard, in some places called the barra; containing seventeen-twenty-fourths of the Paris ell. But the measure in Castile and Valencia is the pan, span, or palm; which is used, together with the canna, at Genoa. In Aragon, the vara is equal to a Paris ell and a half, or five feet, five inches, six lines.

The Portuguese measure is the cavados, containing two feet, eleven lines, or four-sevenths of a Paris ell; and the vara, 106 whereof make 100 Paris ells.

The Piedmontese measure is the ras, containing one Paris foot, nine inches, ten lines, or half a Paris ell.

In Sicily, their measure is the canna, the same with that of Naples.

The Masovite measures are the cutbit, equal to one Paris foot, four inches, two lines; and the arcin, two whereof are equal to three cutbits.

The Turkish and Levant measures are the picot, containing two feet, two inches, and two lines, or three-fifths of the Paris ell.

The Chinese measure is the cobre, ten whereof are equal to three Paris ells.

In Persia, and some parts of the Indies, the guzze, of which there are two kinds; the royal guzze, called also the guzze mankelser, containing two Paris feet, ten inches, eleven lines, or four-fifths of the Paris ell; and the shorter guzze, called simply guzze, only two-thirds of the former. At Goa and Ormuz, the measure is the vara, the same with that of the Portuguese.

In Pegu, and some other parts of the Indies, the cando or candi, equal to the ell of Venice. At Goa and other parts they use a large cando, equal to seventeen Dutch ells, exceeding that of Babel and Balsora by seven-eighths per centum, and the vara by six and a half. In Siam they use the ken, short of three Paris feet by one inch. The ken contains two soks, the sok two keubs, the keub, twelve nious, or inches, the nious to be equal to eight grains of rice, i. e. to about nine lines.

At Cambodia they use the haster; in Japan the tatam; and the span on some of the coasts of Guinea.

Weld, a plant used in dyeing yellow. Whisky, a spirit obtained by distillation from corn, sugar, or molasses, though generally from the former.

Windward, in sea language denotes any thing towards that point from which the wind blows in respect of a ship.

Wind, a plant, whose leaves are used for dyeing blue.

Wool, a long, soft and curly hair, which covers the skins of several of the ruminating animals, but is especially shorn from that of the sheep.

Worm Seed, a hot, bitter seed, brought from Aleppo.

Worsted, a thread spun of wool that has been combed, and which, in the spinning, is twisted harder than ordinarily.

XYLO BALSAMUM, the wood of the tree which bears the balm of Gilead.

YAMS, the edible roots of a creeping plant common in Africa, the Indies, and the southern states.

Yarn, wool or flax spun into thread, of which they weave cloth.

ZEA, Indian Corn. The only species, the mays, or maize. The Indians in New England, and many other parts of America, had no other vegetable but maize or Indian corn for making their bread; they call it weachin; and in the United States of America there is much of the bread of the country made of this grain, not of European corn. In Italy, Germany, Spain, and Portugal, maize constitutes a great part of the food of the poor inhabitants. The ear of the maize yields a much greater quantity of grain than any English corn-ears. There are commonly about eight rows of grain in the ear, often more if the ground is good. Each of these rows contains at least 30 grains, and each of these gives much more flour than a grain of any English corn. The grains are usually either white or yellow; but sometimes they are red, bluish, greenish, or olive-colored, and sometimes striped and variegated. This sort of grain, though so essentially necessary to the natives of the place, is yet liable to many accidents. It does not ripen till the end of September; so that the rains often fall heavily upon it while on the stalk, and the birds in general peck it when soft and unripe. Nature has, to defend it from these accidents, covered it with a thick husk, which keeps off slight rains very well; but the birds, if not frightened away, often eat through it, and devour a great quantity of corn.

Zedoary, a medicinal root brought to us from China. It should be chosen fresh, sound, and hard, in large pieces, it matters not whether long or round in its form; of a smooth surface, and of the briskest smell possible; such as is friable, dusty, and worm-eaten, is to be rejected. Zedoary, distilled with common water, affords a thick and dense essential oil, on which its virtues principally depend, which soon concretes into a kind of camphire. It is a sudorific, and is used as a cordial medicine.

Zinc, a metal of a brilliant white color, with a shade of blue, and composed of a number of thin plates adhering together.

Zircon, a stone brought from Ceylon
